is hardly time enough yet to form a final judgment upon the subject. The Times argues that it has been triumphant, from the mere fact that, with but two or three exceptions, the successful candidates for the service have risen to posts of higher salaries than they enjoyed on first landing in India; but this is simply according to the regular routine—a mere matter of course. All civil servants, except in very rare instances of gross incapacity or misconduct, are passed rapidly from one good post to another and a better, in pretty regular succession; for sickness, and furloughs, and removals, and retirements, and deaths make many vacancies and changes in a service where the work increases more rapidly than the workmen, and where it sometimes happens that an officer is called upon to execute a task that is far beyond the time and strength of any single person, however active or accomplished.

Since writing the above we learn that the new Waste Lands Bill has passed into law. Three years are now to be allowed as the period in which a suit may be instituted for compensation after the sale of the land by Government.

PUNKAH-PULLING—A NEW INVENTION FOR IT.

A PUNKAH in India, hung from the ceiling of the room, is both a luxury and a necessity, but much more of the latter than of the former. In a private family in comfortable circumstances where full sets of bearers are amongst the regular domestics on the establishment, and every punkah-puller knows that his strength will not be too severely tried by too long a bout, the duty of punkah-pulling is sufficiently light and easy. But a European of small means, with, perhaps, only a single bearer on his establishment, when he calls out punkah tan (pull the punkah) sets his poor servant a task as severe as that of a galley slave. Hour after hour, while he gives coolness and refreshment to his sahib (or lord), he waxes warmer and more wearied himself with his own exertions. But his master cannot spare him. A moment's stoppage of the punkah is intolerable. The master pants for want of breath like a fish out of water. In Government offices, in churches, in merchant's counting houses, and in schools the bearer caste is not generally engaged, but some poor coolie stands or sits all day long pulling, not one punkah only, but a whole row of punkahs, all connected together by one set of ropes, so that the movement of one punkah impels all the others. This is, indeed, heavy toil for a single hand, for the longest and hottest portion of the day. Many scientific men have tried hard to save human labour on the punkah, and also to get rid of the disagreeableness of always having a servant present in a private apartment, for in some rooms the contrivance of passing the string through a tube in the wall so as to allow the servant to sit or stand outside, is in no way practicable. Some have proposed the use of a sort of steam machinery, others have tried a sort of clock work, but everything of the kind has hitherto been a failure. A correspondent of the Delhi Gazette, who dates his communication from Bareilly, says that Colonel Maxwell lately exhibited to his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, Sir Hugh Rose, at Shajehanpore, a very simple yet very scientific invention, by a private soldier of the 88th Regiment, "a decent broth of a boy," from Westport, for pulling punkahs ad libitum, and which made not only his Excellency but all the engineers present stare with astonishment. Thus human labour, if this statement be correct, is indeed minimised: for one Coolie boy can by this invention keep in motion with perfect ease at least a hundred punkahs "by means of a pendulum." It is said that by the adoption of this invention the Government may save about 20,000 rupees per annum in Coolie hire. We do not of course vouch for the truth of all this, but lay the matter before our readers as a scrap of Anglo-Indian gossip on a subject of considerable interest, and because perhaps some of our scientific friends at home may be led to think how far they could benefit their countrymen abroad by some really effective invention adapted to the same purpose.

ST. JOHN'S COLLEGE AT AGRA.

THERE is a college at Agra called St. John's College, for the instruction of Hindoo youths in the literature and science of the West. Though not strictly a missionary establishment, it is in some way connected with the Church Missionary Society in that city. It was opened in 1850 to young Hindoos of all castes. Not many months ago, however, no less than 200 Hindoo students seceded in a body from the institution in great disgust and indignation because the son of a mehter or sweeper had obtained admittance. The authorities of the school were not to be moved to sacrifice a great general principle to a foolish and ungenerous prejudice. The Bishop of Calcutta, on presiding at the last annual distribution of prizes to the students at St. John's College, very aptly quoted the words of the famous Dr. Arnold, the greatest of schoolmasters, to his dissatisfied students. "I tell you," said Arnold, "that I will not cancel any of my regulations, however unpopular, whatever may be the effect upon the interests of the school. It is not necessary that this should be a school of 300, or 200, or 100 boys; but it is necessary that this should be a school of Christian gentlemen." Dr. Arnold did not mean to characterise his school as a school of gentlemen only by wealth or birth, but of students of all ranks, who must act like gentlemen. So it was not necessary that the Agra College was to have a certain number of students, but it was necessary that a great principle of the institution should be religiously maintained. The question of how far students of the lowest caste should be admitted into a public school for Hindoos is rather a delicate one, but the Government has set an example of decision. All castes are admitted into the Calcutta University, and even the natives themselves, when they opened the Metropolitan College of Calcutta, a purely national and self-dependent institution, allowed of no distinctions of caste. At the Calcutta University a student was withdrawn, at the desire of his fellow-students, on the ground of his mother being a notorious woman of the town; but no invidious distinctions on account of caste or rank have been encouraged by the authorities. The Kishnagur College, on its first establishment, when it was deemed desirable to obtain the encouragement and support of the leading natives of the place, received amongst its pupils the son of the principal rajah of the district. The boy, or his parent for him, complained of his being obliged to sit on the same form with boys of low birth and caste, and solicited the indulgence of a separate chair. The matter was referred to the Government, and a very civil but very decisive answer in the negative was communicated to the Rajah, who had the good sense to submit to the decision and permit his son to continue his studies at the College on terms of perfect equality with his school fellows.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE CHARTERED BANK OF INDIA.—At the meeting of the Chartered Bank of India, on Wednesday last, Mr. Mitchell, M.P., in the chair, a report was laid before the proprietors, together with the statement of accounts. In moving their adoption, the chairman congratulated the meeting on the great prosperity of the bank, as shown by the profits earned, which were £70,000 in the last year, as compared with £40,000 in the preceding. The amount of deposits had doubled in the last year, and the credit of the bank was very high. Referring to the loss that had been incurred from an advance of money on opium, by the manager at Hong Kong, he said that the fraud committed resembled those frauds in this country some years ago, which consisted in the presentation of false receipts. At the same time the directors thought that there was a great want of caution on the part of the manager, and that gentleman was no longer in the employment of the company. The only mode of treating the loss was to liquidate it out of the receipts. This would reduce the amount available for dividend to £20,000, and the directors proposed that out of that sum a dividend should be declared at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum. New branches would be established at suitable places; there was one at Rangoon, there would soon be one at Kurrachee, and both branches were expected to be very profitable. In reply to a question, the chairman stated that the manager at Hong Kong, who made the advance on opium, gave securities to the amount of £5,000, which sum was secured by the Guarantee Society, but as no fraud was imputed to the manager the directors thought the £5,000 could not be obtained. Other banks had been defrauded—the Agra Bank to the amount of £65,000. In reply to further inquiries, the chairman expressed a fear that there would ultimately be a loss on the advance made to Ramchunder, the Mahratta contractor at Bombay. A dividend for the half-year, at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum, was declared; and Mr. J. Allan and Mr. A. Miller were chosen directors in the place of Captain Gordon and Mr. Jones, who retired by rotation.

THE LATE LIEUTENANT-COLONEL JAMES POOLE OATES, K.H.—This distinguished officer, who expired at his residence, Kensington, on the 4th inst., at the advanced age of 95, entered the army on March 3, 1797. For eight years he was actively engaged in the West Indies. At Cò de Fer he was severely wounded in the right side by a musket ball, and in an attack near Port au Prince in the left ankle. He served also for five years in the East Indies and Egypt, and crossed the Desert under Sir David Baird. He next attended the expedition to South America in 1807, and was subsequently throughout the whole of the Peninsular war, and was severely wounded on the head by the bursting of a shell at the battle of Talavera; again wounded at the storming of Fort Picurina; and again through the right thigh at Orthes. He obtained the rank of major March 3, 1814, and lieutenant-colonel July 22, 1830. He had received the gold medal for his services in Egypt, and the silver war medal with ten clasps.

THE NEIBUDDA COAL AND IRON COMPANY.—At the forthcoming meeting of the Neibudda Coal and Iron Company (Limited), a resolution will be submitted authorising the directors to pay interest on the share capital at the rate of 5 per cent. from the 31st inst. half-yearly, viz., on the 30th June and 31st December.

THE AGRA AND UNITED SERVICE BANK (Limited) held its annual meeting on Saturday, Mr. G. M'Pherson in the chair. The report of the directors stated that the accounts exhibited a surplus of £173,815. 17s. 5d. A very serious loss, it was stated, had been sustained by the opium frauds at Hong Kong, the whole of which the directors had written off to debit of the reserve fund, as authorised by the deed of settlement. The usual dividend and bonus, amounting to £120,000, had been paid out of the surplus referred to, and the balance transferred to credit of the reserve fund, which now stands at £192,058. 17s. 8d. A branch of the bank had been opened at Sydney, and had made satisfactory progress, a new site had also been selected for the bank in Calcutta, the former establishment being found insufficient for their extended business. The chairman congratulated the shareholders on the steady progress of the bank, as shown by the large surplus on the past year. The loss arising from the opium frauds, he said, was £61,000, the total loss sustained by the several banks amounting to £400,000. The chairman briefly explained the mode in which the frauds were effected, observing, that after due inquiry, the board acquitted the manager of any serious blame. The progress of the branch in Edinburgh during the past year was very satisfactory. Some discussion followed the speech of the chairman relative to the opium frauds, and an amendment, declaring the statement of the chairman to be unsatisfactory, was moved by Mr. E. H. Moreland, but was subsequently withdrawn, and the report unanimously adopted.

EXPORT OF SPECIE.—The steamer Delta, which left on the 12th inst., took out £68,000, viz., £52,400 in silver and £15,900 in gold, to Bombay, and £300 in silver to Aden.

THE COURT CIRCULAR, since it has come under the New Management, has more than QUADRUPLED ITS SUBSCRIPTION LIST, which is rapidly increasing with every new number. It is, therefore, an excellent medium for Advertisements intended for the upper classes.

MR. HOWARD, Surgeon-Dentist, 52, Fleet-street, has introduced an entirely new description of ARTIFICIAL TEETH, fixed without springs, wires, or ligatures. They so perfectly resemble the natural teeth as not to be distinguished from the originals by the closest observer. They will never change colour or decay, and will be found superior to any teeth ever before used. This method does not require the extraction of roots, or any painful operation, will support and preserve teeth that are loose, and is guaranteed to restore articulation and mastication. Decayed teeth stopped, and rendered sound and useful in mastication. 52, Fleet-street. At home from Ten till Five.

FIRE! THIEVES!! FIRE!!!
C. H. GRIFFITHS having purchased nearly all the best quality of Fire-proof Safes from the International Exhibition of 1862, including those made by Messrs. Perry, Chatwood, Rhodes, and other eminent makers, is enabled to offer them at half the original cost. The patented improvements of the latter maker render it an impossibility for fire to take any effect under any circumstances of time and place. In consequence of the increasing demand for these essential and valuable repositories, which no house of business, or, indeed, private house (where plate, books, and documents are kept) should be without, in these hazardous and dangerous times, C. H. G. has taken additional premises, 3, Pentonville-road, opposite the Angel, Islington, where he also intends to keep a variety of Second-hand Safes by those eminent large makers, Milner, Price, Mordan, &c., at half the price of new. Sketches, with prices, free by post.
23, Cannon-street West, St. Paul's, London; and opposite the Angel, Islington.

BY DAVID THOMAS ANSTED, M.A., F.R.S., &c.

AND

ROBERT GORDON LATHAM, M.A., M.D., F.R.S., &c.

The Illustrations drawn on Wood expressly for the Work, by PAUL J. NATTEL, Member of the London Society of Painters in Water Colours.

"The 'Channel Islands' is an excellent book of its class—well conceived, well written, well illustrated, well printed. It is the produce of many hands, and every hand a good one. Nearly every thing which a man can desire to know about Jersey, Guernsey, Alderney, and Sark—about their history, Geography, and natural history—Professor Ansted and Dr. Latham have contrived to tell. Altogether the contents of the volume are as varied and interesting as a well-sustained drama; and to this drama no more graceful and picturesque scenery could have been furnished than we find in the illustrations so profusely given by artists worthy of the subject and equal to their worth—Paul Nattel and M. Peter Le Lièvre. The result is not a merely handsome volume of the old 'Keepsake' style, made to sell and be looked at, but a book of rare merit and value, made for instruction and delight, to be read with pleasure and to be referred to with profit."—Athenaeum, Nov. 15, 1862.

ALLEN'S

MAPS OF INDIA & CHINA.

MAP of INDIA; showing the British Territories subdivided into Collectories, and the position and boundary of each Native State; chiefly compiled from Trigonometrical Surveys, executed by order of the Honourable Court of Directors of the East India Company. On six sheets—Size, 5 ft. 6 in. high; 5 ft. 8 in. wide. £2; or, on cloth, in a case, £2. 12s. 6d.; or, with rollers and varnished, £3. 3s.

The object kept in view in compiling this map has been to render it available to the greatest possible extent for popular use. For this purpose the names of all stations, civil and military, are inserted, as well as those of all towns and places of note likely to be looked for. To make clear the subdivisions of the whole of the country, both British and Native, the limits of the various districts and collectories, with their names, are distinctly indicated. The railways and telegraphs are laid down, and the trunk roads conspicuously coloured. The newly-acquired district in Burmah is included. To avoid, however, the confusion consequent upon over-crowding, and make the map clear and easy for reference, the names of many small villages, and places of no present importance, have been omitted, and thus a very wide measure of comprehensiveness has been attained, while needless diffuseness has been avoided.

A GENERAL MAP of INDIA; compiled chiefly from Surveys executed by order of the Honourable East India Company, with the railways and telegraphs. On six sheets—Size, 5 ft. 3 in. wide; 5 ft. 4 in. high. £2; or, on cloth, in a case, £2. 12s. 6d.; or, with rollers and varnished, £3. 3s.

MAP of the ROUTES in INDIA; with Tables of Distances between the principal Towns and Military Stations. On one sheet—Size 2 ft. 3 in. wide; 2 ft. 9 in. high. 9s.; or, on cloth, in a case, 12s.

In this map are given the whole of the military and civil stations, together with the principal towns, the villages being omitted, so as to make the stations more prominent. The colouring defines the boundaries of the three Presidencies and shows also the railways and telegraphs.

MAP of INDIA and CHINA, BURMAH, SIAM, the MALAY PENINSULA, and the EMPIRE of ANAM. On two sheets—Size, 4 ft. 3 in. wide; 3 ft. 4 in. high. 16s.; or, on cloth, in a case, £1. 5s.

MAP of AFGHANISTAN, and the ADJACENT COUNTRIES. On one sheet—Size 2 ft. 3 in. wide; 2 ft. 9 in. high. 9s.; or, on cloth, in a case, 12s.

MAP of CHINA, from the most Authentic Sources of Information. One large sheet—Size, 2 ft. 7 in. wide; 2 ft. 2 in. high. 8s.; or, on cloth, in a case, 11s.

A MAP of the WESTERN PROVINCES of HINDOOSTAN, the PUNJAB, CAMBOL, SINDE, BHAWULPORE, &c., including all the States between Candahar and Allahabad. On four sheets—Size, 4 ft. 4 in. wide; 4 ft. 2 in. high. 30s.; or, on cloth, in a case, £2; rollers, and varnished, £2. 10s.

MAP of ARABIA, from all the most recent Authorities, by order of the Court of Directors of the East India Company. Size, 3 ft. 3 in. high; 4 ft. 3 in. wide. On cloth, in a case, £1. 5s.

HAND-BOOK to the MAPS of INDIA, giving the Latitude and Longitude of all places of note. By Major H. V. STEPHEN, late of Bengal Army Revenue Survey Department. In 18mo. bound, price 5s.

MAP of INDIA; from the most recent Authorities, showing the railways and telegraphs. On two sheets—Size, 2 ft. 10 in. wide; 3 ft. 3 in. high. 16s.; or, on cloth, in a case, £1. 1s.

MAP of the STEAM COMMUNICATION and OVERLAND ROUTES between ENGLAND, INDIA, CHINA, and AUSTRALIA. In a case, 14s.; on rollers, and varnished, 18s.

London: WM. H. ALLEN and Co., 13, Waterloo-place, S.W.

CHILDREN'S WORM TABLETS

(KEATING'S).—The recently discovered unfailing remedy for Worm disorders in Children and Adults has now been concentrated in the form of a purely Vegetable Sweetment. The Tablet is eagerly taken by children, and one to three given once or twice a week will effect a safe and certain cure.

Prepared and sold in Tins of various sizes by THOMAS KEATING, Chemist, &c., 79, St. Paul's Churchyard, London, E.C., and Retail by all Druggists and Patent Medicine Vendors in the World.

Observe the words "KEATING'S WORM TABLETS" are engraved on the Government Stamp of each Tin, without which none are genuine.

CORYZINE.—This invaluable, non-sternu-tative POWDER, employed like Snuff, affords instantaneous relief in incipient cases of cold, Influenza or Coryza, the sense of suffocation with excessive secretion supervening, being in both cases effectually removed. To those subject to this distressing complaint it is confidently recommended as a sure remedy.

Sold in Boxes at 1s. 1d. and 2s. 9d.; post free, 1s. 3d. and 3s. 1d. in stamps, by MARSHALL and MELLIN, English and Foreign Chemists, 16, Tichborne-street, opposite the County Fire Office, Regent-street.

THE BEAUTIES of the EAST.—All that can preserve and enhance the charms of woman, youth, and beauty.—Madame RACHEL begs leave to inform the nobility, aristocracy, and her lady patrons, that she has just received a costly consignment of ARABIAN PREPARATIONS, which render the hair, teeth, and complexion beautiful beyond comparison; and the choicest Arabian perfumes, the simile of which was presented in golden vases by the ladies of Paris to the Empress Eugénie, and have gained for her the patronage of royalty. Can be selected at, or forwarded from, her Drawing-room Saloon, 47a, New Bond-street.

RUPTURES.—BY ROYAL LETTERS PATENT.

WHITE'S MOC-MAIN LEVER TRUSS

is allowed by upwards of two hundred medical gentlemen to be the most effective invention in the curative treatment of HERNIA. The use of a steel spring, so harmful in its effects, is here avoided, a soft bandage being worn round the body, while the requisite resisting power is supplied by the MOC-MAIN PAD and PATENT LEVER, fitting with so much ease and elegance that it cannot be detected, and may be worn during sleep. A descriptive circular may be had, and the Truss (which cannot fail to fit), forwarded by post, on the circumference of the body two inches below the hips being sent to the manufacturer.

Mr. JOHN WHITE, 228, Piccadilly, London.

ELASTIC STOCKINGS, KNEE CAPS, &c., &c.—VARICOSE VEINS, and all cases of WEAKNESS and SWELLING of the LEGS, SPRAINS, &c.—They are porous, light in texture, and inexpensive, and are drawn on like an ordinary stocking. Price 4s. 6d., 7s. 6d., 10s., and 16s. each. Postage 6d.

JOHN WHITE, Manufacturer, 228, Piccadilly, London.

KEEP AWAY THE DOCTOR is an old saying. People follow the advice, and ensure a good state of health by the simple and cheap process of taking PARR'S LIFE PILLS, which may be used with confidence in all cases of sick headache, indigestion, bilious, liver, and stomach complaints, habitous nervousness, nervous affections, &c. In most cases the sensation of illness vanishes after two or three pills have been taken. May be obtained of any medicine vendor, in boxes, 1s. 1d., 2s. 9d., and in family packets 11s. each.

CHUTNIES and INDIAN CONDIMENTS.

PAYNE and Co., BELATEE BUNGALOW, CALCUTTA, beg to inform their Indian constituents and the public that their

SARSAPARILLA.

WILKINSON'S (late BRIDGES)

ESSENCE OF FLUID EXTRACT OF RED JAMAICA SARSAPARILLA is appreciated for its Purity, and marked superiority, daily prescribed by the Faculty for Impurities of the Blood, Affections of the Liver, Constitutional Debility, Attenuation of Body, as an Alterative Medicine at the Changes of the Seasons, and for freeing the system from the effects of Mercury.

In India and the Colonies it is extensively used to prevent taking complaints incident to Tropical Climates, and as a renovator of the system after Sickness is invaluable.

"A superior preparation, that may always be relied on."—Sir Astley Cooper.

"We are in every respect satisfied with it."—Lancet.

"We recommend your Sarsaparilla as the best."—Medical Review.

"I latterly, in consequence of much debility, &c., subsequent to Cholera, I have freely used 'Bridges' Sarsaparilla' myself, with complete benefit and success."—J. Poett, F.R.C.S.

Sold in pints, half-pints, and quarter-pints. One pint is equal to eight pints of the ordinary preparation.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.—The public are cautioned against cheap preparations of Sarsaparilla, which, instead of being what they profess to be, are nothing but a decoction of common herbs, sweetened with molasses, and flavoured with American Winter Green. The genuine has "Thos. Wilkinson (late Bridges and Co.), 270, Regent-street, London," engraved on each bottle.

AGREEABLE SEDLITZ POWDER in one bottle, protected by a case with measure and spoon included. This preparation is highly recommended, not only as a Mild Aperient, but to allay Fever, Thirst, &c.

AROMATIC TINCTURE of QUINODINE for the prevention of Fever, intermittent or Remittent Ague, and other effects of Malaria. No person exposed to the influence of or predisposing cause of Fevers should be without it, for if taken in small doses daily the system will become so thoroughly impregnated with its principles as to be rendered proof against all attacks of Contagion or Malaria. Sold in pints, half-pints, and quarter-pints.

The above articles prepared only by Thos. Wilkinson (late Bridges and Co.), 270, Regent-street, London, W.

To prevent spurious imitations, please to observe that the words "KEATING'S COUGH LOZENGES" are engraved on the Government Stamp of each Box, without which none are genuine.

KEATING'S COUGH LOZENGES.

JUDGED BY THE IMMENSE DEMAND, this UNIVERSAL REMEDY now stands the first in public favour and confidence; this result has been acquired by the test of fifty years' experience. These Lozenges may be found on sale in every British Colony, and throughout India and China they have been highly esteemed wherever introduced.

For COUGHS, ASTHMA, and all affections of the Throat and Chest, they are the most agreeable and efficacious remedy.

Prepared and sold in Boxes, Tins, and Bottles of various sizes by THOMAS KEATING, Chemist, &c., 79, St. Paul's Churchyard, London. Sold retail by all Druggists and Patent Medicine Vendors in the World.

PRICHARD'S AROMATIC STEEL PILLS

stand unequalled for restoring vigour to weak and relaxed constitutions, and have been proved to be the best medicine ever offered to the public. To those who are suffering from languor and exhaustion occasioned by a residence in hot climates, these Pills will be found particularly beneficial. They give energy to the muscles and nerves strength to the stomach, and completely renovate the system, so that the patient is astonished at the effects produced.

Prepared by W. PRICHARD, Apothecary, 65, Charing-cross, London. In boxes 1s. 1d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., and 11s. May be had of all Medicine Vendors.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT and PILLS.—

Indisputable remedies for bad legs, old wounds, sores and ulcers. If used according to direction given with them, there is no wound, bad leg, ulcerous sore, or bad breast, however obstinate or long standing, but will yield to their healing and curative properties. Numbers of persons who have been patients in several of the large hospitals, and under the care of eminent surgeons without deriving the slightest benefit, have been thoroughly cured by Holloway's Ointment and Pills. For glandular swellings, tumours, scurvy, and diseases of the skin, there is no medicine that can be used with so good an effect. In fact, in the worst forms of disease dependent upon the condition of the blood, these medicines are irresistible.

Prepared by W. PRICHARD, Apothecary, 65, Charing-cross, London. In boxes 1s. 1d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., and 11s. May be had of all Medicine Vendors.

THE POLISH CAPTIVITY:

An Account of the present Position and Prospects of the Poles in the Kingdom of Poland, and in the Polish Provinces of Austria, Prussia, and Russia.

By H. SUTHERLAND EDWARDS, Author of "Russians at Home."

"A portion of this book on Poland by Mr. Sutherland Edwards has already appeared in our columns, though apparently such a small portion that it is substantially a new as well as a highly opportune production."—The Times, April 2, 1863.

"Mr. Sutherland Edwards not only understands his subject, but what is far more important and uncommon, his readers. He tells his audience precisely the facts which they are desirous to know. The 'Polish Captivity' is full of light but suggestive sketches, pièces justificatives of historic value, national songs and stories, descriptions of Polish towns, Polish notabilities, and Polish women, and is, besides, a book an English lady might read with twice the ease of Mr. Trollope's latest novel."—Spectator, March 29, 1863.

"The book in which Mr. Sutherland Edwards has depicted the 'Polish Captivity' would have been valuable at any time, but the opportuneness of its arrival so enhances its merits, that it is certain to command a greater than ordinary success. It is a subject which few writers are competent to deal with, but Mr. Edwards possesses special qualifications for the task. Personal experience has made him well acquainted with Poland and the Poles; the interest he takes in their fortunes has led him to study the question of their wrongs with zeal and assiduity, and his acquaintance with Slavonic languages enables him to make use of stores of information which are unserviceable to the ordinary student. Consequently, he is entitled to speak with authority, and his opinions on the condition, feelings, and prospects of the various nations which he describes deserve a very different hearing from that which he should give to the crude theories formed by a careless traveller passing hastily through an unfamiliar land."—London Review, March 28, 1863.

"Mr. Sutherland Edwards visited Poland in the interval between the Warsaw massacre and the breaking out of the insurrection. What he saw he has described simply, but forcibly. Few English writers are so likely as he to form a correct judgment on any matter connected with Russia or Poland. His acquaintance with each of these countries, its people, its language, and its literature, gives him advantages which few other travellers possess. In wandering with him about the streets of Warsaw, we feel that we are in the hands of a trustworthy guide, one who can tell us what the people are chattering about, and who can explain the written mysteries which, under the veil of an unknown tongue, elude our baffled eyes. Mr. Edwards's book will be read with deep interest. It is well written, and the narratives are well constructed."—Athenaeum, March 21, 1863.

MAILS TO INDIA.

Mails to India and China, via Marseilles, are despatched from London as follows, viz.:—Those for Bombay packets, on the evening of the 3rd and 14th of each month; and those for Calcutta packets (including mails for Ceylon, Madras, and China), on the evenings of the 10th and 26th of each month. When any of these dates falls on a Sunday, the mails are made up on the following evening.

Letters and Newspapers can be forwarded to any part of India, via Bombay and Marseilles, and in most cases will reach their destination some days sooner than if despatched by the following Calcutta mail. The Bombay mails via Southampton, however, are no longer available for the transmission of Letters or Newspapers to the Madras Presidency.

Mails for the Mediterranean and all parts of India and China, except the Bombay Presidency, are despatched via Southampton on the mornings of the 4th and 20th, or, when either of these dates falls on Sunday, upon the previous evening.

Mails for the Mediterranean, the Presidency of Bombay, and Upper or North-West Provinces of Bengal and China, are despatched via Southampton on the 12th and 27th of the month, except when these dates fall on Sunday, in which case they are forwarded on the previous evening.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

His Excellency the Viceroy was at Roorkee on the 16th of March. He was expected to reach Umballah on the 27th. He was still "astonishing the natives" with the magnificence of his Royal progress. Comments, however, had been made by both natives and Europeans upon his Excellency's white hat or sola topee, which is deemed hardly befitting so dignified a potentate on occasions of great public display. As Lord Elgin knows that it is with his head that he is to rule 180 millions of men, he thinks it incumbent upon him to guard it from sun-stroke and brain fever, even at the sacrifice of his grandeur of aspect. He is no convert to the doctrine now advanced by certain correspondents in the Calcutta papers and confirmed by editorial comment, that exposure to the sun's rays in India is a very sanitary process.

Feroze Shah, a grandson of the late King of Delhi, has just been captured. We do not know what is to be done with him. Lord Elgin has been giving small monthly allowances to some of the late King of Delhi's connections, who, as we learn, were in a state of utter destitution.

Mr. E. H. Lushington is to be Financial Secretary, and the Honourable A. Eden to be Secretary to the Bengal Government.

Sir Charles Trevelyan is in his glory. There are twenty millions sterling in the Indian Treasuries, and the balances exhibit an increase of two millions upon Mr. Laing's Budget of April last. The prices of Government paper are rising rapidly. What will Sir Charles do with his surplus? That is the question. Many are pressing him to abolish the income-tax; but he has grown wary and diplomatic, and keeps his own secrets. In these respects he is quite an altered man. He is no longer hot-headed, impulsive, and communicative.

There has been some rather severe fighting in the Jynteah hills. Two of our officers were severely wounded; but the rebels have since assumed an humbler demeanour, and seem sick of the struggle.

In consequence of the late Burmese Treaty the King of Burmah has reduced the export duty on timber from 25 to 10 per cent., and the duty on all other articles from 12 to 6 per cent.

Mrs. Mason, the American female missionary, now with the Burmese and Karens, has shocked all her old Christian associates as much as Dr. Colenso has shocked his brother Bishops, by preaching not what she was commissioned to preach, but something directly contrary to it. She teaches the Karens a certain system of mystic symbols by which, without any change of creed or conduct, all religionists, she says, may win the favour of Heaven—thus striking at the root of Christianity. Not content with misleading these people in religion, she is fostering in them political aspirations anything but favourable to British influence.

The head quarters of the Bombay Army were established at Mahabuleshwur on the 14th of March.

The engineers engaged in the construction of the Eastern Bengal Railway, on the opening of that line to Kooshteah, were gratified with the acknowledgment of the Government of India of the valuable services they had rendered to the country by their industry and skill.

A Bill has been introduced into the Bombay Council worthy of notice; viz., a Bill for taking a census of the Bombay presidency. By clause II. the duties of the requisite officials are designated:—Any officer or officers appointed to superintend any such enumeration shall, in accordance with such instructions as may be communicated to him or them, from the Government of Bombay, appoint such enumerators, form such enumeration districts, and make such arrangements generally as may to him or them appear necessary for the purposes of such enumeration. Attempts at a computation of the population of Bombay have been made at several times from A.D. 1716, when the inhabitants were roughly estimated at 16,000, down to 1849 and 1851, when the numbers had increased to upwards of half-a-million. But little confidence, however, can be placed in any of these estimates; even the last and most carefully planned scheme of enumeration having failed from several causes, which are only to be obviated by an Act settling the principle upon which the census is to proceed, and enforcing, by the requisite sanctions, promptness and good faith in furnishing the separate returns, on the correctness of which the value of the general results must almost wholly depend.

In obedience to a rule laid down and published in Calcutta General Orders, no officer who had held permanent staff employ for less than a year on the 18th of February, 1861, is to be admitted to the Staff Corps until he shall have passed the tests, and have completed the period of probation prescribed, and which will shortly be issued.

The Englishman of Calcutta has re-printed bodily, as a supplement to the paper, Mr.

Samuel Laing's pamphlet, entitled, "England's Mission in the East." This is a compliment to Mr. Laing, but if his copyright is of any value, the re-print is, in one way, an injury to him. However, we doubt not that Mr. Laing thinks a great deal more of the good of India and of his own reputation than of any little advantage or injury to his own pocket.

The Regiment of Punjabees, one thousand strong, raised by Major Macmullen, of the Indian Army, for service under the Ceylon Government, is on the march to Calcutta from Jullunder. The regiment has five native officers, one sergeant-major, ten sergeants, and the same number of corporals.

To obviate inconvenience, discomfort, and even molestation, to which travellers on the frontier have occasionally been subject, British subjects travelling, or residing in Persia, &c., or intending to proceed into foreign territory west of the Indus, are officially recommended to provide themselves with passports at the several presidencies.

Mr. George Plunkett, the late manager of the Bank of Kurrachee, who committed suicide on the 4th, by swallowing a large dose of prussic acid, seems to have been driven to that act partly, perhaps, by a consideration of the confused state of the bank accounts, and partly by the pressure of a personal liability for £800, which he was unable to meet, and which fell due on the day of his death.

We reported in our last that there were symptoms of discontent in Oude, and now we hear of certain indications of a similar character in other quarters. Advices from Nepal inform us of serious disturbances apprehended in Thibet. The exiled Delai Lama threatens the country with a strong force. The Sethea Rajee has made the necessary preparations to meet him, and has solicited the aid of the Nepaulese Durbar. The Khoonds of Thoor-mool in the hill tracts of Orissa lately took the alarm on hearing that their country was to be surveyed by British officers. They regarded it as the first step towards the annexation of their country and the destruction of their religion. The surveying party were accompanied by troops as a precaution against any sudden rising, but an amicable meeting with their chiefs pacified the apprehensions of these demi-savages. The natives of the Andamans have been troublesome of late, and two of them murdered an English sailor. The fakeer at Cawnpore, who represented himself to be a representative of Nana Peishwa, has been arrested on a charge of sedition. Seditious papers were found upon his person. He gave out that he was authorized to enlist troops. Three other rascals of the same description have been apprehended, and their photograph likenesses were sent to the nearest magistrate.

Our home obituary records the deaths of Lieutenant-general W. H. Hewitt, of the Bengal Army, at the age of seventy-two, and of Major G. Girdlestone, Madras Staff Corps.

The Dinapore scandals are to be carried before the High Court of Calcutta. Colonel Burney was accused by Captain H. Eyre of having submitted in a cowardly manner to personal insults. Captain Eyre subsequently wished to compromise the matter; but as he declined to give a public retraction and apology, the colonel stopped the captain in Calcutta as he was about to start for England. Damages are laid at Rs. 50,000.

An agricultural exhibition for Bengal to take place in January next. It is believed that an annual "show" of the kind would tend materially to promote good agriculture in the provinces, and soon become self-supporting.

Two officers of H.M.'s 43rd L.I. in Fort William have been placed under arrest on serious charges. It is expected that they must undergo a court-martial or retire from the service, should they be permitted to do so. Another officer in the Fort is under arrest for striking a superior officer.

Lieut.-colonel Fenwick, commandant of H.H.'s 69th regiment, died of cholera in Fort St. George a few days before the mail left. His only child died a day or two before him of the same terrible disease, which is prevailing to a great extent at Madras.

Colonel H. Tombs, C.B., V.C., is to be appointed to the command of the Agra brigade.

The loss of the late Secretary of War has been very severely felt. Who is to supply his place? At present the two candidates most talked of are Earl de Grey and Ripon and Mr. Cardwell. The first seems to have the best chance.

Lord Dalhousie, we hear, has resigned his seat in the Indian army commission of which he was president. Lord Kingsdown will be in the commission.

BENGAL.

SIR CHARLES WOOD'S INDIAN POLICY.

A public meeting of the native inhabitants of Calcutta was held at the hall of the British Indian Association on Saturday, March 7. The meeting, which was very numerously attended, included the most influential members of the native community. On the motion of Baboo Ghose, Rajah Radhakaut Bahadur took the chair, and in opening the business, after some preliminary observations, proceeded to say:—Contradictory opinions have been expressed with reference to the present system of guiding and controlling the Government of India by properly constituted responsible authority in England; but this system has had its fair trial, and we are convinced of its utility and adaptation to the present circumstances of India by tangible proofs of the benefits we have derived from it; they are patent to all—they consist of the late changes and reforms, and the inauguration of a sound policy in almost every department of Indian administration. The most distinguishing trait which characterises the career of her Majesty's present Secretary of State for India, is the adoption of that high standard of polity and the practical recognition of that broad principle of justice which requires that a people should be governed by equal laws—a principle which was enunciated in the late Royal proclamation, and which for ages to come and for ever ought to be the leading star of all statesmen to whose charge may be entrusted the destinies of our country. Sir Charles Wood has indeed shown that he abhors graduating justice according to ethnological and sectarian doctrines; and has proved by his acts, and lately by his celebrated despatches to his Excellency the Viceroy, that her Majesty's words are not intended to be a mere echo and sound, but a solid pledge to be honestly and strictly acted upon. This wise and beneficent policy of this minister cannot be described in better terms than in his own words when addressing his Halifax constituents:—"His object," he says, "has been to govern India for the good of the greatest number—of the 180 millions consigned to the care of England." To this policy he has faithfully and fearlessly adhered, and though storms of fury and passion may rage against it for a time, it will stand unshaken, because it is founded on an immutable principle of nature. For this sound policy of Sir Charles Wood, for the salutary effects of his administration, and for his special attention to the elevation of native character, for his just recognition of the rights and privileges of the native population and promotion of the interests of native princes, are we deeply indebted to him, and it is our sacred duty to give expression to our feelings of profound gratitude, and to our hope and confidence in his administration. I deem it meet to mention here that it has been one of the special duties of our society, the British Indian Association, during the last twelve years of its existence, and of similar societies in different parts of India, to keep the native population at large informed of the general features of the Indian Government by vernacular translations of their proceedings, and by other means, and to invite discussions on questions connected with the welfare of our country. The reading class of the millions of India, therefore, fully appreciate the policy of Sir Charles Wood, and will find their sentiments echoed by their brethren who have assembled in this hall. Rajah Kalikrishna moved the first resolution. He said:—Gentlemen,—We have met here to-day to discharge a loyal and pleasing duty—namely, that of expressing our gratitude to Sir Charles Wood, her Majesty's Secretary of State for India, for his many and eminent services in furtherance of our best and dearest interests. My friends who will follow me will, I am confident, do full justice to the subject. One thing I will say, that, under the auspices of his rule, our countrymen have been admitted into the Council Chamber, and raised to the bench of the High Court, places which were hitherto completely shut against natives. Other high personages, doubtless, did much in opening honourable offices to our countrymen, but to Sir Charles Wood is due the credit of giving the natives of the country an active share in legislation and administration. The admission of native gentlemen into the Council Chamber, I need hardly say, will, if it has not already done so, enable our rulers to know the feelings and wishes of the people at large on projects of law adopted for their welfare. These and other measures of the Indian Minister have impressed every native of India with a deep sense of the interest which the authorities in England take in the advancement of the good of this country. With regard to the great question of carrying on the Queen's Government in India, I will content myself by saying that, while we have every confidence in the justice and impartiality of the local governments, we must at the same time admit that it is essential to the good government of India that the chief control over all matters of principle involving questions of Imperial policy should rest in England. With these few words I beg to move the following resolution:—

"1. That this meeting desires to record its high sense of respect and gratitude for the wise and beneficent policy which has distinguished the administration and control of Indian affairs by the Right Hon. Sir Charles Wood—a policy which has nobly sustained the authority and dignity of her Majesty's Government in her Indian dominions; which has strengthened by new bonds of attachment the confidence and sympathy of the princes and chiefs of the country; which has, above all, steadily sought to govern the empire in consonance with justice and the true interests of its teeming millions."

Baboo Romannath Tagore, in seconding the resolution, said:—It would be an everlasting reproach on our national character were we to allow this opportunity to pass away without expressing our profound respect and gratitude to Sir Charles Wood for his wise and beneficent administration and control of this great empire. Every measure that has emanated from him has had the effect of ameliorating the moral and political condition of the people of this country. From him the claims of Europeans and natives have received equal consideration. I grieve to say that the proceedings of certain parties in England show that they want India to be governed, not for India, not for the benefit of its 180 millions; but for the gratification of their own selfish views. Sir Charles Wood, however, would not stoop to such petty consideration—would not sacrifice truth, justice, and humanity for the sake of temporary popularity, and accordingly these selfish and interested agitators are up in arms against him. They are moving heaven and earth to lower and injure Sir Charles Wood and his Government. But, sir, what are the weapons of warfare of these agitators? Mis-statement, mystification, and misrepresentation. But in waging the war they are not warring with Sir Charles Wood alone, but with the 180,000,000 of her Majesty's loyal subjects in India. Sir, you may rest assured Sir Charles Wood will firmly maintain his policy, based as it is on truth and justice, be the consequence what it may. The British public, honest and unsophisticated Englishmen, when they hear the whole tale, will, no doubt—for I have every confidence in their sense of justice—support Sir Charles for his just and noble policy. A great deal has been said, sir, both here and in England, against Sir Charles Wood for disallowing the Criminal Contract Bill. Every honest man who loves justice and fair play will admit that Sir Charles Wood is right. How could he ratify a law the ostensible object of which was to facilitate the summary adjustment of accounts between planters and ryots, but the real object of which was to reduce the ryot to a state of complete serfage? As a freeman Sir Charles Wood must hate slavery, and what is more, as a member of the great British nation, which spent twenty crores of money to emancipate the slaves in the West Indies, he could not be expected to support a slave law. It has been urged that a penal law exists to punish servants and artisans for breach of contract, but the case of the ryot is different from theirs. The planter, in giving advance to the ryot to grow indigo and cotton, knows full well that it could not be grown by labour alone. Much depends upon the weather; and if the ryot fails to fulfil his contract from Providential occurrences, or other contingencies, is it right or reasonable to punish him criminally for circumstances over which he has no control? I sincerely and earnestly hope and trust that Parliament will take all these circumstances into consideration, and seal with its approbation the proceedings of Sir Charles in respect to this highly objectionable measure.

The second resolution was moved by Baboo Coomarr Tagore, as follows:—

"That this meeting, while emphatically affirming the principle that India must to a certain extent be governed in India, and that the local Governments should enjoy the utmost latitude in their actions, is at the same time of opinion that the chief control, as regards all great questions of principle, should, as now, vest in her Majesty's Government in England, who, divested of all local prejudices and influences, are the best fitted to maintain the high and impartial character of her Majesty's policy for the Indian Empire."

In moving the resolution, he observed: Sir, the great merit of Sir Charles Wood's administration has been the even-handed justice he has meted out to Christians, Hindoos, and Mahomedans alike. He has made no distinction of race, creed, or colour. The position of our country is peculiar. The real rulers of the empire are 10,000 miles away. We cannot approach the Throne, personally make known to them our grievances and wants, or move them to pity by tears or sighs. The distant Governor must therefore judge from report and hearsay, and he could not select a more just and honourable principle of action than equal justice to all committed to his care. It argued, indeed, a high degree of moral courage in Sir Charles Wood to have risen above the clamours of his countrymen, to have disregarded their threats and calumnies, in order to steadily persevere in the right path. Then look to the great measures of Sir Charles Wood. Could any native of India, who held a cotta of land, help feeling grateful to Sir Charles Wood for decreeing the permanent settlement for all India—a measure which had been contemplated since the days of Lord Wellesley, but for the last half-century without success? As regards the sale and settlement of waste lands, however men may oppose his modifications, they must confess that they are based on just and liberal principles. As to the present meeting, it may not do him any service, but it will give him the satisfaction to know that his policy and administration are appreciated by the millions in India.

Baboo Kissory Chand Mitra seconded the resolution. He said: I conceive that much greater breadth of views and liberality of principle as to the natives of this country exist in England than prevail with the governing classes in India. If you, sir, who have witnessed so many changes, were to look back at the past history of British rule in the East, you would see that most of the liberal institutions we possess, and the inestimable privileges we enjoy, have emanated from the British Legislature and the British Government. The Supreme Court and its successor, the High Court, the admission of natives to the grand jury, the Legislative Councils and the introduction of the native element into those councils, the appointment of natives to the judgeships of the highest tribunals of the country, and the principle of equality before the law, are distinctly traceable to the Acts of Parliament, and every discussion in that great assembly evokes most generous sentiments towards us. Referring to the last-mentioned concession, viz., the equality before the law, I beg to remind you that the renewal of the charter in 1833 first brought the subject under the consideration of Parliament. Then the presentation of the memorial of the British subjects of Calcutta for the repeal of Act XI. of 1836, rendering them amenable to the jurisdiction of the civil courts in the Mofussil, gave rise to an animated and exhaustive discussion on it. On both those occasions Parliament repudiated the doctrine that it was the privilege of Englishmen to carry their laws with them wherever they go; and it came to the decision that the same power that legislated for the Hindoo should legislate for the European—(loud cheers). This decision afterwards directed the Royal commission for the framing of the penal code and the code of criminal procedure. The commissioners were men whose learning, experience, and talent entitle their opinions to the highest consideration—men thoroughly acquainted with the constitutional and legal rights of British-born subjects, and who had nothing to gain by abrogating any of those rights. Yet such men ignored the claim of exemption, and officially declared that "no person whatever shall, by reason of birth or by reason of descent, be in any criminal proceeding whatever exempted from the jurisdiction of any of the criminal courts." That this measure, which sweeps away the invidious and unjust distinction between British born subjects and the other classes of Queen's subjects in India, was not adopted by the Legislature of India in its integrity is not the fault of England—(cheers). I readily admit that, to a certain extent, India must be governed in India. It is a necessity of her geographical as well as her political situation. I am for giving the widest latitude to the local Governments, and would deprecate all interference in small matters, even when they are wrong. It is notorious that the opinions of all men are greatly modified by what they hear daily and hourly from those around them. Nothing is more common (speaking in a European point of view) than for persons moving in the same grades of society to imbibe the opinions as well as the champagne of each other. Sophisms become, so to speak, established truisms by dint of reiteration. Doctrines incompatible with reason and morality are received as parts of the social and political code by being eternally dinned into your ears. Repelled at first, tolerated next, they become at last settled convictions. The Government of India are exposed to this influence quite as much as private individuals. Now, then, I have a right to infer that on questions of progress—I mean in the application of liberal principles to Government, such as the entrusting the natives with a large share in the administration of their country, and the recognition and protection of the rights of the masses—more spontaneous and effective movement may be expected from statesmen in England than from the governing classes in India. We are all agreed that the Viceroy and Governor-General should be an autocrat, because the British Indian empire is essentially an autocracy. The due performance of the functions of his exalted office requires that his movements should not be hampered. But inasmuch as it is necessary to entrust his Excellency with large despotic powers, it is repugnant to justice and sound policy to do so without subjecting the acts of his Government to the supervision of England. The necessity and importance of this supervision are inculcated in the resolution now submitted for your adoption. As to the policy of Sir Charles Wood, I believe it is founded, as its author himself recently declared to his constituents at Halifax, on the greatest good of the greatest number. All honour to the man who has pursued it regardless of the clamours of faction and the cries of party! All honour to the man who, having seen what is right, has striven to act up to it through good report and evil report, braving every obloquy, and sacrificing his popularity with his own countrymen! The policy of Sir Charles Wood affords the most signal illustration of the beneficial effects of the exercise of the controlling power of England over Indian affairs. His despatches to the Indian Government regarding the Breaches of Contract Bill, the sale of waste lands, and the extension of the permanent settlement, not to speak of the memorable educational scheme of 1854, will remain monuments of an enlightened statesmanship. By his rejection of the Contract Bill Sir Charles Wood has saved the country from cruel oppression. I cheerfully admit that the settlement of Europeans in the Mofussil as cultivators and capitalists is of the greatest possible benefit to our country, and I should wish to see Government promote and foster such settlement. But I conceive that the enactment of the contract law is not the best way to attain that end. In truth, it is the worst possible way; for the assimilation of what is a civil to a criminal offence, instead of inviting, will repel contracts. The prominent feature of the administration of Sir Charles Wood has been the management of the affairs of this vast empire in perfect correspondence with the views and resolutions of the Queen, as embodied in her Majesty's gracious proclamation. It is this which constitutes its chief merit, and has inspired the gratitude of the nation which this meeting so fitly represents. The Manchester Chamber of Commerce have raised a cry against a Minister who has refused to concede its preposterous demands. But Sir Charles knows that his business is not with Manchester, but with India. His sphere is not a narrow one, bounded by the walls of Cottonopolis, but a wide one, extending from the Himalayas to Cape Comorin, and peopled with one hundred and eighty millions of human beings. Mr. Hugh Mason, a member of the Chamber, has been pleased to declare that India means cotton, and cotton means India. But Sir Charles Wood believes that cotton, though a good thing, and which might be grown here, not by Government, but by private enterprise, is not the highest good of India. Sir Charles Wood believes—and this meeting is a living proof that the people of this country share in that belief—that India means good government, enlightened legislation, and the moral and mental elevation of its myriad millions—(loud cheers).

The resolution having been unanimously carried,

Cowar Suttayanund Ghosal moved that the following address be forwarded to the Right Hon. Sir Charles Wood, her Majesty's Secretary of State for India:—

"Right Hon. Sir,—We, the native inhabitants of Bengal, in public meeting assembled, beg leave to approach you with this address, expressive of our deep sense of respect and gratitude for the wise and beneficent policy which has distinguished your administration and control of Indian affairs.

"The remarkable feature of your administration, one that has inspired the natives of India with a lively feeling of thankfulness, hope, and confidence, has been the direction of Indian affairs in conformity with the noble behests and wishes of her gracious Majesty contained in the Royal proclamation.

"Your warm and steady support of the local Governments in the enactment of equal laws for, and the administration of equal justice among, all classes of her Majesty's Indian subjects, in the uprooting of administrative abuses, in the carrying out of financial retrenchments, in the prosecution of projects of material improvements, in the stimulation of commerce, capital, and industry, in the conservation of friendly relations with the native princes and chiefs by new bonds of attachment, have not only had the most beneficial effect on the cause of peace, progress, and reform, but attest the zealous and enlightened interest which has marked your consideration of Indian matters.

"To your just influence and wise beneficent counsels in the Imperial Legislature and in the Cabinet of her Majesty's Government, are we indebted for the establishment of local councils, the admission of the non-official element in them, both European and native, the constitution of the High Court, the recognition of the claims of the natives of the soil to the bench of that Court, the removal of certain disabilities for a free competition in the public service, and the promotion of measures having for their object the training of the native in the art of self-government.

"We are firmly persuaded, right honourable sir, that the direction and control of Indian affairs in England by some delegate authority, assisted by a body of councillors able and well-informed on Indian questions, such as you have been assisted by, is essential to the good government of India. Not only do the highly salutary and beneficial effects of the administration of two successive Secretaries of State for India under the new constitution—we mean Lord Stanley and yourself, right honourable sir—afford a practical proof of the admirable working of this form of government, but the present relations of the two countries suggest the necessity, as well as the sound policy, of the intervention between the local Governments of India and the Imperial Parliament of some superior authority directly responsible to the latter.

"We humbly believe that in England the greatest breadth and liberality of view exists as to the mode of treating the natives of India, and that most of the liberal institutions we possess emanated from Parliament and public opinion in the governing country. We freely admit that the Government of India must, to a certain extent, be in India, and that the local Governments should enjoy the utmost latitude in respect to the details of administration. But at the same time, on all great questions of principle, on matters involving organic changes, as to which the most profound knowledge of the science of government is essential, we are respectfully but clearly of opinion that we may always reckon on finding the highest class of experienced statesmanship in England divested of all local prejudices and influences, and therefore the most competent to supervise the local Governments, and preserve undisturbed the general tone of their policy.

"As an illustration of the beneficial effect of exercise of the controlling power in England over Indian affairs, we need but advert to your now celebrated despatches to his Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General in Council regarding the Breaches of Contract Bill, and the sale of waste lands, and the extension of the permanent settlement. By your emphatic expression of opinion on the first-mentioned subject, the people of India have been freed from the effects of a project of law opposed to the principles of civilised jurisprudence, exceptional in its aims and character, and calculated to prove an efficacious engine of injustice, hardship, and oppression, under the peculiar administrative machinery of India.

"Entertaining these sentiments, we earnestly and sincerely hope and pray that the present scheme of Indian administration may not be disturbed, and that the people of India, under the blessings of a gracious Providence, may long enjoy the benefits which have resulted from the influence of your counsels in the Cabinet of her Majesty's Government.—We, &c."

Moolvie Abdool Luteef, who seconded the motion, remarked: Our purpose is one which must commend itself to the favour of all rulers, as tending to promote goodwill and understanding between governors and governed, and should convince the people of England that we are able to judge for ourselves in matters affecting our material interests. This purely voluntary manifestation of native feeling should be in the highest degree pleasing to every ingenuous Englishman, and I have no hesitation whatever in expressing my conviction that it will meet with ready appreciation in the most intelligent circles in England. To Sir Charles Wood belongs the peculiar credit that under his guidance a real and earnest endeavour has sprung up on the part of our rulers to render themselves as understood as possible by us—a sincere desire that we should have an insight into the principles and mode of government set over us. This has been accomplished in a variety of ways—by admitting natives into the machinery for making laws and regulations affecting imperial as well as provincial interests; by employing natives in offices of the highest trust and responsibility, and practically removing all distinctions between native and European in the ranks of the public service. By so doing he has accomplished infinitely more towards cementing affection between the two countries, and attaching us to the English nation by the firmest bonds of loyalty, than a hundred armies could have done. This is what English statesmanship has done—what Roman and Grecian policy could never do; it has made the people of this country look upon a change of rulers as the greatest misfortune which could befall them. A few years more of such thoroughly conscientious and intelligent administration as we have had under Sir Charles Wood, and our future is decided for ever.

The motion having been put and agreed to, a committee was appointed to carry out the resolution, and thanks having been voted to the Committee of the British Indian Association, and to the chairman for his able conduct in the chair, the proceedings terminated.

THE LATE LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR OF THE NORTH-WESTERN PROVINCES.

One by one the old officials who have grown with the territorial and administrative growth of the empire are passing away into the obscurity of English life. There is much in the withdrawal from India of the governor of an Indian province, after five years of almost despotic sway over millions, like the retirement of an American President. Power is in itself always sweet to the man who is either ambitious, philanthropic, or both, and especially so to the middle-class Englishman who cannot claim it as a birthright, or as the price of party services, but grasps it as the reward of a quarter of a century's toil in the East. The sadness which Sir Charles Jackson expressed the other day, in his farewell words to the bar, is the natural accompaniment of the surrender of the duties of a life-time. When the first excitement of return to England has passed away, the thoughtful man, who finds himself an enforced idler, and shut out from a public life in which all his habits have unfitted him to take a part, feels the sadness only increase as the shadows of life deepen. In the dilettante pursuits of a London lounge a few Anglo-Indians delude themselves into the belief that they are busy, and strive to take a position in society such as wealth alone can never make equal to that which has been surrendered. From a Highland castle or a Devonshire estate others watch with ever-increasing interest the progress of countries which they administered so long; and there they welcome, with true Indian hospitality, the old friends who, yet in harness, seek occasionally for a short breathing-time in England. Ordinary constituencies refuse to be represented by an "Old Indian," and the pensioned civilian's purse is not generally long enough to woo such electors as delight in Harvey Lewis, Cox, and Williams. Only in rare instances, such as that of Sir John Lawrence, are retired administrators asked to enter the Indian Council, and that is looked on rather as a haven of rest where, after a little passive advice, the decrees of the Secretary of State are registered, than as a medium through which to influence the destinies of our Eastern Empire. Should one more conscientious than the rest attempt to show energy, he is speedily convinced of the fruitlessness of the task, and, like Colonel Durand, leaves the Council.

Mr. George Edmonstone, after thirty-two years' actual service, is about to leave India. His career has been marked by no act of wonderful ability. In no sense can it be said that he has stamped his impress on any province as the Lawrences did; or has been distinguished by his adhesion to any great policy like Sir Robert Montgomery, his contemporary; or has effected any change among the people, for good or evil, like one of his predecessors, Mr. Thomason, or another contemporary, Sir J. P. Grant. Indeed, it is difficult for even those who have watched his four years' career as Lieutenant-governor most carefully, to fasten on any salient point which will afford material for praise or blame. But Mr. Edmonstone's work in India has been none the less valuable for all that. It is only in great crises, such as the conquest of a province, the outbreak of a revolt, or a total change in the administration of a district, that there is room for the display of peculiar ability. At all other times the qualities of clear, practical common sense, of unswerving uprightness, and of untiring energy, are more valuable than the revolutionary spirit of a clever crotchety man, and these qualities have marked Mr. Edmonstone's long career. As a Punjab Commissioner he stood in the foremost rank of the very best administrators India has ever produced. As a Foreign Secretary to the public he appeared merely the instrument of the Supreme Government, but all who know the facts pronounce him one of the ablest men who ever held a post for which the best officers in the service are always selected. Indeed, he was so much in his place as Foreign Secretary that his promotion was a loss to the public service for which Mr. Beadon's appointment did not altogether compensate. With more of that subtle and purely intellectual ability which makes a good diplomatist, Mr. Beadon lacked his predecessor's Punjab experience and that higher quality of even-handed justice combined with an equitable generosity which mere legality always has a tendency to extinguish.

The circumstances of Mr. Edmonstone's appointment as Lieutenant-governor in the North-Western Provinces were fatal to his being permitted any independence of action. He succeeded, not Mr. Colvin, but Lord Canning himself, for up to the moment that the late Viceroy entered his carriage to leave Allahabad for Calcutta, he governed the North-West himself. Mr. Edmonstone's first duty was to reorganise the provinces which had just been pacified—a task his Punjab experience admirably qualified him for. At one time, when Lord Canning's slow intellect burned at a white heat, as it did when he issued his Oude proclamation, it seemed as though the Punjab system refined would have been applied to the North-West, when the Provinces would have had a very different feature. But Lord Canning let the tide of the old abuses and regulations drift back again, and whenever Mr. Edmonstone tried to check its sullen flow he was arrested. His relation to Lord Canning had been such that he did not dare to act for himself as Sir Robert Montgomery so often beneficially did, both in Oude and the Punjab. Instead of having, like the Punjab men, the prestige of a conqueror and a pacifier, he was surrounded in Lord Canning's mind with all the associations of a secretary whose function it might be to advise, but whose duty it was to obey. Hence there was ever passive war between Calcutta and Allahabad, and a severe domestic bereavement soon so affected Mr. Edmonstone's health that he almost ceased to struggle. The nominal ruler of thirty millions of people was only a Secretary still, checked by Lord Canning, checked by the Sudder Court, and checked by Mr. Harrington, who was his representative in the old Legislative Council.

We do not say that Mr. Edmonstone was always right. On the contrary, he was grievously wrong on the two subjects of financial reduction and the new police. In the former he was like all other Governors, and in objecting to the latter he had good grounds of excuse. He found himself in 1858 called on to govern provinces hardly freed from rebellion without an army. The "levy" system was still in full play, and the circumstances of the country pointed out to him more powerfully than they did to Sir F. Halliday and Sir J. P. Grant in Bengal the advantages of a military police. For a time the force was most useful; he became enamoured of it, and he resigned it with a sigh. But his active mind at once appreciated the advantages for a permanent state of things of the civil constabulary, and the system on which it works has no warmer eulogist than he. For the rest, Mr. Edmonstone's conduct in the dark years of famine, and in the still existing crisis caused by the demand for cotton, showed him to be equal to all difficulties. Governing the North-West on a system of cramped legality and unexpansive routine of which he did not approve, it may well be Mr. Edmonstone's boast that he did it as successfully as was possible. With an industry that never flagged, and an intelligence that was seldom at fault, it must be Mr. Edmonstone's satisfaction, in the hour of his departure from the scene of labours, extending over the third of a century, that he has always done his duty.—Friend of India, March 5.

THE NEW LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR.

With the sole reservation that at this particular period in the history of the North-Western Provinces Mr. Muir would have made the best Lieutenant-governor, we express our hearty approval of the appointment of the Hon. Edmund Drummond. Rumour has it, that on the one hand Mr. Muir was unwilling to hold an appointment to which he thought Mr. Harrington, who has since declined it from ill health, had a better chance; and, on the other, that even at Lieutenant-governorship is far from a boon to a civilian of twenty-four years' standing, when it would involve his resignation of the service six years before the maximum limit. Mr. Muir is, perhaps, right, and as senior member of the Board of Revenue, and associated with a man like the new Lieutenant-governor, he will be able to throw the permanent settlement over five or six of the districts as successfully as if he had held the reins of power himself.

The serious question now is, who will succeed as Financial Secretary? For the first time for many years Mr. Drummond redeemed that office from the contempt cast upon it by the bungling of men like Messrs. Allen, Dorin, and Lushington. With Sir Charles Trevelyan as Finance Minister, and the new system of accounts perfected, ordinary ability and judgment should suffice to discharge the duty. But in the financial branch of the service, at least in its upper ranks, that ability and judgment combined are not to be found except, perhaps, in Mr. Harrison, who is now on sick leave in England. Finance has always been the bête noire of the civil service, which has been glad to summon merchants into its ranks, and bankers to its councils, to supply that knowledge of both science and human nature which a monopoly beginning at Haileybury and ending in a Calcutta Secretariat can seldom possess. Out of the ranks of the financial branch, however, there happens to be a civilian whose abilities are pre-eminent for such an office. Mr. Cust is, in more than one respect, the foremost man of his class, and only his strong anti-English opinions unfit him for that high judicial office which his combined Indian and barrister's training would otherwise lead him to adorn. As Financial Secretary, Mr. Cust would be the man after Sir Charles Trevelyan's own heart—the foe of extravagance, the promoter of efficiency, and the untiring worker of a system which fits into his love of organisation, and carries out his appreciation of the great principles of finance and political economy. We trust the miserable dogma of mediocre bureaucrats in Calcutta will not on this occasion have its usual influence—that Mr. Cust belongs to a small class of officials, who are too able and honest to be considered "safe."

The Hon. Mr. Drummond has lost nothing by being the brother of a Scotch peer. This fact, combined with his high character, has always prevented him from falling into that habit of "official priggishness," in which parvenus shroud themselves, which Mr. Laing more than once sneered at, and which has done so much to divide Bengal society into official and non-official parties. Nothing strikes a visitor to Calcutta more, especially if he be a Bombay, Madras, or Punjab civilian, than the ludicrous pretensions of a few officials. From such Mr. Drummond is as free as if he had landed in Calcutta yesterday; and his promotion from the ranks of the civil service to the independent position of a governor, will not render any change of either bearing or opinions necessary. He will continue to be what he has always been—the honourable Christian gentleman, who never made an enemy and never sacrificed a principle. He does not belong to, for he never had any sympathy with, the bureaucratic clique which looked with anger on Mr. Wilson's appointment to council, which whispered malignities against Mr. Laing, and which tolerates Sir C. Trevelyan reluctantly only because he was once "in the service." Like Sir Bartle Frere during his membership of council, Mr. Drummond has quietly done not a little to bridge over the gulf between classes and appease party animosities, while he has shown to all an example of what an English gentleman ought to be in a land of heathenism. Personally Mr. Drummond is a boon to the North-West; while his ability is as fair, if not striking, as that of any one, except Mr. Muir, who might have been appointed. His lack of local experience may be a fault, or a virtue, according to the character of events during his administration. With a secretary as industrious as Mr. R. Simpson, or Mr. Dashwood, or others who might be named, and with an adviser so able as Mr. Muir, Mr. Drummond ought to succeed.

His work will not be easy. To govern thirty millions of people without a Council, such as aids the governors of eleven millions in Bombay and twenty-two millions in Madras, requires an intense devotion to duty which he does not lack, but which Mr. Harrington did right to shun. He ought not to rest until English judges are associated with the civilians who sit in Agra, and the Sudder is converted into a High Court. A local Legislative Council may follow. He has a great capital to build at Allahabad. During his tenure of office not only will the trunk railway lines in the provinces be completed, but large branches will unite them with the Gogra and the Himalayas, and trade at present cramped will find its way to the coasts by many outlets not yet thought of. The canal question is one of perhaps greater difficulty than the Permanent Settlement in which it is involved. The slopes of the Himalayas, with their tea and their iron, have to be clothed with capital. The currency and the new banking system he is too familiar with not to encourage. Mr. Drummond can rest satisfied, no more than his predecessor, with the present opium monopoly, which is now demoralising Oude; and he has higher views of the duty of the State to educate the masses than Mr. Edmonstone. The constabulary force he will encourage. Above all, he will be far more independent of the Supreme Government than Mr. Edmonstone, for not only is the tendency of our administration to federalism, but Lord Elgin has not Mr. Harrington at his side, and is wisely averse to making work for himself. The new Lieutenant-Governor has a career before him, which might well satisfy the most ambitious and gratify the most philanthropic. We believe that he will rise equal to it.—Friend of India, March 12.

MEETING OF THE SENATE OF THE CALCUTTA UNIVERSITY.

The meeting of the Senate of the Calcutta University for the conferring of degrees came off yesterday in the Town-hall. The arrangements were a great improvement on those of former occasions, and the native portion of the audience are certainly making rapid progress in the art of keeping quiet in public places when somebody is speaking. Precisely at half-past four, the hour named, the Vice-Chancellor, the Hon. C. J. Erskine, and the members of the Senate, among whom we noticed the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, and many other well known names, entered the hall, and the proceedings commenced.

The Vice-Chancellor, after explaining the reason why the annual meeting had not been held, and remarking that it would be a matter for future settlement whether or no it would not be better to hold that meeting after the expiration of the official year, detailed the objects of the conference, viz., to confer sundry degrees of M.D., M.A., B.L., and B.A. It was, he said, a matter of congratulation that on this occasion several of the candidates had to receive the more advanced honour of the M.A. degree.

The Registrar having gone through the usual formulae, the candidates were severally presented to the Vice-Chancellor, and admitted to their several degrees, with the customary exhortation to prove themselves by their lives and conversation worthy of the same. This not deeply interesting ceremony having been concluded,

The Hon. Vice Chancellor addressed the meeting. He regretted much the unavoidable absence of the Chancellor, the Viceroy, and paid a feeling tribute to the memory of Lord Canning and Mr. Ritchie, both of whom had done so much for the University. It was true that Lord Canning at the time of his death had ceased to be personally connected with the University, but he was certain that he should ill express the feelings of all present, did he not record the deep regret which all felt at the loss of one who had done so much for the cause of education. The Hon. speaker then dwelt at some length on the benefits of a university education, so eminently exemplified in Lord Canning, and expressed a fervent belief that the senate which that nobleman had presided over for five years, might have, had he lived, looked to him for a continued and enlightened support. Almost the last words of Lord Canning to the Senate had been an expression of regret that his administration had not, owing to civil troubles, been able to do so much as he could have wished for the cause of education; but it was gratifying to know that the Government could now turn its attention to the merits of the University. The speaker then alluded to the University building which it was proposed to erect, and was understood, as well as the rustling of punkahs and shuffling of feet would permit him to be heard, to say that he trusted it would be worthy of the English name, and that, by donations of the liberal, it would contain such memorials, pictorial and otherwise, of the learned and good as would endear it by association to the hearts of the frequenters. He then passed on to show how successfully the establishment of the University had worked out desired ends, and how much encouragement it gave for the future; but, as in the former instance, only one word in twenty, imperfectly caught, enabled us to form some sort of correct conclusion as to the subject-matter of what the speaker was saying. The statistics of the University for its six years' existence were next almost inaudibly explained, and only enough figures were heard here and there to bear out the speaker's assertion that of the various classes studying, the Hindoos were the most forward and the Christians the most backward, the Mussulmans holding the middle rank. Mr. Erskine next alluded to several points connected with the examinations and general management of the University, and concluded by an appeal to the new graduates to persevere in the path of study, and above all to see that the advantages of that study were fully understood by their countrymen. At several points of the speech the members of the Senate expressed great approval, but the words which elicited it were inaudible in the body of the hall.

At six o'clock the meeting dispersed.—Englishman, March 17.

FOREST ADMINISTRATION IN BRITISH BURMAH.

We have received from the Secretary to the Government of India the Progress Report of Forest Administration in British Burmah, for the year 1861-2, prepared by Dr. Brandis, the present Superintendent of Forests. Although the bulk of the work is devoted exclusively to matters of detail, we shall be able to glean a few interesting facts in connection with the present condition and working of these extensive forests. In consequence of the recent amalgamation of the provinces, some changes in the arrangements of the forests have taken place, three main divisions having been formed, deriving their names from the three principal rivers in the country, the Irrawaddie, Sittang, and Salween; these divisions being further sub-divided into nine sections. The survey and examination of new forest tracts have been very successfully prosecuted during the year under notice. The operation of "girdling" has been carried on simultaneously in the three divisions, having been applied to about one tenth of the first class trees in the Pegu forests. This important operation is performed once in six years, and consists in measuring the girth of the trees, with a view to their classification, and as the forests are now constituted, this operation is the keystone, as it were, of their management and conservancy. It is calculated that the trees available from last year will furnish a sufficient supply of timber for 1864-65. The greatest care has been used in selecting first class trees only—a selection greatly facilitated by the experience gained in previous years. In the Tharrawaddie forests, at Beeling, a large number of trees has been much injured by the effects of the annual jungle fires, only one fourth being found fit for "girdling." The "Royal Forest" situated in the Prome district was surveyed last year. It is stated that this tract of timber land has been protected hitherto from devastation, not by any local difficulties hindering the removal of the timber, but by the superstitions of the inhabitants. The "nats" or demons which are supposed to inhabit the trees of this forest are so much feared "that a Burman does not venture to touch a leaf, much less to fell a tree." For this reason the "Royal Forest" remains intact, a singular instance of an "almost purely teak forest." The area of teak cultivation is estimated at two hundred square miles, the average number of first class trees per square mile at five hundred and eighty-four. The upper forests have hitherto been saved by the difficulty of carriage. The population of the upper Zamayee country, where teak abounds, is rapidly decreasing, in consequence of a famine brought about by an "unheard-of visitation of rats." A survey of the upper Thongyeen forests has proved that they are much smaller in extent than was previously supposed, but are more densely stocked with good trees than the middle forests. The necessity for a systematic topographical survey of the more important forest districts is pointed out, and it is shown that, if correct maps of the teak localities were available for reference, much delay and trouble would be avoided. It is proposed to undertake at once the survey of several forest districts of limited extent, sufficiently detailed to show the position of the different teak localities, with reference to "the existing or projected lines of land or water carriage." The supply of timber from beyond the frontier line has, during the year under review, been four times in excess of that from the British territory—in the latter case being the produce of about 2,400 square miles, or at the rate of ten tons per square mile. The cost of clearing and planting with teak one square mile is calculated at Rs. 75,000. The forests in British Burmah, under the system now in force, are estimated to yield 40,000 tons of teak per annum. Although there does not appear to be any ground for apprehending an immediate deficiency in the supply of this timber, still it is evident that the most productive districts such as the interior of the Peninsula in the King of Burmah's dominions, the tributary Shan States, the territory of the independent Karenee Chiefs, and the Siamese governors of Zimnay and Yabine, may at any time, by political complications or local disturbances, be closed to us. The greater portion of the Bassein forests has been leased by a firm in Rangoon for a period of twelve years. The construction of roads and the extension of facilities for the water carriage of timber has not been lost sight of—1,300 rupees have been devoted to this object. The result of experimental cotton cultivation in the Tharrawaddie district has not been successful. The description of seed used was "Sea Island." The "New Orleans" variety, raised from seed grown in Pegu, promises well, though yield averaging 120 lbs. of clean cotton per acre. It is, however, of very short staple, and does not command a high price in the English market, but possesses a higher value than the native Pegu cotton. The financial results of the year show the net proceeds to have been Rs. 1,26,563. The Budget limitation has been exceeded by Rs. 47,000, owing to larger supplies of timber being delivered on Government account than were anticipated. The establishment charges cost eleven and a-half per cent. on the gross revenue and expenditure, which is estimated at Rs. 7,19,219. The services of several officers of the department, including Capt. Power, Mr. Henry Leeds, Lieut. W. J. Leaton, and Mr. W. C. Graham, are highly commended. The unhealthiness of the forests, particularly for European constitutions, has caused the loss of many valuable lives.—Hurkaru, March 19.

TELEGRAPH BETWEEN ENGLAND AND INDIA.

Though the Secretary of State for India thought fit to decline Sir Macdonald Stephenson's very handsome and disinterested offer to make a line of telegraph from Bagdad to Kurrachee mainly with the public money, and generously offering at the same time to halve the profits, he has shown no great alacrity in getting the work performed himself.

The attention of the Government of India and the Secretary of State have been directed to the subject ever since the failure of the Red Sea Telegraph, in 1859. The Turkish Government entered into a compact with the British Government to make a telegraph connecting Constantinople with Bagdad on receiving a certain subsidy, which engagement that Government duly fulfilled before the winter of 1860.

The line was inspected on the part of the British Government, and reported as being in an efficient state, early in 1861; but very little has been done since.

Some eighteen months were frittered away in fruitless negotiations with Persia.

The British Government asked to have the line continued from Bagdad by way of Tehran to Bushire, and thence through Persian territory along the coast of the Persian Gulf to Kurrachee. We were so liberal as to offer Persia, on condition of our being permitted to make the line, the free use of it for its own messages, and to make a present of it altogether at the expiration of twenty years. These terms Persia thought proper to decline—a decision we have not the least occasion to quarrel with; though we may express regret that the Secretary of State for India lost so much valuable time in waiting for a reply to such a foolish proposal.

Early last year the finances of India were debited with a sum of £230,000, as a contribution towards the making of the submarine line from Bussorah, which it was decided to carry out on the failure of the negotiations with Persia. But, so late as August last, Sir William O'Shaughnessy Brooke was still superintending experiments with reference to the description of cable that should be used. This was settled to the satisfaction of the Home Government, and the cable was being rapidly proceeded with some months ago, but unless pressure is put on the Secretary of State there is little chance of seeing the telegraph in working order from Bagdad to Kurrachee during the present year.

It seems a pity that while exertions are now being made, at great cost to the Government of India, to construct a telegraph through the valley of the Euphrates and the Persian Gulf, for the purpose of completing the line of telegraphic communication between England and India, the arrangements on the European side should be of such an uncertain and untrustworthy character.

Nearly all the failures we have with telegraphic messages for India and China sent from England are caused by delays and breakages on the European Continental lines, and principally in Italy.

Moreover, the French and Italian lines over which all messages at present travel, are under the absolute control of their respective Governments.

It is open to them to detain or forward messages at their pleasure, and as suits their convenience, without being called in question. Though the Persian Gulf Telegraph now in course of construction may be completed to perfection, and we hope it will be little short of that when we get it, telegraphic communication between England and India will still be imperfect, so long as we are without a submarine cable connecting England with Malta, independently of continental telegraphs, and from Malta via Corfu to Constantinople to complete the whole.—Bombay Gazette.

MISCELLANEOUS.

COLONEL T. TAPP.—It is reported that Col. T. Tapp, C.B., of H.M.'s 103rd regt. Royal Bombay fusiliers, has been appointed to succeed Brigadier Liddell in command of the garrison at Bombay. Brigadier Tapp is one of the most distinguished officers of the Bombay army, and is an aide-de-camp to her Majesty.

THE DACOITEE COMMISSIONERS.—It is confidently asserted in well-informed quarters that the Government has in contemplation the abolition of the offices of the Dacoitee Commissioners, both for Lower and Upper Bengal, as soon as the operation of the new constabulary police system in the Mofussil has been ascertained to be successful.—Hurkaru.

COLONEL BURNEY AND CAPTAIN EYRE.—Anxious offers of compromise, and, as far as is possible, of satisfaction, have, it is said, been made to Colonel Burney, with reference to his suit against Captain Eyre, now pending in the High Court, but refused by the Colonel, who is determined that the law shall take its course, and the Dinapore affairs be thoroughly re-opened and exposed. Several witnesses have, according to the same reports, been subpoenaed from long distances; amongst the rest the Commander-in-Chief, who will hear at Simla that he "is wanted" at the Presidency. His Excellency's evidence can, however, we should think, be taken at Simla, and so save him a long journey at this season of the year. The costs of such a suit must be enormous, independent of any damages that may be awarded at its conclusion. Colonel Burney, though he may probably not come out blameless, is certainly acting like a man who feels that he has been unjustly injured and wronged; and the thorough exposure of the entire case which will now be made must enable the public to judge correctly of the conduct of all parties concerned. We presume Mr. Tom Taylor will be on the qui vive in order to utilise the details of this case in the next of those little dramatic sketches of Indian society which do so much honour "to his head and heart."—Englishman.

PILGRIMAGE TO JUGGERNAUT.—The Maharajah of Jeypore left Calcutta on the 14th March on a pilgrimage to Juggernaut, accompanied or attended by 150 followers. After the manner of the pilgrim who boiled the peas he put into his shoes, the Maharajah proposes to go through his pious performance with as little loss of time and comfort as may be. His Highness will, therefore, proceed to the holy spot on board the steamer Rattler, with the intention of returning to Calcutta in about ten days.

SPECIAL CARRIAGES FOR NATIVE FEMALES.—A general desire has been expressed by the native community for the attachment to railway trains of special carriages with covered compartments for the accommodation of native females. Under the present arrangements females of respectable families could scarcely travel by rail unless a whole carriage was engaged exclusively for them, which very opulent persons could do. The subject now occupies the attention of the committee. It is believed that the railway authorities are favourable to the proposal.

GENERAL ST. G. D. SHOWERS, C.B., at present commanding the Presidency division, proceeds on six months' leave to Europe, in April; Major-general H. A. Becher, C.B., will officiate in command of the Presidency division during the general's absence.

MR. CARNAC, the Inspector-general of the Mofussil Police, now on his inspectional tour into the interior, has been instructed by the Government of Bengal to proceed to Ranchee, in Chota Nagpore, to confer with the commissioner of that place, and with Major Ratray, the Deputy Inspector-general of Police, on a certain important political subject relative to that non-regulation district. Immediately on the return of Mr. Carnac to Calcutta, the new Police Act will be introduced into the district of Nuddeah and the twenty-four pergunnahs.—Hurkaru, March 19.

INDIAN CASH BALANCES.—The Government Gazette of Wednesday, March 18, contains the return of cash balances on January 31 last as compared with the balances on the same day in the two previous years. The amount on January 31, 1863, is the largest in any year since 1858, and, we believe, is the largest ever yet known, being the goodly sum (in English money—which we give as more readily comprehended) of

And on January 31, 1862, it stood at ...	£12,637,757
... ..	£18,615,617

In the course of the prosperous year 1862 the balances have been very large, the first amount being, as already stated, upwards of 18½ millions, the highest point having been on the 30th June, when the balances were £19,059,000, or only about £100,000 short of the last known balance. The fact, however, is, as we have said, that the last known balance in hand is the largest of all, and the Government of India has in its treasuries a sum within a trifle of twenty millions sterling. Mr. Laing used to speak of the "cash balances" as those "unerring tests of financial prosperity;" and Sir Charles Wood, in a despatch of Aug. 2, 1861, spoke of the increased cash balances as "showing increased receipts or reduced expenditure, or both, and being most satisfactory." When Mr. Laing brought in his "Budget" in April last, the cash balances stood at about seventeen and a half millions, and we see that they have increased since by upwards of two millions. With such proofs of the financial prosperity of the Government, and with the knowledge we all have of the general well-being and improved condition of the people, it is no wonder that speculation is already rife as to what Sir Charles Trevelyan is to do with his surplus, and that the prices of Government paper have been running up rapidly. The Four per Cents. have nearly touched "par," and, though the sudden rise of the last few days has, probably, been in part caused by speculation, there can be no doubt that the prosperity of the Government and the country warrants a general and considerable improvement in the value of Government Securities.—Hurkaru, March 13.

INDIAN COTTON.—That the practicability of transporting cotton from the Central Provinces along the river Godavery to the port of Coconada, where it debouches into the Bay of Bengal, is a subject of national importance, may be inferred from the yearly discussions which take place in the House of Commons. Much difference of opinion has long been expressed regarding the expediency of expending vast sums of public money in the construction and repair of incomplete works which competent and practical men have condemned. While, on the one hand, Sir Arthur Cotton, an engineer of great eminence, continues to believe implicitly in the practicability and utility of the whole scheme, notwithstanding occasional discouragements arising out of the demolition of erections built on "a vein of treacherous pipe-clay" or breaches in the anicut, we have, on the other hand, the evidence of Colonel Bruce, an officer of great experience and sagacity, who visited the works at a season of the year most favourable for forming an accurate estimate of their probable utility. After a minute inspection, Colonel Bruce arrived at the conclusion that Budrachellum, distant only 138 miles from the sea, should be made the point of starting the traffic by water, and that a good substantial road should be made to that point. This opinion, we observe from a Bombay contemporary, has been very opportunely confirmed by the practical experience of Mr. Stanborough, who describes the adventures of 935 bales of cotton purchased in the district of Nagpore for shipment at Caconada. Beginning the undertaking in the middle of June, and starting four hundred bales on 11th July by boats from the third barrier, Mr. Stanborough, who accompanied the boats, found that not less than two months were consumed ere the cotton, after being shipped and unshipped eight different times, reached the coast. A portion of the cotton having been entrusted to the Transit Agency appears to have fared even worse, for Mr. Stanborough came upon quantities of it at several points along the route, without any covering, and perfectly soaked with the heavy rains which fell during the height of the monsoon. Mr. Stanborough also arrives at the conclusion that the transit scheme is a complete failure, that the tramways are wretchedly inefficient, and the whole arrangements defective. We do not profess to hazard any opinion on the merits of the question. In the face of conflicting evidence and for the public interest the subject ought to be further sifted, with the view of finally determining whether the whole of the five hundred miles of water way can with reasonable hopes of ultimate success be rendered practically available for navigation, by constructing lateral canals with locks, in order to avoid the rocky barriers which obstruct the upper reaches of the river; or whether the Godavery should be availed of only for the distance which appears to be navigable at all seasons by country boats, and a road started from thence to Nagpore. The Godavery valley, we may remind our readers, forms part of the great plane which slopes with a gentle incline from the Western Ghats to the sea, and has an area of one hundred and thirty thousand square miles. The object of the great undertaking on hand is to combine the navigation of the river with the irrigation of the district through which it flows.—Friend of India.

THE MILITARY FUNDS.—A correspondent of the Madras Athenæum gives the following despatch on the subject of the military funds of the three presidencies:—"Military despatch from the Right Hon. the Secretary of State for India. India-office, London, 27th December, 1862, No. 138.—I transmit herewith, in order that the subject may engage the early attention of your Government, in communication with the Government of India, copy of a despatch (No. 482) this day addressed to the Government of India, on the subject of the military funds of the respective presidencies, as affected by the amalgamation of her Majesty's Indian military forces with the line:—"Military despatch from the Right Hon. the Secretary of State for India, India-office, London, 27th Dec., 1862, No. 482. To his Excellency the Right Hon. the Governor-general of India in Council.—1.

Some decision by her Majesty's Government on the important question as to the present and future position of the military funds of the respective presidencies becomes urgently necessary. 2. In my despatch dated 13th January, 1861, No. 27, it was stated the best method of dealing with the military and orphan funds is now under the consideration of her Majesty's Government. The Governments of India will be prepared to assume the liabilities of the funds, as far as may be requisite to maintain existing pensions, and to secure to the subscribers and their families the benefits to which they are entitled under the present system. 3. And in my despatch, dated the 25th July, 1861, No. 297, on the subject of the exchange of artillery officers, I observed that the position of the artillery officer exchanging, with respect to the military funds, would be governed by the rules of those institutions respectively. 4. It is now necessary to consider the best means of maintaining the guarantee given for the continuance of the benefits of the funds to the subscribers and their families, with due regard to the interests of the public service. 5. In my communication dated Oct. 16, 1861, I drew the attention of your Government to certain points raised by the Secretary of State for War, regarding the subscriptions to the funds, of officers who might be transferred to purchase regiments; and I expressed my wish that your Government, in communication with the managers of the several funds in India, should consider the best means of deducting the subscriptions so as to carry out, with due regard to the rules of those institutions, the pledge securing to officers the present and prospective advantages of the funds. 6. To this communication I have, as yet, received no reply. 7. I have recently addressed you on the subject of the Indian Navy Fund, as affected by the abolition of the Indian Navy. The position of the several military funds, consequent on the amalgamation of the military forces, involves more important financial considerations, and calls for different treatment, inasmuch as the subscribers for the most part still remain in the service, with the privilege of increasing their subscriptions on attaining advanced rank. In the case of the Indian Navy Fund also, its responsibilities have not yet been assumed by Government. 8. The liabilities of the military funds having fallen upon the revenues of India, their whole assets must, of course, be transferred to the Indian treasuries. Some early and stringent measures become, therefore, necessary on the part of Government, in order to guard against any possible diminution of those assets, by the non-realisation of subscriptions, or any other causes. 9. To enable her Majesty's Government to arrive at a decision as to the manner in which the pledge given can be best carried out, I am desirous that your Government and the Governments of Madras and Bombay should at once place yourselves in communication with the managers of the funds at the respective presidencies, with the view to the consideration of the whole subject. 10. I hope to be furnished with a report from your Government of your proceedings and their result, at an early date. 11. The point which has been raised as to the right of an officer, belonging to one of the new line regiments, to continue to subscribe to his fund, after transfer to a purchase regiment, must not be lost sight of. I desire to be informed of the opinion of the managers of the several funds, and of the respective governments, on this point. A copy of this despatch has been transmitted to the Governments of Madras and Bombay, for their early attention."

RESOURCES OF INDIA.—All that is now produced by all the slave labour in the world, British India alone, with its numerous and industrious native population—who are as fond of the rupee as the Yankee of his almighty dollar—could readily double and treble by the extension of railways, tramways, roads, bridges, canals, and works for irrigation, reservoirs, &c., &c., requisite for the development of the vast resources of our territory, bounded on the east by the Burrampooter, on the west by the Indus, on the north by the Himalaya mountains, and on the south by the sea; and containing within its area upwards of 600,000,000 acres of varied soil, capable of growing every kind of agricultural produce by the labour of its 150,000,000 of British subjects, who, if they were not victimised by the toleration of the hideous slave system, might readily be made to reciprocate with free European labour by consuming annually £150,000,000 worth of its productions. To give a faint idea of what the population of British India, independent of the Native States, more or less under our rule, could produce, we will suppose that five per cent. of its acreage, or 30,000,000 acres, to be under cotton cultivated by five per cent. of the population, or 7,500,000 people, and that the produce was only half the average of the land in the Slave States, 400 lbs. per acre, and that the whole of the population consumed 10 lbs. each annually, there would remain, with the Indian average of only 200 lbs. to the acre, 11,250,000 bales of 400 lbs. each; so also of sugar, with only half the average of the produce per acre in Cuba of one ton, India at 10 cwt. to the acre, and allowing each one of the population to consume 56 lbs. annually, there would remain for exportation 11,250,000 tons; and the average in each case would be four acres per head employed, while Olmsted and Russell agree, that a slave in the Southern States is made to cultivate 10 acres of cotton and 20 acres of Indian corn in the year, which, at 400 lbs. of cotton to the acre, at 4d. per lb., and 40 bushels of corn, at 2s. per bushel, on the spot, would realise £106.13s., and the annual cost of the slave would not exceed £40.

THE BURMESE.—The native race of Burmah differs essentially from any other, and in civilisation and intellect the people are much below the Hindoos and the Chinese. The native population of British Burmah exist in two different social conditions, and speak many distinct languages, the chief distinctions being perceived in those who live on the plains and those who inhabit the hilly districts. The religion of the former is that of Buddha, which they received from India, with its mendicant priesthood devoted to celibacy, its huge temples and monasteries, and its belief in the transmigration of souls. The rude tribes are in a very different state of society, though of the same race, and they have not adopted the Buddhist religion. Their languages are different, though all are monosyllabic. This difference in the states of social existence of the same race is attributable to differences in physical geography. The civilised population of the British province in 1861 amounted to 1,400,000, and the rude to about one-fourth of that number. In 1859 the population amounted to only 948,731, so that in two years it was nearly doubled. Christianity has made rapid progress among the rude tribes, under the guidance of about twenty European missionaries, who have a crowd of pupil teachers, who conduct the village schools, conversion and education being made to go hand in hand. The great majority of the converts have consisted of the rude tribes, those more advanced in civilisation, who have a teaching and religion of their own, having resisted conversion and education.

THE DANGS.—A disturbance, which was entirely local in its causes and consequences, took place in January, 1862, in the Dangs, a forest tract situated at the foot of the Syhadree range, between the British district of Nowapoor and his Highness the Guicowar's district of Loangur. This tract is inhabited by a very wild tribe of Bheels, divided under five principal and two minor chiefships. Their ferocious character, and the natural strength and unhealthiness of their fastnesses, have long enabled them to preserve a rude independence. The country derives its chief value from its extensive teak forests, in which the British and Guicowar Governments enjoy mutual rights. The increasing importance of this forest tract led the Government in 1852 to vest the Bheel agent in Khandeish with political authority over its petty chiefs in subordination to the magistrate of the province. On the death of Shreeput, the principal chief of the Dangs, and of his eldest son, who survived him but a short time, Deveeing, the next heir, was opposed by his younger brother in his succession to the gades. They eventually agreed to resign their claims in favour of their uncle, Oodeysing, on whose death, his son Keerulsing, succeeded. In the meantime (1854) Deveeing grossly misconducted himself; and, having wounded two men, he was apprehended and sentenced to two years' imprisonment in the Castle of Surat. Soon after, he showed symptoms of insanity, and was in consequence removed to the lunatic asylum at Colaba. In April, 1860, Deveeing effected his escape from the asylum, and succeeded in reaching the Dangs. After his return, he resumed his former lawless habits, and having been joined by some followers, they attacked and plundered several villages, which their inhabitants were compelled to abandon for security. On the commencement of these raids, Deveeing sent a warning to Keerulsing, the chief of Garvee, to the effect that one of them must die; and he carried out his threat by seizing Keerulsing in his own house, and shortly after took part in his murder. On these occurrences being reported to Government, a party of the Bheel corps was immediately despatched into the Dangs in pursuit of Deveeing, and a reward was offered for his capture. Being closely pressed, he gave himself up to the magistrate of Khandeish on February 5, 1862, and his brothers Dowlutsing and Roopder were shortly afterwards captured. Measures have been adopted for ensuring the future peace of the Dangs, and for otherwise improving the condition of this remote Bheel habitat.

CHARGE OF BRIBERY.—Rumour has it that serious charges of corruption and bribery are at present the subject of investigation before Major Keatinge, preferred by the Jeypoor authorities against a high Nagur official, whose voice was once potent in the councils of the Agency. It is alleged that he received Rs. 1,60,000, with prospective payment of Rs. 40,000, by obtaining for the legitimate minor sovereign his right to the sovereignty, in contradistinction to the pretensions of some other claimant. The affair is causing some sensation here, and there is no doubt that Major Keatinge will probe the matter to its core, inasmuch as several other similar revelations are spoken of.

A DACOITEE AT MOULMAIN.—A report was received here on Feb. 24th to the effect that a dacoitee, upon a colossal scale, took place on the 20th, in the interior. It appears that Beeling, a small station in Province Martaban, about ninety-two miles from Maulmain, was entered, pillaged, and burnt by a hundred dacoits, consisting of Shans and Thoaingthoos. One hundred houses were destroyed; and there are some wild rumours flying about regarding the atrocities the dacoits are said to have perpetrated. The dacoits, it seems, did not leave the place till late in the evening of the same day; and are supposed to have taken to their mountain fastnesses, which have heretofore afforded these lawless rascals secure retreats. When the occurrence was reported to Lieutenant Pemberton, he started at once with one hundred men of the Karen Levy, upon what I conceive to be a wild-goose chase; on the receipt of intelligence here, half a company of the Sappers was ordered to be held in readiness to start at an hour's notice. Meanwhile Major Briggs is awaiting further news to enable him to take some sensible and intelligible action, which he cannot now do from the imperfect information he has received concerning the dacoit. The Commissioner is still on his tour in the interior, and this sad event will, I suppose, keep him there for some time. I hope he will make such a report as will induce the immediate augmentation of the Police Force in these Provinces. At present it is too small, and its consequent inefficiency tempts lawlessness. Dacoitees and murders are now of frequent occurrence in the districts. Even in town, where the force is comparatively large, the crime list is lengthening.

THE REBELLION IN THE JYNTEAH HILLS.—The latest accounts from the Jynteah hills and the disturbed districts on the eastern frontier, represent that there has been some really serious fighting with the rebels, in which our troops have invariably been victorious, but not, as will be seen, without some considerable loss in killed and wounded. On the 23rd of February our force attacked a strong stockade of the enemy, the approaches to which were rendered formidable by concealed chevaux-de-frise, besides other tough defences; the 21st Regiment Punjab N. I., Major Thelwell's, being chiefly engaged. The Sikhs advanced with great spirit and gallantry to the attack, and eventually carried all before them, but with the loss of Lieutenant Collett, second in command, badly wounded in the leg by a musket ball, and Lieutenant Robertson badly wounded by falling into a deep pit filled with chevaux-de-frise, fifty men wounded, one of whom had his arm amputated at the shoulder joint, and two men killed on the spot. Lieutenant Collett's leg was broken above the ankle, and the necessity for amputation was feared. In a previous stockade affair on the 22nd, our force, in taking a very strong position of the enemy, had inflicted upon them the most severe loss hitherto suffered by them since the commencement of hostilities; and the consequence of these two operations, coming so rapidly one after the other, was that the Jynteahs were thoroughly cowed and depressed; and our troops had, up to date of writing on the 28th ultimo, been steadily taking every stockade about the country of whose existence they could get information, with very few casualties by wounds and no deaths. We are inclined at last to place faith in the assurances now sent down from the disturbed districts, to the effect that the rebellious Jynteahs are at last thoroughly weary of this long protracted contest, as we always prophesied would be the case when military operations in real earnest, such as those now recorded, should be carried on against them with persevering vigour and energy. The selection and fortification of their stockaded positions by the enemy are described as most skilful and formidable; and the accessory defences as troublesome and difficult to be overcome, beyond conception by those who have not been engaged in military operations in the disturbed districts; and it is remarked that if the Jynteahs would only defend their works half as well as they construct them, we should find ourselves involved in a very troublesome task indeed. Fortunately this is not the case; our officers and Sikh troops have taught the rebels some really severe and telling lessons, the result of which we would fain hope will be to bring this annoying rebellion and the season for military operations to a simultaneous end. Should this fortunately be the case, the officers and men engaged deserve the special consideration of the Government for their endurance and gallantry, and we hope that it will be manifested towards them. We are glad to say that further letters received yesterday from the field force in the Jynteah hills continue to report favourably of the state of affairs there, and appear to give solid promise of the rebels having really lost heart, and got tired of the contest. The officers and men wounded at the Sursiung affair were all doing well, the troops still engaged in active operations and in high spirits; whilst the enemy, on the contrary, were everywhere showing the white feather, and would not wait for the attack of the Sikhs. Several well-constructed stockades have been found actually deserted, and our men amused themselves examining the enemy's contrivances to oppose us; amongst others the chevaux-de-frise pits, which are worked by means of a string, which, being pulled from within the stockade, entrap the assailants, who fall through the covering, previously concealing the danger. The weather in the Jynteah country is still very fine; and it is the conviction of the officers engaged against the rebels that it will continue so quite long enough to settle this "little war," and compel the hostile tribes to submit to the British Government. This is a consummation very much to be desired indeed, and, if attained, it will justly entitle the troops engaged to the appropriation of the Government and the public.—Englishman, March 14.

RAWL PINDEE, March 6.—A MURDERER—HIS ESCAPE FROM JAIL AND SUBSEQUENT SUICIDE.—There has been a little excitement here lately. A gunner in the artillery, by name Bolster, some four months ago, shot a comrade dead. The man was of course confined at once, and his wife, who had used some threatening language, was put into jail in default of her finding securities to keep the peace. The court martial on Bolster was over some time in January, and every one had a very good idea of what the verdict was, for the murder was committed in the most open manner. Some delay, however, took place in the confirmation of the sentence by the Commander-in-Chief. Bolster's wife was allowed to visit her husband once a week, but on the announcement being received that sentence of death had been confirmed she was permitted to see him oftener. The prisoner, it would appear, was formerly in the iron trade, and therefore did not find it very difficult to get rid of his irons. His wife went as usual to the place where he was confined; this was a day or two ago, and in the evening, when the time came for her to return, it was discovered that her husband had escaped! A panel of the door had been cut out, and while the sentry's back was turned, Bolster crept out. His wife put back the panel and went on reading aloud to herself, and talking as it were to some one else. The sound of her voice, of course, led the sentries to suppose that everything was as it should be, but on the arrival of the party to escort her back to jail, it was at once seen that her husband had got away. Certainly the affair was very cleverly managed, and as the woman refuses to say when her husband did leave, there is no telling which of the sentries is to blame. How Bolster could have cleared the line of buildings and got out into the open country is a wonder; but get away he did, and after wandering some twenty miles was seen by a native, at whom he threw a stone, upon which the native went back and brought some villagers. The runaway made a sign he would give himself up, and immediately stabbed himself with a clasp-knife in two places! The men who brought him in say he survived for some hours, and died about three miles from the station. The body was buried without funeral rites after sunset. A more determined case of suicide there could not be. The man's life was most rightly forfeited, but it is just as well that we have been spared the painful exhibition that would have had to result next week. What we wonder at is the secrecy with which he and his wife must have worked at the door panel, how the chips of wood were never observed, or the noise of the working heard. A bolder attempt at liberty and life there could not well be; but what chance has any European of passing unknown through a country the language of which he is utterly ignorant of, and where food is not to be picked up in any village as it might be in England. How his wife can have managed to baffle observation passes understanding, but no one can deny that she practised no small ingenuity in gaining her object. It will be some time, I fancy, ere this concatenation of murder, escape of the felon, and suicide will be forgotten in Rawul Pindiee.

NEW SCALE OF MILITARY PAY.—The new scale of military pay and allowances will, we understand, come into operation from the 1st of May next. A leading feature in the code is the wish of government to hold out very advantageous inducements to its officers to serve with native regiments of cavalry and infantry, even the commands of which have since the mutiny only been taken from necessity. By the new scale a Lieutenant-Colonel commanding a native cavalry regiment will receive Rs. 1,550 a month; and if commanding an infantry corps, Rs. 1,450. From these rates the pay of commanding officers will graduate down by a sliding scale according to their rank, a captain in command of a native regiment receiving Rs. 900 a month. The staff pay of a number of appointments will also be increased: amongst others that of Assistant Adjutant General of Division, which will in future be Rs. 500, instead of as at present Rs. 400 a month.—Englishman.

MR. J. H. MORRIS, magistrate of Allahabad, is temporarily placed in charge of the current duties of the Commissioner's office from the date of Mr. C. B. Thornhill's departure.

THE DINAPORE SCANDAL.—Disappointed in obtaining redress from the Commander-in-Chief for the unmerited wrong that had been done to him, Colonel Burney has been compelled to appeal, as a simple citizen, to the laws of his country, with a view to clear his character as a gentleman and an officer from the aspersions so unjustly cast upon it. We have no wish to revive the memory of the Dinapore scandal, and assuredly we should receive but small thanks from the Brigadier himself for dragging the name of a lady into unenviable notoriety. It should be clearly remembered, however, that it was on two grounds he was invited by Sir Hugh Rose to resign his command. He was charged, in the first place, with disgraceful conduct to a lady, towards whom he appears to have acted on all occasions rather as a father than as an ordinary acquaintance. This charge, however, has been to all intents and purposes withdrawn, and it is, therefore, on the second allegation that Colonel Burney is judged unfit to command a brigade of her Majesty's troops. If there were any reasonable suspicion of the soundness of this second and sole remaining accusation, there could be no doubt that the conclusion arrived at by the Commander-in-Chief was perfectly just, and in accordance both with common sense and the first principles of military discipline. In fact, it amounts to a charge of moral and physical cowardice. Notwithstanding a long and distinguished career, notwithstanding brilliant services in the field in presence of the enemy, notwithstanding a life-long reputation for courage bordering on rashness, we are asked to believe that this veteran warrior shrank in terror from the uplifted arm of a subaltern and asked for mercy because of his old age. And by whom was this absurd and inconsistent accusation made against him? Who was it, besides, that could have so far begotten himself as to threaten personal violence to an old man, lying down upon his bed, and otherwise prevented by his military and social position from engaging in a ruffianly and pugilistic encounter? Is it necessary to say that it was one and the same man? No doubt any one who was capable of telling such a glaring untruth was equally capable of the ungentlemanly, the unmanly conduct on which he so strangely prides himself. We would remind Lieutenant Eyre—or, if he is not already aware of the fact, we would inform him—that it is not the custom for gentlemen, or even for true-hearted men in the humblest ranks of life, to raise their hand against those who, from any cause, are unable efficiently to defend themselves; and rarely, indeed, does it happen that any gentleman, really worthy of the name, dreams of relying on brute force for the maintenance of his own honour, or for preventing insult to others. One of two things—either Lieut. Eyre has affirmed that to have taken place which did not take place, or he has conducted himself in a highly improper and disgraceful manner, altogether “unbecoming an officer and a gentleman.” It is passing strange, indeed, that his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief did not recognize the necessity of calling this self-constituted “Squire of Dames” to account, for ungentlemanly and unofficerlike conduct, in threatening not only an old man, but his own superior and commanding officer. The consequence of Sir Hugh's unaccountable dereliction of duty is an action for Rs. 50,000 damages, brought by Colonel Burney against his traducer, not so much with an object to punish Mr. Eyre, as to clear his own character from all stain and blemish, and to preserve his name untarnished from the vile breath of calumny.—Hurkaru.

MRS. MASON—THE LADY MISSIONARY AMONG THE KARENS.—Our Serampore contemporary very properly draws the attention of the Government to the extraordinary conduct lately exhibited by Mrs. Mason, the well-known female missionary among the Karens. The unfortunate lady appears to have fallen under the most strange and pitiable delusions, surpassing in absurdity the spiritual pretensions of a Hume or a Forster. Were the consequences of these hallucinations confined to her own domestic circle, no journalist, however much he might deplore the sad fate of the sufferer, or however sincerely he might sympathise with her friends and family, would be justified in making any allusion to such a terrible affliction. But, unhappily, Mrs. Mason's monomania has assumed a form and proportions which threaten to prove seriously detrimental to public interests. Her modest request to be allowed to establish a kingdom, or at least, an independent province, having been declined by the British Government, seldom much moved by poetry or romance, Mrs. Mason has been led, by an evident aberration of judgment, to tamper with the loyalty of the Karens, and to inspire them with ridiculous notions of nationality and independence. That ignorant and impulsive people, regarding her as their true friend and benefactress, seem already disposed to lend a too ready ear to her perilous teachings, and to be only too willing to make unto themselves a name upon the earth. It is clearly impossible to permit this folly to go any further, and if Dr. Mason cannot or will not restrain his wife from preaching blasphemy and sedition, the Government has no choice but to remove her, with all tenderness and consideration, to some other country, where the illusions from which she suffers will be regarded with compassion, but where they cannot produce any lamentable results to her neighbours. It may not be amiss at the same time to exercise a wholesome surveillance over the American missionaries in general, who are known to be in the habit of exalting the Stars and Stripes above the Union Jack. Like their German brethren in Lower Bengal, they are not remarkable for bearing much goodwill to their British rulers, nor do they scruple to keep up a chronic state of discontent on the part of the labouring classes. Envious of the prosperity of England, and not usually men of extensive acquirements, or capable of entertaining broad and generous views, they will not recognise in a frank and candid spirit the inestimable benefits conferred upon this great country by British rule, but limit their vision to the narrow fact that a comparatively insignificant island exercises the greatest power the world has ever witnessed. In Bengal the small-mindedness of foreign missionaries may not be productive of any great amount of mischief, but among the Karens it may woefully check the wonderful progress that is now being made in civilising that interesting people, and retard for many a year their conversion to Christianity.

CHANGES IN THE PUNJAB.—“There is no end of changes in our district,” says a correspondent at Lahore. “Captain Pollock, whose domestic bereavements have been so severe, and with whom we all sympathise most sincerely, leaves immediately for England, and Mr. Robert Egerton, now at Goordaspoor, has been summoned to take his place, as officiating Commissioner of the Lahore Division. Then we have the bill stations all disposed of; Mr. Fitzpatrick, of Umritsur, goes to Dhurmsala; Mr. Elensie, of Lahore, goes to Murree; and Captain Lewin, of Jullunder, takes charge of Dalhousie. Mr. Blyth moves from Jhung to Gogaira, and rumour has it that our judge of the Small Cause Court will be the new deputy at Goordaspoor.” Still further changes are said to be in contemplation.—Delhi Gazette.

LORD ELGIN'S WHITE HAT.—Nothing seems to have attracted the correspondents of up-country papers more, in the course of the Viceregal progress, than Lord Elgin's white hat. Whether entering a great city in state, or making state visits to our feudatories, his Excellency seems to be partial to the white hat. The Mofussilite says:—“The white hat would seem to be a part of the uniform of the Governors-general of India. Lord Auckland wore a white hat—so did Lord Ellenborough (and when in a passion he would ‘bonnet’ himself with it); Lord Hardinge was notorious for his white hat, and went into battle with it at Ferozeshah and Soobraon. Lord Dalhousie, for a while, wore a white hat; but it did not become him, and he put it on in such a way that it hid his intellectual forehead.” Lord Canning also wore a white hat. The Mofussilite anticipates a dearth of the article in Northern India in consequence of the partiality for a covering which seems to hit the medium between the odious black hat and an “Ellwood.”

MR. SCOTT'S COTTON FRAUD BILL.—We make no apologies for again reverting to the Honourable Mr. Scott's Cotton Fraud Bill, now under the consideration of the Bombay Council. The great prize of the world is at our feet. A trade of the annual value of forty millions sterling is virtually at our command if we be but true to ourselves. Amid the perplexities and bewildering uncertainties of the American contest, the irrepressible issue between slavery and freedom is daily looming up more distinctly out of the seething cauldron of revolution in which that unfortunate country is immersed. It is not for us here to question the honesty or policy of Mr. Lincoln's cabinet. The emancipation proclamation is a fact which can neither be ignored nor denied. The pen with which it was signed has been competed for by the Museums of Northern cities, and that fact affords ample proof of the enthusiasm, if not of the sincerity of New England abolitionism. The sympathies of all Englishmen are unquestionably with their Southern brethren, who have displayed a degree of heroism in defence of their rights unsurpassed in the history of the world, and we expressed but the hope of all generous souls that national independence may at no distant date reward their efforts. We can say so much honestly, and without at all committing ourselves to the question of slavery. But whatever may be our hopes or fears there can be but one issue to the "domestic institution" if the North persists in its policy. Freedom, sooner or later, must be the result of the contest, either by violent means or by gradual emancipation. Freedom may be and no doubt is an excellent thing, but our experience of negro emancipation is not encouraging. In our West Indian colonies, Quashie, emancipated from authority and under the amiable guidance of well-meaning missionaries, is fast reverting into barbarism, and but for the introduction of Coolie labour the land would long ago have become again covered with jungle. The fact is the negro is a thorough sensualist. He has no ambition for the accumulation of wealth. "Sufficient for the day is the evil thereof," is his ruling maxim. How often, in British Guiana, have we encountered the emancipated negro, squatted on the bank of some secluded creek, with a rag round his loins, and revelling on the abundance which that prolific soil spontaneously yields. With a sable Venus to soothe his solitude, with yams and plantains in profusion, and fish from the creek, what cared he for the wants of the world? That the American negro would act differently we have no reason to suppose. Like his brethren in San Domingo and the British West Indies, he hates labour, and with boundless unoccupied territory to pick and choose from, he will naturally prefer lazy independence to daily toil on the plantations. Under no probably conceivable circumstances can America again produce the same quantity of cotton as in the past, and if negro freedom is achieved by violence and rapine, we need not look for cheap cotton in our time. It becomes, therefore, of the last importance that India should take advantage of her opportunity. A Contract Bill, which would introduce into the interior British enterprise and capital, and emancipate the Ryot from the tender mercies of the middleman, has been denied to us for the present. But that is no reason why we should not grapple with the disgraceful system of adulteration which brings our staple produce into disrepute in every market of the world. No person denies the magnitude of the evil with which Mr. Scott's Bill proposes to deal, and we are not at all surprised at the response of the pious Lancashire spinner to the prayer for renewed supplies for cotton. "Oh, Lord, but not Surat." England as well as India calls for a remedy, and those more immediately implicated in frauds assent to the necessity for some law to check the system. As this is quite natural, for competition has reduced the pecuniary advantages of adulteration to a point beyond which it does not pay, and a return to honest dealings would suit all parties. We do not profess to say that Mr. Scott's Bill is the very best measure that could be devised to remedy the evil, but no better has yet been suggested, and with some obvious modifications, we hope it will receive the assent of the Council and soon become law. Before concluding, we may remark that the principle of Mr. Scott's Bill is acted upon in various countries (although in a different form) where a great national interest is concerned. In every city in America there are public officers, appointed by the municipalities, whose duty it is to examine every barrel of flour, pork, beef, and butter, and affix the brand to which its quality and condition entitles it. In Scotland Government exercises a similar duty in the case of herrings; so in Ireland, butter and provisions are dealt with in the same way. In Russia also, flax and hemp undergo strict scrutiny by Government officials, who test and brand the quality. Sugar in Java, Brazil and Cuba, is subject, we believe, to somewhat similar rules, and so are silk and tea in China. But the system of adulterating cotton is so complex, and ramifies so extensively throughout the interior, that we fear simple municipal regulations of this kind would be insufficient to cope with the evil, and that nothing is left but to call in the strong arm of the law.—Hurkaru.

A PEOPLE'S PARK AT DELHI.—Among the improvements suggested by his Honour the Lieutenant-Governor for the city, we may mention the immediate formation of a "People's Park," that is, a large piece of ground outside the city walls, where the native population may enjoy themselves in any way they please consistent with good order. This has long been required, and will be generally appreciated. The site fixed upon for this purpose is, we believe, that portion extending westward of the Lahore gate of the city—the spot at present so frequently the scene of native assemblages, melées, &c. It is to be hoped that the native inhabitants of the city will appreciate the evident desire shown by the Government to promote as much as possible their comfort and pleasure; and they should judge for themselves by these concessions whether it is not the earnest desire of the Government to see the governed happy and contented.

NYNEE TAL.—We learn from the Mofussilite that Sir Hugh Rose has given the command of the depot at Nynee Tal to Major Webber Harris, of H.M.'s 104th Regiment, as a reward for his meritorious military services.

LORD MARK KERR, C.B., has been appointed brigadier, with effect from the 18th November last, to complete the establishment, vice-Brigadier Christie, gone on leave to Europe.

H.M.'S 72ND HIGHLANDERS.—Sir William Mansfield, the Commander-in-Chief of the Bombay Presidency, has been latterly engaged in inspecting the various regiments under his command. At the conclusion of a review parade of H.M.'s 72nd Highlanders at Mhow, his Excellency is represented to have said to the regiment, "You are a pattern to the British army."

CANTONMENT MAGISTRATES.—Some changes will, we understand, be shortly made in the appointment of cantonment magistracies, the pay and allowances will be consolidated, and the whole of the appointments divided into two grades, one at Rs. 1,000, and the second at Rs. 700 per mensem. This measure will have the effect, we should think, of causing a good many vacancies. Of all appointments in the country it is about the least enviable, and certainly one which no man would take unless it was well-paid. What inducement would there be, we should like to know, for a major in the army to hold the appointment upon Rs. 700 a month consolidated? The appointment being held by military men, who have as a rule their judicial knowledge to acquire by experience, and who have to prove their qualifications by a strict examination, is one in which change is much to be deprecated. The measure, if passed, will have the effect of turning out all the cantonment magistracies on attaining the rank of major, unless placed on the higher rate of pay, as it is absurd to suppose that they will perform the arduous and tedious duties of the office for nothing, or next to nothing.—Delhi Gazette.

CAPTAIN A. T. ARMSTRONG is appointed aide-de-camp to the Hon. the Lieutenant governor of the North-Western Provinces.

UNCOVENANTED NATIVE MAGISTRATES.—The Secretary of State, in a recent case, has ruled that uncovenanted native magisterial officers should be appointed justices of the peace in the presidency towns; but that none of them should be appointed as such in the Mofussil.

COPYRIGHT IN INDIA.—The pleadings in the long protracted case of Roussac v. Thacker, Spink, and Co., were brought to a close yesterday, though judgment was deferred until after the Easter Holidays. This is, we believe, the first trial for infringement of copyright that has ever come off in India. Although judgment has been deferred, the injunction restraining Messrs. Thacker, Spink, and Co., from selling their Directory has been temporarily rescinded, subject to an account being kept of all copies sold in the meantime. It is stated on all hands that the learned judge who tried this tedious case exhibited throughout the most unflagging attention, a remarkable sagacity, and an impartiality beyond all praise.—Bengal Hurkaru, March 14.

OPUM SALE.—The following are the particulars of the opium sale, held at the Exchange rooms on March 10:—

	Chests.	Highest.	Lowest.	Average.	Proceeds.

Benares	1,440	1,450	1,430	1,435	130 ... 20,67,575

STRIKING A SUPERIOR OFFICER.—We regret to hear that an officer of the present garrison of Fort William is under arrest on the very serious charge of striking a superior officer. Unless there be some extenuating circumstances, and the youth and inexperience of the culprit be taken into consideration by his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, we presume the matter must end in a general court martial.—Hurkaru, March 11.

MADRAS MILITARY FUND.—No small excitement prevails in Indian military circles at present, on the subject of Sir Charles Wood's policy with respect to the several military funds, which is understood to involve their gradual extinction, and the appropriation of their capital which, in the case of the Madras fund, now exceeds £1,000,000.—Madras Athenæum.

CAPTURE OF FEROZE SHAH.—We have at length received authentic information regarding the capture of one of the late King of Delhi's grandsons at Puttun. The manner in which it was effected reflects the highest credit on Major Arthur and Lieut. Fenwick. It appears that these officers were amongst the number of politicals who went to Puttun in attendance on his Highness the Guikwar, and no sooner were the ceremonies connected with the reception of the Commander-in-Chief concluded and the multitude dispersed, than Major Arthur and Lieutenant Fenwick, accompanied by a man in the disguise of a Fukeer, went in a bullock-cart into the town, where, winding about a succession of narrow lanes, they suddenly stopped before a miserable hovel, into which they both entered; they presently returned with a powerful looking Mussulman walking between them, who was at once compelled to take his seat in the cart, in which he was quietly carried away from the wretched hovel which he had made his place of refuge. The captive denies being Feroze Shah, the notorious outlaw on whom the Government are particularly anxious to lay their hands; but confesses to being Mahomed Shah, a grandson of the King of Delhi. The poor wretch was sent off to Deesa under a cavalry escort on the evening of his capture. Notwithstanding the rapidity and secrecy with which the investigation was managed, a large piece of arsenic was found secreted on the prisoner's person. Thousands of persons collected to see the departure of a criminal who, after eluding pursuit for so long a period, had at length been captured in so remarkable a manner. We do not remember having seen Lieutenant Fenwick's name among the many officers who were so constantly before the public, in the discharge of police duties, during the rebellion. He has now, however, had the good fortune to earn celebrity by as clever an act as has been heard of for some time. Major Arthur, who is now Resident at the Court of Ralhunpoor, was, for many years, well known as a successful police officer. He did good service in the police in the Deccan during the mutiny, and it is a matter of surprise that the Government should have allowed an officer who had showed such marked capability for the performance of police work to leave a department where experience, combined with natural talent, is so very necessary to ensure success. We have no doubt that both these officers will be properly rewarded, and that Government, moreover, will be prompt in recognising their services. It was feared at one time that a determined resistance would be offered, as the captive had many friends in the city, as well as several followers; but Major Arthur's formidable presence, where he is well known and much feared, doubtless prevented any exhibition of popular sympathy. The ease with which so difficult a task has been accomplished, and the absence of all attempt at resistance, affords a convincing proof that British prestige is again in the ascendant.—Bombay Gazette.

EXAMINATION PAPERS.—The Phoenix relates a good story about examination papers:—"Public Examination Papers.—We frequently hear of copies of the questions to be put to candidates for the public service being surreptitiously obtained and circulated at this side of India, and it is not long since a pleadership examination here had to be postponed in order to permit of the framing of new questions, for this very reason. Calcutta is, however, not one whit worse in this respect than other places where the examination test is in vogue. There was an examination of candidates for the public employment certificate the other day at Madras, when a good lot of money is said to have been made by parties selling what appeared to be copies of the questions. The Madras Times describes how the would be cheats were fleeced by sharper rogues than themselves:—"A little prior to the examination, some clever scamps drew up a set of pretended questions, got them printed exactly on the proper paper, and by a due appearance of secrecy, sold them in the bazaar at five rupees each. They were eagerly bought up, and as eagerly studied. We may imagine the blueness of the looks of the purchasers when they entered the examination-room and found how they had been deceived. Complaint was, of course, out of the question.' A few more cheats of this kind, and the papers will cease to be stolen, for they will not sell."

THE ADVOCATE GENERAL.—We regret to hear it rumoured that the state of health of the Hon. T. Sydney Smith is likely to render his return to England necessary by an early opportunity. The mantle of the honourable gentleman, both as a member of council and as Advocate General, will probably fall, we are informed, on a distinguished member of the local bar, whose writings, on questions affecting the moral and material interests of India, point him out as the most fitting successor.—Daily News.

THE ADDANKI CATTLE SHOW.—The Hurkaru announces that the annual Cattle Show held at Addanki, in the Madras Presidency, has again proved a success. It is now some years since these shows were first instituted, and it is gratifying to perceive that they have become every year more appreciated. The money value of prizes distributed amounts to Rs. 1,161, and includes a gold ring presented by the Governor. The committee testify to the valuable results already secured in this highly important branch of farming by these periodical shows, and, in the hope of exciting emulation, it is directed that copies of the Gazette containing the report of the last show be distributed extensively throughout the country. The Government of Madras desires to encourage these annual exhibitions, and with that view has sanctioned the payment of a fixed sum per annum for prizes.

DISTINGUISHED AND MERITORIOUS SERVICES.—The various details under command of Captain Fisher, of the Colaba Sanitarium, were mustered to witness the presentation of a medal for "Meritorious Service" (with the annuity) to Staff Sergeant George Guise, of the Colaba Sanitarium. Captain Fisher having arrived on the parade-ground, addressed the troops in a short speech, expressive of the happiness he felt in the task assigned him. The bestowal, he said, of this mark of the Government's appreciation of distinguished and meritorious services afforded him the greater pleasure on account of the rarity of the presentation, and the high merit of its recipient. The services of Staff-Sergeant Guise extended over a period of nearly twenty-one years, during which time he had been engaged as follows:—"Served in the Army of the Punjab in 1848 and 1849. Present at the action of Rannnagar, 22nd November, 1848; battle of Chillianwallah, 13th January, 1849; Goozerat, 21st February, 1849. Surrender of the Sikh Army at Rawul Pindee, occupation and attack of Peshawur, and pursuit of the Afghans beyond the Khyber Pass. Persian expedition of 1857. Siege and capture of Mohumra. Served with the Central Indian Field Force, under command of Major-General Sir Hugh Rose, K.C.B. Present at the capture of Rathghur. Action at Barodia, capture of Garakotah, and pursuit of the rebels. Forcing the Muddienpore Pass, Battle of the Betwa, siege and capture of town and fortress of Jhansi, and served in Bundelcund from July, 1858, to March, 1859, with Brigadier Liddell's Flying Column." Captain Fisher said he trusted that this distinguished non-commissioned officer might live long in the enjoyment of his many medals and well-earned annuity; and having presented the medal the details then returned to barracks.

ANOTHER TESTIMONIAL TO MR. KURSONDAS MOOLJEE.—A meeting of Khojas, convened by the heads of the reform party among them, was held on the 11th inst., at Bellasis-road, in the garden of Kassumbhoy Nathubhoy, Esq., to present an address, with a purse, to Mr. Kurnondas Mooljee, on his departure to England, for the noble stand he made in the cause of purity and morality in connection with the Maharaj libel case. On the motion of Mr. Gungadas Keshordas, seconded by Mr. Fazulbhoy Normahomed, Dhurmsey Poonjabhoy, Esq., was called to the chair. Among those present at the meeting were observed the Rev. Messrs. Aitken and Dhunjeebhoy Nowrojee, and a number of Parsee, Bania, Bhattia, and Khoja gentlemen, the majority of the audience consisting of Khojas. Mr. Peermahomed Kassumbhoy, at the request of the chairman, read the address in the Guzeratee language, congratulating Mr. Kursondas on the results of his successful fight against the debasing practices of the Maharajs, and the blind and demoralizing subservience of their followers to their unrighteous precepts, and assuring him of the sympathies and moral support of the Khojas whenever he went forth as a friend of enlightenment and reform. The address was accompanied by a purse of one thousand rupees (Rs. 1,000), of which Mr. Kursondas's acceptance was solicited, as a token of the interest which the young reform party in the Khoja community took in the laudable objects he had laid to heart. Mr. Kursondas, in accepting the address and the purse, returned thanks to the donors and the gentlemen who were present at the meeting to do him honour. Mr. Hormusjee Dadabhoy and Gungadass Keshordas and Dr. Dhirajram Dulpurani addressed the meeting on the meritorious actions, the courage, and zeal for reform of Mr. Kursondas. A vote of thanks to the chairman, and the distribution of nosegays and pan-soparee, closed the proceedings.

CASTE PERSECUTION.—We hear that, with the view to still further persecute Mr. Kursondas Mooljee, the defendant in the Maharaj libel case, the followers of the Maharajs in Bombay, on hearing of his contemplated departure to England, took legal advice as to whether they could not with safety excommunicate him for his intended voyage beyond the limit prescribed in the Shastras, and whether, if they did so, they could be prosecuted under any of the clauses of the Penal Code. The opinion of the lawyers not being favourable to the desired object, they have resorted to a "dodge" to achieve it somehow. A man has been sent up to present a petition to the caste, applying for permission to go to China as a trader; and a general meeting of the caste has been summoned to decide upon the application. The resolution will, of course, be interdictory of travel into foreign countries, subjecting all Hindoos who do so to excommunication. It is intended to apply that resolution to Mr. Kursondas Mooljee.

HERAT.—The struggle under the walls of Herat seems to be no nearer an end than when it began. The snows of winter must now have melted, and unless diplomacy interfere the contest is likely to be maintained. A Persian army has been watching the Ameer within a few marches of the city. The Cabul army has had some difficulty in securing supplies, and the only glimmer of an end is in the fact that the Huzara mountaineers refuse to furnish them, and to pay revenue, until the Ameer proves his might by taking the city. Occasional but ineffectual sallies are still made by the Heratees, who seem to have little difficulty in clandestinely receiving stores. The probable issue is foreshadowed in a statement which occurs in one of the news letters. Sultan Jan is willing to surrender the city if Ufzul Khan, the brave conqueror of Koondooz, or any other of the Ameer's sons, is appointed heir apparent of Cabul instead of Shere Afice Khan, the present heir-apparent. Sultan Ahmed Jan, as head of the Barukzais, next to the Ameer, already plots for power on the old chief's death, and would secure it by setting brother against brother. Mr. Alison, C.B., lately returned to the Court of Persia as our envoy, and it remains to be seen if he has received any instructions from Earl Russell on the subject of Herat.

SEDASHWGHUR.—A correspondent in the Southern Mahratha country writes us:—"I see they are raising an outcry at home about Sedashewghur, and style the sickness there a bugbear. I wish some of the folks who speak so loudly at Manchester had tried the air of the Kyga Ghat three months ago. Their views as to the state of the country, and especially, its sanitary conditions would have undergone a change. It would be instructive to ascertain how many of the poor devils who went down there from the Kolapore and Rutuagherrie districts died from fever on their return home. Round about the Kyga, the favoured site for cotton, the fever was so bad that it amounted to a plague. It was not outsiders only who suffered, but the inhabitants of the surrounding villages were struck down. I should like to know what the Governor thinks of the whole affair. I can guess. I predict that Sedashewghur will never arrive at the greatness which those concerned would have the world look for. I suspect Manchester will some day be the cause of its going down, for as soon as American cotton is to be had in plenty they will soon turn over Indian produce. I hear that Compta Soukars wont move, and that in consequence much cotton will go there as before. However, we shall see. Government is doing its best to get the roads to Beikul finished, or rather made passable, and shortly the new cotton crop will be ready, but whether much of it will take the new line is doubtful. I do not think it is wise to try to force a place into existence as is now being done at Beikul."—Bombay Gazette.

PROHIBITION OF THE SALE OF WINES AT JEDDAH.

—It should be known to merchants and shippers that an arrangement has been concluded by her Majesty's Consul and British Agent at Jeddah with the Governor of that place, prohibiting the commerce by British subjects in wines or spirits at Jeddah, and defining the conditions on which they will be allowed to be imported. The arrangement came into operation on the 1st January, 1863, and is as follows:—

"Jeddah being held to be peculiarly sacred from its situation as the port of the centre of the Mahomedan religion, negotiations have taken place between the British and Ottoman Governments with a view to prohibit the importation to Jeddah of wines or spirits, and orders to that effect having arrived from the Sublime Porte, and her Britannic Majesty's Consul at Jeddah having received instruction from her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople, the following articles have been agreed upon, and every means shall be taken to ensure the due execution, so that, with the exception of a sufficient quantity for the personal use of the British Christian subjects, the importation of wines or spirits at Jeddah shall be prohibited.

"In witness whereof the following articles have been signed by her Britannic Majesty's Consul at Jeddah, the 29th day of November, 1862.

ARTICLE I.

"The commerce in wines or spirits at Jeddah shall be prohibited.

ARTICLE II.

"British Christian subjects shall be permitted to import sufficient wines or spirits for their own personal use, the quantity to be settled each month by the local Government and the British Consul; but taverns shall be prohibited, and no wines or spirits shall be sold to Mussulmans.

ARTICLE III.

"The status quo shall continue until the 1st of January, 1863, on which date the taverns shall be closed, and these articles shall come into operation.

"G. E. STANLEY,

"Her Britannic Majesty's Consul at Jeddah."

The Victoria Cross.

WAR OFFICE, April 16.

The Queen has been graciously pleased to signify her intention to confer the decoration of the Victoria Cross on the undermentioned officers, whose claims to the same have been submitted for her Majesty's approval, on account of acts of bravery performed by them in India, as recorded against their names, viz.:—

THE LATE 13TH BENGAL NATIVE INFANTRY (NOW OF THE BENGAL STAFF CORPS).

Lieutenant (now Capt.) ROBERT HOPE MONCRIEFF AITKEN—For various acts of gallantry performed during the defence of the Residency Lucknow, from June 30 to Nov. 22, 1857:—

1. On three different occasions Lieut. Aitken went into the garden under the enemy's loopholes in the "Captain's Bazaar." On two of these occasions he brought out a number of bullocks which had been left in the garden. Subsequently, on the 3rd July, the enemy having set fire to the Bhooosa Stock in the garden, and it being apprehended that the fire would reach the powder magazine which had been left there, Lieut. Aitken, accompanied by other officers, went into the garden and cut down all the tents which might have communicated the fire to the powder. This was done close to the enemy's loopholes, under a bright light from the flames. It was a most dangerous service.

2. On the night of the 20th of August the enemy, having set fire to the Baillie Guard-gate, Lieut. Aitken was the first man in the gate-way, and, assisted by some sepoy and a water-carrier of his regiment, he partially opened the gate under a heavy fire of musketry, and, having removed the burning wood and straw, saved the gate.

3. On the evening of Sept. 25 this officer led on twelve sepoy of his regiment for the purpose of attacking two guns opposite the gate referred to, in order to prevent their being turned on the late Major gen. Havelock's second column. Having captured them, he attacked and took the Terees Kotee with a small force.

4. On the morning of Sept. 26, with a small party of his regiment, he assaulted and captured the barricaded gateway of the Furreed Bukh Palace, and the palace itself. On this occasion he sprang up against a small wicket gate on the right, and prevented the enemy from shutting it, until, with assistance, it was forced open, and the assaulting party were thus enabled to rush in. The complete success of the attack was solely owing to this officer's distinguished bravery.

5. In a subsequent sortie on Sept. 29 Lieut. Aitken volunteered to take a gun which still continued firing, taking with him four soldiers through the houses and lanes to the gun. The enemy fired on this party from the houses, but they held their ground until a stronger party coming up, the gun was upset from its carriage and taken into the Residency. Another gun was subsequently taken.

THE LATE BOMBAY ENGINEERS (NOW OF THE ROYAL ENGINEERS).

Lieutenant CHARLES AUGUSTUS GOODFELLOW—For gallant conduct at the attack on the Fort of Beyt, on Oct. 6, 1859. On that occasion a soldier of the 28th regiment was shot under the walls of the fort. Lieut. Goodfellow rushed under the walls, under a sharp fire of matchlocks, and bore off the body of the soldier, who was then dead, but whom he at first supposed to be wounded only.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

THE FINANCES OF INDIA.

The financial departments throughout India are now in a state of great activity and order, which we must attribute, of course, to Sir Charles Trevelyan and his able predecessors, Wilson and Laing. The Governor-general, however, having had propositions submitted to him for charging certain items of expenditure under "Debt," in order to exhibit against them receipts from which they are met, has issued a circular, in which his Excellency desires it to be understood that two of the most important objects of the Budget system are—

- 1st. To exhibit once in every year a complete statement of the public income and expenditure; and—
- 2nd. To subject the whole of that income and expenditure to a thorough revision once in every year; and that neither of these objects can be attained by crediting receipts by deduction, and charging expenditure against special receipts. Further, this practice involves a degree of concealment which is quite incompatible with financial lucidity and control.

The Governor-general directs that the entire public income and expenditure—that is, all receipts and disbursements appertaining to Fisc—must be shown, without deduction, on their respective sides of the annual estimates and accounts.

UNCOVENANTED SERVICE FUND.

The Uncovenanted Indian Service is not what it was. There was once as strong a line of demarcation between the regular or Covenanted Services and the Uncovenanted as between gentry and traders. The Uncovenanted sat not at the same tables as the Covenanted—they mixed not in the same circle. They were of a lower social caste. That invidious distinction is no longer upheld, and the Uncovenanted Service, with larger salaries and better prospects, and raised in character by the admission of a very superior order of men, is now treated with proper respect and consideration both by Government and society. We are glad to observe, too, that they are now more prudent and provident than they used to be, and that they act together more harmoniously as a large body. At one time those amongst them who thought themselves superior to the rest kept arrogantly aloof, and seemed unwilling to walk through Coventry with them. There is in the North-West Provinces a well-managed and well-supported Uncovenanted Association Fund, which has about two hundred and fifty subscribers, but as these subscribers are scattered far and wide over the country, the collection of the several subscriptions is attended with some difficulty and delay. The objects of the Association are, the alleviation of distress in cases of abolition of office or unforeseen misfortunes not attributable to moral turpitude or wilful neglect of duty. The Association has lately solicited the local Government to allow of subscriptions to the Fund to be regularly deducted and accounted for by the Civil Paymaster, as it would greatly facilitate the realisation of small sums, and be in some degree an indirect sanction of the Government of the objects of the institution, and this would in all probability bring a large addition to the subscription list. The local Government replied that it had not the power to impose this work on the Civil Paymaster, but as the purposes of the Association were laudable, his Honour the Lieutenant-governor would recommend the Government of India to grant the concession asked for.

THE KHANDALLAH AFFRAY.

As what is called the Khandallah Affray has made some noise in India, and has been very obscurely reported, we may as well briefly state the case as clearly as we can, gathering the details chiefly from the finding of the Magistrate before whom it was brought. Three officers of the 103rd Regiment Royal Bombay Fusiliers, Captain Weir and Lieutenants Bridges and Bogle, and Mr. Tate, a civil engineer, in the employ of the Great Indian Peninsula Railway Company, left Poona, by train, on the 15th of January last, to visit and inspect certain works on the Bhore Ghaut Incline. From the Travellers' Bungalow they were proceeding on foot to the point on the Incline. On their way they came to the Fouzdar's (or Police) Office. Here they saw in custody two syces (or horsekeepers) with horses. The syces appealed to the sahibs, who on inquiry discovered that they were detained on the ground that they had watered their horses, contrary to certain regulations, at the Khandallah tank. Unless they were at once released, they would miss the next train or steamer by which they were to travel. The horses were the property of an officer of the 95th Regiment, who was shortly to embark for Aden. The gentlemen at once took a lively interest in the matter, and endeavoured to persuade the Fouzdar to release the syces with their horses. The Fouzdar neither refused nor consented. As, however, he made no direct and decided opposition, Lieutenants Bridges and Bogle offering to be responsible for doing so, told the men to proceed on their journey. This was of course an irregular, though in some degree an excusable proceeding, as it was suggested by a kindly consideration for a brother officer, the master of the syces and owner of the horses. But as there happened to be a Magistrate within two hundred yards of the Police-office, the gentlemen would have acted with far greater propriety and discretion had they referred the case to him. They had not long left the Thannah when they found the horsekeepers stopped by the police. On their again interposing, Captain Weir, Lieutenants Bridges and Bogle, and Mr. Tate were all furiously assaulted with sticks by fifteen policemen and about fifty villagers, and amidst an immense crowd were forcibly taken back to the Police-office. On the way Mr.

Tate received a severe blow on the head and was faint from loss of blood, but the policemen would not allow his companions to give him some water and a few minutes rest. They even urged on the officers with their bayonets, for it seems that the police were provided with firearms, though we believe it is not usual so to arm them.

Everyone who has been in India knows what it is to invest natives with great power over Englishmen on such an occasion as this, and with what brutality and cowardice a vast native mob will treat two or three of our defenceless countrymen when they have the opportunity, and that, too, without the slightest preliminary inquiry into the cause of offence. Though the four English gentlemen on this occasion cannot be acquitted of having acted in the first instance irregularly and indiscreetly, they by no means merited the insults and blows to which they were exposed, and we are glad that many of their cowardly assailants were condemned to different periods of imprisonment for their offences. The majority of them got five or six months rigorous confinement. We think the offending myrmidons of the police ought to have been not only imprisoned, but dismissed ignominiously from the Government service.

THE LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL.

The Legislative Council at Calcutta has lately done good service to the State. It has passed several Bills, and is preparing others that are calculated to advance the interests of the community, both European and Native. The Religious Endowment Bill will highly gratify all those Christians who were scandalised that British Rulers should act as trustees or managers of funds devoted to the support of institutions for the advancement of the Hindoo or Mahomedan religion. The Government of India, described by Macaulay as the most tolerant in the world, acted on the principle recognised by Locke and many other eminent writers, that the Civil Magistrate should favour no one religion to the prejudice of another; and certainly if that principle ought to be carried out anywhere, it would seem that it should be in a country like India, where such numerous and directly conflicting religions have prevailed for so many ages. But when it is remembered how apt the natives of the country are to misunderstand our acts and attribute them to wrong motives, and that while taking charge of the management of their own religious endowments we have forbidden the introduction of the Bible into Government Schools, and, until very lately, discouraged all Christian Missionary Associations, it is as well that at last the Government has wholly dis severed itself from all connection with Trusts in favour of the Shastres and the Koran, and rid itself of a burden which had been bequeathed to it by their predecessors, and occasioned so much pain, and disgust, and shame, to large bodies of our fellow-countrymen both in India and at home.

Another important measure still in progress through the Calcutta Council, and which has been for a long time under most anxious consideration, and was, indeed, originally proposed at Madras so far back as the year 1857, is a Bill for Registration of Assurances, of which the main object is to check the monstrous system of perjury and forgery which has prevailed in all parts of India in connection with Civil Suits. The Bill has passed through several Committees and is not yet matured, for it is encompassed with many difficulties. It is proposed to a certain extent to make the registration compulsory, but not in all cases. It is agreed that there should be no option in the case of all immovable property above the value of one hundred rupees. The registration of all deeds of gift relating to immovable property is to be made compulsory, by excluding all such deeds, if unregistered, from being received as evidence in the Civil Courts of the country. The provisions of the Bill are to be widely published, that they may be well discussed before they finally pass into law, and the Act, whether amended or in its present state, is not to come into force until the 1st of May, 1864. We may call this cautious and conscientious legislation.

In February last an Act of the Legislative Council at Calcutta, respecting arrest and imprisonment, received the assent of the Governor-general of India, but it has only just been promulgated for general information. The main object of it is to make it lawful for the Executive Government in any part of the British territories in India to authorise the detention or imprisonment in any of those territories of persons sentenced to punishment for Thuggee or Dacoity within the territories of any Native Prince or State in alliance with her Majesty. Oddly enough, perhaps, it will seem to Oriental imaginations, that associated with Thuggee and Dacoity as similar offences against the State, are the famous religious rites of Suttee and Sumadh (burning alive and burying alive). Such a proclamation as this would not have been ventured upon before the time of Lord William Bentinck and Rammohun Roy, who was his lordship's "guide, philosopher, and friend," when he contemplated and put in force the bold measure of the Abolition of Suttee, one of the most memorable acts of his admirable administration.*

A Bill has been submitted to a Select Committee to provide for taking land for works of public utility, to be constructed by private persons or companies, and for regulating the construction and use of work on land so taken.

The Madras Legislative Council has prepared a Bill to declare more precisely the legal efficacy of Wills amongst Hindoos, and to legalise the alienation of self-acquired property of Hindoos in land. By the old Hindoo law no Hindoo, if he had children, could dispose of immovable property. His son, the moment he was born, had a co-ordinate interest in it. On this account some Hindoo fathers take care not to invest their own earnings in land. The law as it stood prevented a father having landed property only, and worried and thwarted by undutiful sons, from making any provision for his daughters or his wife, or for any destitute kinsman.

* What will the old Hindu bigoted party of the Dhurma Sabha say to this? In an eloquent article in the number of the Edinburgh Review just issued, on "India under Lord Canning," in which so much justice is done to that honest and enlightened statesman's Indian administration, the effect of Brahminical influence in Calcutta during the mutiny is alluded to. The Dhurma Sabha is said to have done its best to encourage discontent and mutiny, because it was enraged at "enactments of tolerance that were to it intolerable." They—the bigots of that religious society—were particularly disgusted with the British Government for suppressing the rite of suttee, and for legalising the marriage of Hindu widows.

THE SUN IN INDIA.

THERE is a discussion going on in some of the Indian newspapers respecting the effect of the rays of a tropical sun upon the European constitution. A writer, under the signature of "Tom Cringle," maintains very strenuously that exposure to the sun is favourable to the health of all races of mankind. "God," he says, "made man and beast capable of bearing exposure to the sun," and how then, he asks, can this law of nature be evaded without penalty? The late Lord Elphinstone, though his health was always weak, might, according to this authority, have had a longer lease of life if he had not shut himself up from the sun more than any other Englishman in India. We trust no young men going out to India will be led to brave or defy a tropical sun by such representations as these. It is very true that we find amongst indigo planters and European sportsmen in India as stout and healthy-looking people as any in the world; but then they are usually robust men of naturally fine constitutions, who would be strong and healthy anywhere, and the majority of them have tried the sun only in dry localities and not in the constant vapour-bath of Bengal. Plants, it is urged, languish in the absence of the sun, and so must man; but it is rather the absence of light and air than of burning sunbeams that produces this effect, for we see both men and flowers droop and grow feeble under the direct rays of an Indian sun at noon, especially if from a foreign clime. The white man from England and the English daisy generally wither under an Indian sun, and even native men and plants suffer more or less in a similar way. It is impossible to look at the slight and feeble frame of the Bengalee and observe his apathy and want of spirit without attributing these defects to the terrible heat of an Indian sun shining on low lands. The natives of the Upper Provinces are indeed a very different race, because they breathe a drier atmosphere, and are refreshed and invigorated with cold winters. It is the combination of heat and moisture that is most fatal to health and energy. Arabs and Negroes in dry deserts and on sandy shores can endure a degree of heat that would prostrate the strongest Anglo-Saxon. Even in the driest and clearest atmosphere the direct rays of a burning sun upon the heads of Europeans are like darts of death. Frightful sun-strokes and horrid fevers are but too often the result. No Englishman at the call of duty would shrink from such exposure or from such dangers, but a voluntary and utterly needless defiance of them is a foolhardiness that can scarcely be too severely censured. Of course precautions may be carried to a foolish extreme, as was the case indeed with a very eminent member of the Law Commission in Calcutta, who is said to have never gone out even for a drive at sunset on the Course without taking a thermometer in his carriage to watch the temperature. It has often been observed that too much anxiety to avoid an evil favours its approach, as the dread of cholera predisposes its victim to its deadly influence. No medical man would pretend to propose a law upon this subject that would be adapted to all constitutions, for there are some persons who thrive under conditions immediately fatal to others; but there can be no doubt, from the evil effect of the hot sun in India on the great majority of Europeans, that as a general rule it is safest to avoid its direct rays as rigidly as circumstances will permit.

Dr. Andrew Combe alludes to the salutary stimulus of solar light, and observes that those who live in narrow streets where the sun is never seen, or in lanes or mines, and who are seldom exposed to the light of day, present a sallow, relaxed condition of the skin, and plants, when kept too much in the shade, become pale and feeble. All this is true enough, but in caves and mines and narrow streets there are darkness and want of air, and no one pretends that these conditions are not unwholesome; and no one maintains that an Anglo-Indian should exclude himself from the solar light or from the open air, but only that he should, as much as possible, avoid exposing himself in the hottest parts of the day or year to the direct rays of the sun, which are so often fatal, not to Europeans only, but to the natives of the country. Even indigo planters and others who go much into the open sunshine take care not to uncover their pericraniums to Apollo, for the God of Light is, in Eastern climates, ever armed with a quiver full of golden but poisoned arrows, which he aims directly at the human head. An experienced and prudent European, when exposed to the sun, stuffs a thick pocket-handkerchief into his sola topee, for he well knows that the top of his skull is as vital as the heel of Achilles.

CORRESPONDENCE.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—The Indian press bears a very bad reputation in this country. It is accused of ignorance, scurrility, and a general pettiness of tone unworthy of a parish squire. I believe these charges to be generally unjust. I never hear them made without contradicting them; and I am sorry to say that since my return home the task has been forced upon me very often, both in public and private. Still it cannot be denied that there are journals in India which warrant the above description, and that even those of generally high character occasionally give insertion to statements which would never obtain admission into any paper in this country. Here is an instance of the latter failing in the Englishman. A correspondent of that journal, referring to an account contained in my work, "The Ganges and the Seine," of the disarming of some native troops in the courtyard of Government-house, Calcutta, on "Panis Sunday," 1857—a proceeding which I described as witnessing myself—declares that he "lived close to Government-house at the time, and that nothing of the kind took place." These are his words as nearly as I can remember. Of course they amount only to the assertion that he did not see the disarming; and even if he is prepared to show that he watched during the whole twenty-four hours without taking repose or refreshment, his negative testimony would not invalidate my positive affirmation. But from the remainder of his letter it is clear that he means to accuse me of deliberate falsehood, in declaring that I witnessed an incident which never took place.

The following note, addressed to me by the Hon. Gerald C. Talbot, who was, in 1857, private secretary to Lord Canning, will sufficiently establish my assertion. Colonel Bowie, who confirms Mr. Talbot's statement, was aide-de-camp to Lord Canning at the time:—

"India Store Department,
"Cannon-row, Westminster, S.W.,
"April 8, 1863.

"MY DEAR SIR,—I have now heard from Colonel Bowie, who tells me that the guards disarmed on

"Panic Sunday" were (as I thought) the Barrack-pore Native Guards, supplied monthly for the Calcutta duties, such as the Treasury, Bank of Bengal, Fort, Government-house gateways, stables, &c. The Governor-general's body guard were not disarmed for some time afterwards. There is no doubt whatever of the disarming, part of which I saw myself.—Believe me, very truly yours,

"GERALD C. TALBOT."

The only error, it seems, which I committed, was in describing the troops disarmed as "the Barrackpore troops," whereas I should have said "a portion of the Barrackpore troops." Any reasonable person might have supposed that my statement, if impugned, was capable of explanation. Nevertheless the Englishman inserted the letter without comment, and several other journals copied it with more or less malicious remarks—the Delhi Gazette describing it with affected pity as "cruel." But the Delhi Gazette is decency itself compared with another up-country paper, the Mofussilite. The latter journal, a short time since, described a conversation between the late Dr. Buist, Mr. John Lang, and myself, upon an alleged occasion when Mr. Lang and myself are stated to have dined with the doctor at Allahabad. The Mofussilite gives a circumstantial account of the imaginary banquet, apparently for the purpose of stating that Dr. Buist made some disparaging remarks upon myself after I had left the table. That Dr. Buist was incapable of making the remarks attributed to him I am assured, from the terms of friendship we were upon, and the fact that he was a constant contributor, as a volunteer, to the journal I then edited. But upon this I need not insist. What I wish to state is, that I never dined at Dr. Buist's table in my life, nor with him at the hotel where he stayed; that upon the only occasion when Dr. Buist dined at my house, Mr. Lang was not in the station; and further, that Mr. Lang, Dr. Buist, and myself, never met together upon any occasion at all, by accident or design.

One word more, as I am not partial to intruding myself upon the public more often than I can help. The Delhi Gazette makes an assertion, which, perhaps, accounts for its evident ill-will towards me. It declares that I am the author of an article in the "Temple Bar Magazine" upon the Indian press. I declare that I am not; that I knew nothing of the article until I saw it in print; and that I had no connection with "Temple Bar" until after its publication.—I am, sir, your obedient servant,

London, April 10, 1863.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—APRIL 17.

AFFAIRS OF CHINA.

Colonel SYKES asked the Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs whether the bodies of the officers, British subjects, attached to Ward's Chinese levies, and killed at the attack upon Tai-tsing, were recovered; whether it was true, as stated in the Shanghai newspapers, that two pieces of her Majesty's ordnance were lost at the attack upon Tai-tsing, which were lent by General Staveley to Ward's levies; and whether officers of her Majesty's 31st and 67th Foot, of the Marine Light Infantry, and an officer of the Royal Engineers, were present at the attack upon Tai-tsing, which is beyond the thirty mile radius from Shanghai.

Mr. LAYARD was afraid he could not give a full answer to his questions. It was only that morning he received an account of what had taken place. That account was contained in articles in the China papers, to which the hon. and gallant gentleman alluded. It appeared that an attack had been made by what was called "Ward's force," on a walled town without the thirty miles' radius, on the authority of a Chinese officer, and against the urgent advice of General Staveley. General Staveley, however, allowed Captain Holland, fearing some disasters might arise, to accompany the force. Very unfortunately he did accompany the force. As regarded the recovery of the bodies of British officers, he had no information on the subject. Two guns appeared to have been lost, but he was not aware that they belonged to her Majesty, or whether they had been lent to Ward's force for the purpose of the expedition. Captain Holland was the only officer, he believed, attached to her Majesty's forces who had accompanied the expedition.

MISCELLANEOUS.

APPOINTMENT.—(Foreign-office, April 13.)—The Queen has been pleased to approve of Mr. Julius Achenbach as Consul at Bombay, for his Majesty the King of Sweden and Norway.

THE PENINSULAR AND ORIENTAL COMPANY'S FLEET.—Two of the eight new vessels by which the Peninsular and Oriental Company's already numerous and powerful steam fleet is about to be augmented—viz., the Poonah and the Carnatic, are now ready for sea. The first of these had her official trial trip on Saturday, the 11th instant, and the other was to pass through the same ordeal at the end of last week. The Rangoon, built by Messrs. Samuda, was launched a fortnight since; the Syria, building by Messrs. Day and Co., of the Northam Ironworks, at Southampton, will be ready about September next; the Golconda, by the Thames Ironworks Company, at the end of the year; the Delhi, by Messrs. Wigram, in the spring of 1864; the Baroda, by the Millwall Ironworks and Ship-building Company (Limited), in the summer of 1864; and orders have just been given to the Thames Iron Company to construct a new paddle-steamer which is not yet named. All these vessels are screws, with the exception of the Syria and the one last mentioned. The Poonah, which was taken out for her official trial on Saturday the 11th inst., is a magnificent screw-steamer, built and equipped by the Thames Ironworks Company at Blackwall, under the immediate superintendence of Mr. J. Robinson, the Peninsular and Oriental Company's surveyor, and fitted with engines of 500 horse power nominal by Messrs. Humphrys and Tennant, of Deptford. All the latest improvements to ensure strength, speed, and the comfort and convenience of passengers, have been adopted in her construction, and she is unquestionably one of the most beautiful and handsome vessels afloat. The length of the Poonah is 315 ft.; extreme breadth, 41 ft.; depth of hold, 30 ft.; tonnage, builders' measurement, 2,596; 3,370 tons displacement. She has 609 feet of section and 226 feet of firebar; and her indicated horse power is 2,356. She has a pair of compound engines, on the same principle as those of the Mooltan, but laid horizontally instead of vertically, as in that vessel, and a moment's glance will convince the most unpractised eye that engines of this character are well adapted for ships of war, they being out of the way of all shot. The vessel is steered by Mr. Humphry's hydraulic steering gear, which has been found to answer so well in the Mooltan; and among other numerous ingenious inventions she is fitted with Captain Field's improved compass corrector and course register. There was a large party of scientific and other gentlemen on board on Saturday, the 11th inst., including Captain Nairne, R.N., and Mr. J. Allen, two of the directors; Messrs. Bailey and Holding, assistant managers; Captain Engledeue and Mr. A. Lamb, general and engineering superintendents at Southampton; Messrs. Dinnan, Luke, and Thornton, Admiralty surveyors; Messrs. Rubie and Murray, Board of Trade surveyors; Captain Patey, R.N., Admiralty superintendent of packets at Southampton; Mr. T. Brown, engineer instructor at the Royal Naval College at Portsmouth; Mr. Peter Rolt and Captain Ford, of the Thames Ironworks Company; Messrs. E. Humphrys and C. Tennant, engine-builders; Mr. J. Y. Messum, R.N., Captain G. A. C. Brooker, R.N.; Lord Allen Churchill, Lord Alfred Churchill, the Lord Mayor of London, Captain Lovell, Captain Kirton, Mr. P. Hedger, Mr. Whytt, Mr. Pinsent, Mr. A. Grey, Mr. A. S. Lamb; Mr. R. Lodge, manager of the Marine Insurance Company, &c. Leaving Southampton at eleven o'clock, the Poonah, under the command of Captain J. S. Field, proceeded direct to Stokes-bay, where she ran the measured mile four times, the result being as follows:—First run, 4 minutes 4 seconds, equal to 14.754 knots per hour, 64 revolutions; second run, 4 minutes 52 seconds, equal to 12.329 knots, 64 revolutions; third run, 4 minutes 11 seconds, equal to 14.342 knots, 61 revolutions; fourth run, 4 minutes 51 seconds, equal to 12.371 knots, 63 revolutions: the true mean of the whole being 13.301 knots per hour. Pressure of steam, 25 lb.; vacuum, 25; weight of coals, water, &c., on board, 893 tons. She ran on an even keel, the draft of water being 19 ft. 11 in., both fore and aft. When at full speed the ship made a complete turn in eight minutes. The machinery worked in the freest manner throughout the trial, and the ship and engine builders were alike complimented by all the scientific judges on board on the success which had attended their efforts in the production of this noble specimen of nautical architecture. After partaking of a sumptuous dejeuner in the chief saloon, under Captain Nairne's presidency, a few loyal and other toasts were drunk, among which that of success to the good ship Poonah occupied a prominent place. The Poonah left Southampton on her first ocean voyage, with the outward India, China, and Australian mails, of the 20th instant.

INDIAN TEA.—The following, on tea cultivation in India, is from a circular of Messrs. Travers and Sons:—"East India Tea Plantations.—The extension of tea cultivation in India continues to excite much attention both in that country and on this side; and while there can be no doubt that in many instances the prospect will be presented of large profits from this description of enterprise, it is equally certain that a number of needy speculators are endeavouring to take advantage of the movement to get up companies and to foist off worthless lands. It is, therefore, desirable that exact information should, as far as possible, be obtained from every source. Unfortunately, however, the accounts furnished in the official documents from time to time moved for in Parliament are too fragmentary and too much mixed up with tedious and petty details to be of great service. The last paper issued embraces a quantity of official formalities of various dates, from 1857 down to the present time. The most interesting portions relate to the state of the cultivation of the plant in the Punjab and in the Madras Presidency. With regard to the Punjab, it is stated that from the Kalee in Kumaon to the Ravee in the Kohistan of the Punjab, the cultivation is being actively and energetically carried on both by European and native capitalists, and that the day is not far distant when we may expect to see tea exported from the British Himalayas as its staple article of produce, and the hills made lucrative instead of as at present, a drag on the revenues of the country. 'In a few years,' it is added, 'the Dehra Dhoon, the most attractive spot in the North-West Provinces to the European settler, will become a great tea-garden.' In every direction tea plantations are springing up, and the two requisites to make them universal are a system of drainage and of water supply for drinking purposes and irrigation. With regard to the Madras Presidency, it appears that the cultivation is still, in some degree, in an experimental stage, and that the majority of such plantations as have been formed will require at least two or three years before their quality can be fully tested. It is stated, however, that there can be no doubt that the tea shrub grows well on the Neilgherries, and that, according to the opinion of Dr. McPherson, who has paid much attention to tea-planting and manufacturing in different parts of the country, there are already some plantations where tea has arrived to a condition in which a correct system of manufacture is alone necessary to render it equal, if not superior, to the tea grown in the lower ranges of the Himalayas. Under these circumstances the Madras Government have, with the consent of the India Council, obtained from the Governor General at Calcutta the services of two qualified tea manipulators from the North-Western Provinces for three years."

ORDER OF THE BATH.—(War-office, April 11.)—The Queen has been graciously pleased to give orders for the appointment of Colonel Neville Bowles Chamberlain, C.B., of the Bengal Army, to be an Ordinary Member of the Military Division of the Second Class, or Knights Commanders of the Most Honourable Order of the Bath.

DRAFTS ON INDIA.—The biddings for 45,00,000 rupees (£456,000) in bills on India, took place on Wednesday, the 15th inst., at the Bank of England. The amount allotted was 31,40,000 rupees in the following proportions: viz., to Calcutta, 14,20,000 to Bombay, 16,00,000 rupees; and to Madras, 1,20,000 rupees. The declared minimum price was 1s. 11½d. per rupee on Calcutta; 1s. 11½d. on Bombay and Madras, being ¼d. lower than the minimum rates for some months past. The applications within the limits were for about 57 lacs. Tenders on Calcutta and Madras will receive in full; those on Bombay, at 2s., will receive about 43 per cent., and all above that price in full.

THE COMMERCIAL NAVIGATION COMPANY OF INDIA has been announced with an A capital of £300,000, with power to increase, and £13,000 in B stock, the first issue to comprise £150,000, in 3,000 shares of £50 each. The object in view is to provide efficient transport for the traffic on the Ganges, and the subsequent extension of operations to the other rivers in India. It appears that the directors have entered into provisional arrangements with the East India Steam Navigation Company for the purchase of their vessels on the following terms:—"£15,000 in cash, that being the amount advanced by the directors of that company to pay off all liabilities; and £13,000 in B stock of this company, such stock not being entitled to dividends in any year until 10 per cent. has been paid upon the amount of the A capital for the time being paid up; when in any year the profits shall be more than enough to pay 10 per cent. on both the A and B capital the surplus will be divided between each capital pro rata." A satisfactory feature is the intimation that there is to be no "promotion" money.

ORIENTAL BANK CORPORATION.—At the annual meeting of the Oriental Bank Corporation, held on the 16th inst., Mr. G. H. Gordon in the chair, the report submitted to the shareholders stated that the balance-sheet for 1862 showed a net profit of £193,178. 14s. 6d., after defraying current expenses and making provision for all bad and doubtful debts. Of this sum, the directors had already divided £88,200, or 7 per cent. of the year's profits, leaving to be dealt with £104,978. 14s. 6d., and they now proposed to declare a dividend of 5 per cent. and a bonus of 3 per cent., making a total distribution of 15 per cent. for 1862. The proposed dividend will amount to £100,000, or £2 per share, payable free of income-tax on or after May 1, leaving £1,578. 14s. 6d. to be carried to the next account. The chairman stated that the deposits showed a considerable increase—a gratifying proof of the continued confidence of the public. The notes and bills also showed an increase, the augmentation within the year amounting to £1,500,000. The business of the bank, the chairman stated, was still increasing, despite the competition, for at present there was a greater amount of banking provision for the East than was really needed. He further observed that, during the twelve years of the bank's existence, the board had repaid the capital, and given the proprietors 160 per cent. besides; and he had no doubt they would be able to maintain their position in the race of banking competition. In reply to questions, the chairman stated that the state of the bank at Melbourne was most satisfactory, and that no loss had been sustained by the opium frauds.

ON THE SUPPLY OF QUININE AND THE CULTIVATION OF CHINCHONA PLANTS IN INDIA.—The advantages which the important and beneficial measure of introducing chinchona cultivation are likely to confer upon India may be considered under three heads—1st. In their bearings in relation to the State by providing an abundant and certain supply of bark for the use of hospitals and troops; and effecting a saving of many thousands of pounds. 2nd. As a commercial speculation, and a means of adding to the resources of the country. And, 3rd, though not least, as a boon to the people, by bringing the remedy within the reach of frequenters of jungles, and of the native population generally. The Government, by working their own plantations, will eventually save at least £20,000 a year, while they will secure a large and unfailing source of quinine supply for their own servants, the importance of which it is impossible to exaggerate. Dr. Macpherson, of Calcutta, tells us that since quinine has been extensively used among the troops in India, there has been a steady diminution of mortality; and whereas in 1830 the average percentage of deaths to cases of fever treated was 3.66, in 1856 it was only 1 per cent. in a body of 18,000 men scattered from Peshawar to Pegu. We next come to the consideration of chinchona cultivation in its commercial aspect, and as a good investment for capital. Private enterprise will be supplied with plants from the Government nurseries in the Neilgherries; 20,000 are to be sold this year, at four annas (sixpence) a piece, and next year a much larger quantity will be available. As many as 35,000 have already been ordered by companies and private planters, and there can be no doubt that, as soon as land can be had, the demand will be almost unlimited. When it is considered that it will not cost more than two annas (three-pence) to produce a pound of red bark, which is now selling at from half-a-crown to eight shillings in the London market, there is every reason to think that men of business will not overlook so promising an investment, and that the great difference between the cost of production and the value of the produce will give chinchona cultivation a good name as a safe speculation, in combination with coffee, the former beginning at the upper limit of the latter in the same clearing.—Social Science Review.

ARRIVAL OF TROOPS FROM INDIA.—The Renown, East Indiaman, arrived at Spithead on the 15th inst., from Calcutta, which port she left on the 17th of January, bringing home, under the command of Lieutenant-colonel Bouchier, R.A., four officers, 138 men, 13 women, and 28 children. The Newcastle, Indiaman, also arrived at Spithead on the same day with the troops under the command of Major Brownlow, consisting of five officers, 150 men, together with 7 women, and 21 children. The military invalids were transferred to Netley Hospital on the 16th. The Newcastle left Calcutta on the same day as the Renown.

STUDENT INTERPRETERS IN THE EAST.—Earl Russell has intimated to the Chancellor of the Queen's University in Ireland his willingness to nominate one gentleman of the University as a candidate to be examined by the Civil Service Commissioners for a student interpretership in China, Japan, or Siam.

THE PERSIAN EMBASSY.—Mr. Alison, her Majesty's Minister at Teheran, whose arrival en route for Persia we recently mentioned, left again for London last week, to answer, it is said, charges preferred by Mr. Eastwick, his late secretary of legation, who has been recalled and provisionally dismissed the service, for having, as our information states, addressed certain clandestine reports against his chief to the Foreign Office. Mr. Eastwick is now on his way, via Bagdad and Aleppo, to London.—Levant Herald, April 8.

Each Young Lady is requested to bring a Silver Fork, Desert Spoon (which will be returned), and six Towels.
 A Quarter's Notice is requested previously to the removal of a Pupil.

The Misses WINTERBOTTOM can give most unexceptionable references.

A LADY, who has for many years conducted a superior School will be happy to RECEIVE into her Establishment YOUNG LADIES from India or the Colonies. The system of Education is based on the modern and intelligent plan of cultivating the understanding rather than crowding the memory. To those who value thorough Christian principles, combined with home comforts and a superior Education, this Establishment can be highly recommended. Testimonials from ministers and others.

For further particulars apply to Miss MASON, Agency for the Employment of Ladies, 12, Cranley-terrace, Fulham-road, London, S.W.

A WIDOW LADY, residing in the best and most healthy part of Notting-hill, RECEIVES a few YOUNG LADIES to Educate with her own Children, upon moderate terms. Parents residing abroad are assured that every endeavor will be made to promote the comfort and happiness of a home with the advantages of a School. From the proximity of Notting-hill to the West-end of London, the most accomplished professors of music, drawing, &c., can be engaged, when required, upon moderate terms.

Address Miss BLAIR LEIGHTON, Land-down-crescent, Notting-hill. References: Prof. FARADAY, D.C.L., &c., &c., Royal Institution of Great Britain, London; and Messrs. BOOSKY and SONS, 24 and 26, Holles-street.

MILITARY EDUCATION.—The Rev. CHARLES J. HUGHES, M.A. (Wangler, Cambridge 1852), Rector of Perrivale (population 32), begs to inform his Friends that he has REMOVED from the Finchley-road to his Residence (built expressly for him), CASTLE-BAR-CURT, EALING, W., where he receives both Senior and Junior Pupils to prepare for the Army, Military Colleges, and the Civil Service.

MILITARY AND NAVAL EDUCATION.—A MARRIED CLERGYMAN, resident at Brighton, RECEIVES a limited number of PUPILS, between the ages of Twelve and Fifteen, who may be destined for the Military and Naval Professions. With a view to this ultimate object, the entire course of Study, from the outset, is regulated expressly in conformity with the requirements of the Examinations at Addiscombe, Sandhurst, Woolwich, and Portsmouth; and every care is taken to direct special attention to those subjects likely to prove professionally useful in the future career of the Naval or Military officer. The Pupils are examined periodically in Mathematics by Professor J. R. Young, formerly of Belfast College, and Author of "A Course of Mathematics, Pure and Mixed, for the Use of Candidates for the Military and Civil Service Examinations," &c.; and also in Classics and Modern Languages by Scholars of repute. Prospectuses may be had of Messrs. ALLEN and Co., 13, Waterloo-place, London, S.W.

HINDOOSTANI AND PERSIAN.

LESSONS in the above LANGUAGES are given by an INDIAN GENTLEMAN of Twenty Years' Experience as Professor, Interpreter, and Translator; who has obtained Certificates of degrees of honour and proficiency from the Examiners of the College of Fort William. He possesses the most satisfactory testimonials, and can give unexceptionable references.
 Address, "ALLY," care of Messrs. ALLEN and Co., 13, Waterloo-place, S.W.

GENTLEMEN WITH TENDER FEET.

J. CHAPPELL, 388, Strand, W.C., Boot-maker, and Professor of Fitting, begs to call the attention of such to his method of measuring, by which he guarantees, at the first trial, to produce a fit unprecedented for comfort, yet combined with the most fashionable shape. These gentlemen on whom boot-makers have practised unsuccessfully are particularly solicited by J. C., who will undertake to fit them at once, however difficult. Established 1825. Inventor of the "Pulvinar" or Cushion Boots. Ladies' show rooms first floor.

FIRE! THIEVES!! FIRE!!!

C. H. GRIFFITHS having purchased nearly all the best quality of Fire-proof Safes from the International Exhibition of 1862, including those made by Messrs. Perry, Chatwood, Rhodes, and other eminent makers, is enabled to offer them at half the original cost. The patented improvements of the latter maker render it an impossibility for fire to take any effect under any circumstances of time and place. In consequence of the increasing demand for these essential and valuable repositories, which no house of business, or, indeed, private house (where plate, books, and documents are kept) should be without, in these hazardous and dangerous times, C. H. G. has taken additional premises, 3, Pantonville-road, opposite the Angel, Islington, where he is anxious to keep a variety of Second-hand Safes by those eminent large makers, Milner, Price, Mordan, &c., at half the price of new. Sketches, with prices, free by post.
 23, Cannon-street West, St. Paul's, London; and opposite the Angel, Islington.

EVERY MAN WHO IS "WIDE-AWAKE" will instantly make use of PARR'S LIFE PILLS, when he finds that he ought to do something to improve the state of his health. Persons who are suffering from headache or indigestion, arising from constitutional inaction, biliary derangement, or over indulgence at the table, are particularly recommended to try Parr's Pills. They have never been known to fail in affording immediate relief. May be obtained of any medicine vendor, in boxes, 1s. 1d., 2s. 9d.; and in family packets, 11s. each.

SAUCE.—LEA AND PERRINS' WORCESTERSHIRE SAUCE.

This delicious condiment, pronounced by Connoisseurs

"THE ONLY GOOD SAUCE,"

is prepared solely by LEA & PERRINS.

The Public are respectfully cautioned against worthless imitations, and should see that LEA & PERRINS' Names are on Wrapper, Label, Bottle, and Stopper.

ASK FOR LEA AND PERRINS' SAUCE.

Sold Wholesale and for Export, by the Proprietors, Worcester; Messrs. CROSS & BLACKWELL; Messrs. Barclay and Sons, London; &c., &c.; and by Grocers and Oilmen universally.

NOTHING IMPOSSIBLE.—The greatest and most useful invention of the day, AQUA AMARELLA.—Messrs. JOHN GOSNELL and Co., Three King-court, Lombard-street, Perfumers to Her Majesty, respectfully offer to the public this truly marvellous fluid, which gradually restores the human hair to its pristine hue—no matter at what age. The Aqua Amarelli has none of the properties of dyes; it, on the contrary, is beneficial to the system, and when the hair is once restored one application per month will keep it in perfect colour. Price one guinea per bottle.

NO MORE ERUPTIONS on the SKIN.—MOLLARD'S PERFUMED TOILET SULPHUR SOAP and CREAM, entirely free from any unpleasant smell, and are sovereign remedies against fever, local or chronic cutaneous eruptions, rheumatism, pains in the joints, &c. The Cream possesses all the properties of the renowned Barège Waters for baths. Recommended by the most eminent physicians. Prospectus and testimonials sent on application.

Sold wholesale and retail by F. Newberry and Sons, 45, St. Paul's-churchyard; Dietrichsen and Hannay, 63, Oxford-street; G. Jozeau, 49, Haymarket; T. Keating, 79, St. Paul's-churchyard; P. A. Gerard, 399, Strand; Bannbridge and Pound, 60, Leather-lane; and at the Central Depot, 2, Rupert-street, Coventry-street, W.

CORYZINE.—This invaluable, non-sternutative POWDER, employed like Snuff, affords instantaneous relief in incipient cases of cold, Influenza or Coryza, the sense of suffocation with excessive secretion supervening, being in both cases effectually removed. To those subject to this distressing complaint it is confidently recommended as a sure remedy.

Sold in Boxes at 1s. 1d. and 2s. 9d.; post free, 1s. 3d. and 3s. 1d. in stamps, by MARSHALL and MELLIN, English and Foreign Chemists, 16, Tielborne-street, opposite the County Fire Office, Regent-street.

THE BEAUTIES of the EAST.—All that can preserve and enhance the charms of woman, youth, and beauty.—Madame RACHEL begs leave to inform the nobility, aristocracy, and her lady patrons, that she has just received a costly consignment of ARABIAN PREPARATIONS, which render the hair, teeth, and complexion beautiful beyond comparison; and the choicest Arabian perfumes—the essence of which was presented in golden vases by the ladies of Paris to the Empress Eugénie, and have gained for her the patronage of royalty.—Can be selected at, or forwarded from, her Drawing-room Saloon, 47a, New Bond-street.

"INDIAN BAE" for Diarrhoea, Dysentery, &c. Imported by J. G. GOULD, Pharmaceutical Chemist, 198, Oxford-street, corner of Orchard-street, Portman-square, W.

RUPTURES.—BY ROYAL LETTERS PATENT.

WHITE'S MOC-MAIN LEVER TRUSS is allowed by upwards of two hundred medical gentlemen to be the most effective invention in the curative treatment of HERNIA. The use of a steel spring, so hurtful in its effects, is here avoided, a soft bandage being worn round the body, while the requisite resisting power is supplied by the MOC-MAIN PAD and PATENT LEVER, fitting with so much ease and closeness that it cannot be detected, and may be worn during sleep. A descriptive circular may be had, and the Truss (which cannot fail to fit), forwarded by post, on the circumference of the body two inches below the hips being sent to the manufacturer.

Quintessence of Jamaica Ginger and Camomile.

GINGER has long been deservedly known as an excellent domestic medicine, and, combined with camomile, it is the most efficient stomachic tonic known, for while the ginger relieves the stomach from distension and flatulency, arising from impaired digestion, the camomile strengthens the coats of the stomach, and by that means gives it a healthy and invigorating tone. So highly concentrated is this preparation, it is unimpaired by age or climate, and well adapted for exportation. In Gout, Spasms, Dysentery, Cholera, or those complaints incidental to tropical climates, it is invaluable, as in numerous cases a dose or two has checked and frequently cured most alarming attacks. No family should be without it. Sold in half-pints, quarter-pints, and one-eighth pints.

Agreeable Sedlitz Powder, in one bottle, protected by a case, with measure and spoon included. The advantage of this preparation is the perfect combination of the solid ingredients of the Sedlitz Spring in one compound powder.

It is very cooling and refreshing, well adapted for exportation, or travellers by land or sea.

Aromatic Tincture of Quinine.—For the prevention of Fever, Intermittent or Remittent Ague, and other effects of Malaria.

No person exposed to the influence or predisposing cause of Fevers should be without it, for it taken in small doses daily the system will become so thoroughly impregnated with its principles as to be rendered proof against all attacks of Contagion or Malaria.—Sold in vials, half-pints, and quarter-pints.

The above articles prepared only by THOS. WILKINSON (late Wilkinson, Bridge, & Co.), 270, Zeeant-street, London, W.

To prevent spurious imitations, please to observe that the words "KEATING'S COUGH LOZENGES" are engraved on the Government Stamp of each Box, without which none are genuine.

KEATING'S COUGH LOZENGES.

JUDGED BY THE IMMENSE DEMAND,

this UNIVERSAL REMEDY now stands the first in public favour and confidence; this result has been acquired by the test of fifty years' experience. These Lozenges may be found on sale in every British Colony, and throughout India and China they have been highly esteemed wherever introduced. For COUGHS, ASTHMA, and all affections of the Throat and Chest, they are the most agreeable and efficacious remedy.

Prepared and sold in Boxes, Tins, and Bottles of various sizes by THOMAS KEATING, Chemist, &c., 79, St. Paul's Churchyard, London. Sold retail by all Druggists and Patent Medicine Vendors in the World.

PRITCHARD'S DANDELION, CAMO-

MILE, RHUBARB, and GINGER PILLS.—This peculiar preparation of Dandelion acts particularly on the liver, thus avoiding the use of mercurials, and will be found invaluable to patients suffering from a sluggish state of that organ, or who have resided in India or other hot climates; whilst the well known stomachic efficacy of camomile, rhubarb, and ginger, renders these pills the most happy combination possible; and as many are at a loss for a safe remedy they will find this medicine a great convenience, which may be resorted to by all persons at any age, under any circumstances, and without the least inconvenience.

Prepared by W. Pritchard, Apothecary, 65, Charing-cross, London, in bottles, 1s. 1d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., and 11s. May be had of all Medicine Vendors.

DINNEFORD'S PURE FLUID MAGNE-

SIA has been, during twenty-five years, emphatically sanctioned by the Medical Profession, and universally accepted by the Public, as the Best Remedy for Acidity of the Stomach, Heartburn, Headache, Gout, and Indigestion, and as a Mild Aperient for delicate constitutions, more especially for Ladies and Children. When combined with the Acidulated Lemon Syrup, it forms an agreeable Effervescent Draught, in which its Aperient qualities are much increased. During Hot Seasons, and above all, in Hot Climates, the regular use of this simple and elegant remedy has been found highly beneficial.

It is prepared in a state of perfect purity and of uniform strength by DINNEFORD and Co., 172, New Bond-street, London; and sold by all respectable Chemists throughout the World.

TWOFOLD EXTRAORDINARY CURE

EFFECTED BY HOLLOWAY'S PILLS and OINTMENT.—Mr. J. Webb, Boot and Shoemaker, Chapel-street, Cheshire, Ireland, writes under date Jan. 10, 1863, that he had been afflicted for seventeen years with a most dreadful asthmatic cough and shortness of breath, and latterly was also subject to benumbed sensations in his limbs, attended with heavy drowsy feelings, which threatened an apoplectic fit. In alarm he consulted the most skillful of the profession within many miles of his residence without avail, and fruitlessly used every means recommended by friends till he heard of the repute of Holloway's remedies, and resolved, with death staring him in the face, to give them a trial. They immediately relieved him, and ultimately cured him.

THE POLISH CAPTIVITY:

An Account of the present Position and Prospects of the Poles in the Kingdom of Poland, and in the Polish Provinces of Austria, Prussia, and Russia.

By H. SUTHERLAND EDWARDS, Author of "Russians at Home."

"A portion of this book on Poland by Mr. Sutherland Edwards has already appeared in our columns, though apparently such a small portion that it is substantially a new as well as a highly opportune production."—The Times, April 2, 1863.

"Mr. Sutherland Edwards not only understands his subject, but what is far more important and uncommon, his readers. He tells his audience precisely the facts which they are desirous to know. The 'Polish Captivity' is full of light but suggestive sketches, pièces justificatives of historic value, national songs and stories, descriptions of Polish towns, Polish notabilities, and Polish women, and is, besides, a book an English lady might read with twice the ease of Mr. Trollope's latest novel."—Spectator, March 28, 1863.

"The book in which Mr. Sutherland Edwards has depicted the 'Polish Captivity' would have been valuable at any time, but the opportuneness of its arrival so enhances its merits, that it is certain to command a greater than ordinary success. It is a subject which few writers are competent to deal with, but Mr. Edwards possesses special qualifications for the task. Personal experience has made him well acquainted with Poland and the Poles; the interest he takes in their fortunes has led him to study the question of their wrongs with zeal and assiduity, and his acquaintance with Slavonic languages enables him to make use of stores of information which are unserviceable to the ordinary student. Consequently, he is entitled to speak with authority, and his opinions on the condition, feelings, and prospects of the various nations which he describes deserve a very different hearing from that which we should give to the crude theories formed by a careless traveller passing hastily through an unfamiliar land."—London Review, March 28, 1863.

"Mr. Sutherland Edwards visited Poland in the interval between the Warsaw massacre and the breaking out of the insurrection. What he saw he has described simply, but forcibly. Few English writers are so likely as he to form a correct judgment on any matter connected with Russia or Poland. His acquaintance with each of these countries, its people, its language, and its literature, gives him advantages which few other travellers possess. In wandering with him about the streets of Warsaw, we feel that we are in the hands of a trustworthy guide, one who can tell us what the people are chattering about, and who can explain the written mysteries which, under the veil of an unknown tongue, elude our baffled eyes. Mr. Edwards's book will be read with deep interest. It is well written, and the narratives are well constructed."—Athenæum, March 21, 1863.

MAILS TO INDIA.

Mails to India and China, via Marseilles, are despatched from London as follows, viz.:—Those for Bombay packets, on the evening of the 3rd and 18th of each month; and those for Calcutta packets (including mails for Ceylon, Madras, and China), on the evenings of the 10th and 26th of each month. When any of these dates falls on a Sunday, the mails are made up on the following evening.

Letters and Newspapers can be forwarded to any part of India, via Bombay and Marseilles, and in most cases will reach their destination some days sooner than if despatched by the following Calcutta mail. The Bombay mails via Southampton, however, are no longer available for the transmission of Letters or Newspapers to the Madras Presidency.

Mails for the Mediterranean and all parts of India and China, except the Bombay Presidency, are despatched via Southampton on the mornings of the 4th and 20th, or, when either of these dates falls on Sunday, upon the previous evening.

Mails for the Mediterranean, the Presidency of Bombay, and Upper or North-West Provinces of Bengal and China, are despatched via Southampton, on the 12th and 27th of the month, except when these dates fall on Sunday, in which case they are forwarded on the previous evening.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

THE Viceroy and the Commander-in-Chief are still pursuing their respective political and military progresses, in spite of the increasing heat of the weather.

Sir William Mansfield left Bombay on the 11th of March for Poona and Mahabeshwur, to inspect the troops there. The headquarters of the army will be removed to the latter station on his arrival.

From Central Asia we have no very late news of importance. There was no immediate prospect of a termination of the strife at Herat. One sharp engagement had ended adversely to the besiegers. The Ameer is said to be in a very bad state of health.

The officers of the Bengal army have started the question of whether they are obliged to continue their subscriptions to the Military Fund. It was referred to the Government of India, and the Government of India has referred it to the Secretary of State for India, who, it is argued in India, will probably take advantage of it in support of his scheme of abolition and absorption of whatever capital stands to the credit of the Fund in the Indian accounts.

Ceylon and Madras commemorated the marriage of the Prince and Princess of Wales, but strangely enough no notice was taken of the event by the Bengal Government—not even a public holiday was given; and yet it was just the sort of occasion on which the natives of India would have joined their British fellow-subjects in a brilliant demonstration of goodwill towards their future sovereign.

The large native town of Gnyoungtoon (Yandoon) in Burmah has been destroyed by a fire which originated in the burning down of jungle in the neighborhood.

It appears that about £40,000 have been remitted to England for the Lancashire Relief Fund, and the Indian press expresses an opinion that it is time to draw the Indian subscription to a close, "the funds of the different committees at home being now ample." This is a sad mistake, for the very day on which we read this statement from India is the Legislature to be moved to assist public benevolence. After a large province of the empire has been sustained by voluntary contributions for half a year, our suffering fellow countrymen are as ill off as ever. Half a million of honest people willing to work have been for six months on workhouse or prison diet, and they are yet without the hope of "fair pay for fair work."

The rate of exchange for bills to be drawn in repayment of advances to be made by the several Governments in India for the service of the Royal Navy and for the public service in China in the official year 1863-64 has been fixed, with the concurrence of the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury, at 2s. the rupee. The same rate to be observed in respect of officers' family remittances.

The 91st Foot has been transferred from the Madras to the Bengal Presidency.

Rajah Sir James Brooke has returned to the East, and has resumed his post at Borneo as head of the Government. The Rajah's kingdom is said to be in a flourishing condition.

Commanding officers of the new Artillery Brigade formed in India are required to report home to the Horse Guards, and immediately, all casualties amongst artillery officers, giving the date, place, and cause of each casualty. The death of any officer in Europe is in like manner to be reported to the Horse Guards, instead of to the Presidency to which he belonged. Thus the deceased officer's corps will gain the advantage of the promotion much sooner than under the existing arrangement, whilst by all promotions being carried out in one office all doubts and difficulties will, it is expected, after the first start of the new system, be done away with.

The most interesting of late events in Calcutta was the annual commemoration of the University there. Six Hindu students have obtained a degree of Master of Arts, and one the degree of Doctor of Medicine. There were also twenty-five Bachelors of Law, and a few Bachelors of Art. The vice-chancellor, Mr. Erskine, delivered an address which is said to be not unworthy of the grandson of Sir James Mackintosh in grave thought and elegance of expression, though it was not remarkable for energy or fire, and was given in so low a tone of voice that comparatively few in the assembly heard it. Very great complaints are made that on so interesting an occasion the ceremony was not made more imposing. We gave a condensed account of this affair in our last number.

Mr. John Dalziel, eighteen years police magistrate of Colombo, is now on his way to England. He was once in his youth in the British army, and served under Wellington at Waterloo.

Justice is rather severe on the youthful at Ceylon. A native lad having been convicted of an assault on some person, the boy was sentenced by Mr. Justice Thompson to one hundred lashes. The Governor, fearing perhaps that such a punishment might prove fatal, remitted the sentence.

Our home obituary records the death at St. Malo, France, on April 16, of Colonel James Fagan, at the advanced age of seventy-five. He was for some time Adjutant-General of the Bengal army, with whom he was extremely popular. He was a fine specimen of a true Irish gentleman, at once frank and courteous.

The plague of locusts in Scinde and the Punjab has reached a terrible extreme. The Government has been induced to bribe the villagers to bury large bagsful of eggs, of which each female locust is said to lay about a hundred on the long spikes of the acacia. The eggs adhere together like the grains of an ear of corn.

The cash balances in India have really reached about twenty millions sterling. There is a great rise in Government securities; the Four per Cents. are already at par. The press of India, which was once unanimous in its support of the income-tax, is now earnest in favour of its abolition.

The plan of giving "cattle shows" in the Madras Presidency appears to answer. The Governor of Madras's prize, a gold ring, was delivered to the successful competitor at the cattle show of 1863, held in Vellore in January, when other prizes were distributed. "The much coveted prize (writes Mr. Dykes, collector of Nellore, to the Board of Revenue) has, I believe, passed into the hands of a native landholder and breeder of stock, likely to show himself worthy of the honour." Mr. Dykes recommends a persistence in the prize system. The amount of prizes sanctioned for the show of 1863 was Rs. 1,250. The prizes were distributed under the direction of Lieutenants Smalley and Nighmoor.

The claims of the owners, captain, and crew of the P. and O. Company's steamer Colombo, as salvors of the ship Fort George, have been adjudicated in the High Court of Calcutta. On the 8th of October last the Fort George was found by the Colombo in the Bay of Bengal, totally dismasted. Rs. 50,000 were awarded to the salvors, of which Rs. 7,500 were to be apportioned to Captain Farquhar, of the Colombo, as an acknowledgment of his sagacity and promptitude. The owners are to receive Rs. 35,000, and the officers and crew Rs. 7,500 to be distributed amongst them in proportion to their wages. The salvors were granted their costs.

Three Europeans have lately been tried in Calcutta for causing the death of natives.

Mr. Benjamin Hallyar, an officer on one of the Indian railways, has been tried in the High Court of Calcutta on a charge of having caused grievous bodily harm to Mertal Kurregur, by throwing a brick so rashly or negligently as to endanger human life. Under the old law he would have been tried for manslaughter. It appears that he was talking angrily with a locomotive clerk, and, hoisting a brick in his hand for some time, when with a sudden jerked it away amongst some coal whom he and the clerk were quarrelled. The brick struck one of them, Mertal Kurregur, behind the ear. The man fell down insensible. Mr. Hallyar immediately ran to the poor fellow, bathed his head with cold water, and exhibited the greatest anxiety and distress. The coolie died some days after of inflammation of the brain. As Mr. Hallyar bore a good character as a quiet, humane, and well-conducted young man, the jury took a favourable view of the case, and pronounced him not guilty; and, certainly, he was not guilty of actual murder, but he was decidedly guilty of what he was charged with—namely, "having caused grievous bodily hurt by throwing a brick rashly and negligently, so as to endanger human life." As the late Mertal Kurregur was the only son and only support of his mother, the judge recommended Mr. Hallyar to make some provision for her, and Mr. Hallyar expressed his willingness to act on his lordship's advice. Mr. Hallyar got off pretty easily, but his countrymen, William Hardy and Peter Kelly, were not so fortunate. The latter, an artilleryman, threw a brick at a native of the name of Peeroo Metter. The brick struck the man on the head, and killed him. William Hardy, a police inspector, struck a Mahomedan, Mahomed Hossein Khan, with his clenched fist. The poor man groaned three times, and then died almost immediately. Peter Kelly was sentenced to eighteen months' rigorous imprisonment, and William Hardy to one year's rigorous imprisonment. These cases ought to teach young Englishmen fresh from home that it is dangerous to deal too roughly with the feeble native of Bengal.

Several vacancies have lately occurred in the Correspondence Departments of the Home Establishment of the Secretary of State for India by the death of C. F. Shepherd, Esq., the retirement of W. H. Batten, Esq., and the resignation of J. R. McInnes, Esq.

On the recommendation of Captain Taylor, the officiating consulting engineer to Government, special trains for the Post-office mails are to be abolished on the Bengal portion of the East Indian Railway, their use having proved a source of inconvenience and danger—on single lines more especially. The Government inform the Director-General of the Post-office in India "that it seems to be quite within his power to have the regular Calcutta mail brought down by the Agra day passenger train in time for despatch by the six A.M. train from Benares. If the sorting at Benares were dispensed with, either by establishing sorting carriages or by ordering the Calcutta mail to be made up separately at all stations, three hours would be saved, and the time between Allahabad and Benares reduced."

The Bank of Madras raised its rate of discount one per cent. on the 24th ult., and also increased its rates of advance on Government securities.

Earl de Grey and Ripon, the new War Minister, having served in the Indian office as an Under-Secretary of State, the experience he there gained has, it is believed, occasioned predilection on behalf of Indian interests.

INDIAN GOSSIP.

CALCUTTA, March 22.

Little Pedlington was for upwards of three whole days in a state of stony bewilderment after the guns of Fort William had announced Mr. Drummond's promotion to the Lieutenant-Governorship of the North-West Provinces. Gossips say that when the Viceroy was asked by some one why he had passed over Mr. Muir, his lordship stared and replied: "Why, I have not the honour of the gentleman's acquaintance." The reason of Mr. Harington's refusal to accept the proffered post was undoubtedly his failing health. It was rather amusing to read in the up-country papers of his arrival at such or such a station, while all the time he was confined to his house in Calcutta. The appointment of Mr. Lushington to the Financial Secretariat is easily explained. While Sir Charles Trevelyan wanted only a "dummie," Mr. Beadon required the assistance of really a clever man, and Mr. Eden, with all his faults and prejudices, is certainly that, which Mr. Lushington, with all his well meaningness, as certainly is not. So, shuffle hands—quick—presto—and lo! the Financial Minister and the Lieutenant-governor have each the man he wants. Sir Charles is steadily committing suicide by overwork. Late at night and early in the morning he is at his desk, reading, revising, and checking everything, and cutting down the expenses in every department to a point below the absolute requirements in such a climate. Indeed, it has been happily said of him that he is afflicted with a financial kleptomania, and is never so happy as when he can prig a Keranee or pocket a Baboo. Just now everybody is asking what will he do with the surplus, and it is tolerably certain that income will exceed expenditure by very nearly two millions sterling. The most popular thing he could do would be to abolish the Income-tax, but I fear there is very little chance of any such luck. Four per Cents. on Friday last reached high-water mark, and were actually quoted at par, showing the sound and healthy state of the money market, and consequently of trade in general. Cash Balances, too, actually amount to 19½ millions, and even the natives admit that this statement is perfectly credible.

Colonel Burney, though earnestly pressed by Colonel Willis to compromise the Dinapore scandal, has wisely resolved to force his traducer either to prove or to eat his own words. The general opinion is that Captain Eyre will lose his commission, as no one believes that he actually did threaten his brigadier with personal chastisement. The whole affair is an illustration of the old proverb touching too much familiarity. The Brigadier and Mrs. Willis were on the most intimate terms, like father and daughter. He used to take her out in his carriage, and send her little presents from his farm and garden, and, in short, acted in the kindest manner towards her. But, unfortunately, he seems to have been in the habit of perpetually firing off little "chits" to the lady, too frankly expressing his opinion on everybody and everything. Out of this rose a misunderstanding which I need not explain, and then this Captain Eyre officiously intruded himself, and stated things which he cannot substantiate. The conduct of the Commander-in-chief has been greatly blamed for accepting an ex parte statement without listening to the other side, and will probably look rather small when it is proved in Court that he has done Colonel Burney a cruel wrong. His Excellency, however, is tolerably callous in such matters, and it is said that when he received his wiggling from the Horse Guards about his famous Minute on the Smales case, he only remarked, "Tut, tut! By George, this is too bad. There's George drunk again, as usual." In all probability he said nothing of the kind, but the anecdote shows what is the opinion entertained of him in the army generally. By the way, his Excellency had another fall from his horse the other day at Meerut, but as he alighted on his head he was none the worse for it. Colonel Tombs tumbled off directly afterwards, and was appointed to the command at Agra.

It is said in "well-informed circles" that the seat of Government will positively be removed to Allahabad, or Agra, as soon as the line of railway is open from Bombay. The proposed public offices are accordingly stopped, or rather, they have not been begun, and the post-office is to be built only to satisfy local, not imperial wants. There can be little doubt, moreover, that Bombay will become the commercial capital of India, though Calcutta must ever remain one of the most important seaports in the world. The port dues, however, are at present very much too high, and great complaints are made as to the detention of ships in the river, and the consequent demoralization of the sailors. Two plans have been suggested as likely to remedy this evil. The one is to construct docks at Ishapore—the Government dockyard being offered for £10,000—with sailors' homes, and an organisation of unloading porters, &c., &c.; an additional capital of £5,000 is all that is required, and there is some talk of raising this by a limited liability company. The other, and more feasible, project—upon which Sir Charles Trevelyan is supposed to look not unfavourably—is due to Mr. William Grant, the well-known merchant, and comprises a line of wharves, with goods' sheds at intervals. By this means, twenty-three acres of pestilential mud would be utilised, boat accidents would be avoided, ships would be quickly loaded and unloaded, and the beauty, as well as the sanitary condition, of the port greatly improved.

Even the upper official class is beginning to recognize the existence of such a thing as public opinion in this country. The Legislative Council of Bengal has actually invited the inhabitants of Calcutta to attend two special meetings of the Select Committee appointed to examine the provisions of the Municipal Corporation Bill, and to offer such useful suggestions as may occur to their local knowledge and practical experience of the conservancy wants of Calcutta. Much necessarily depends upon the chairman. The most influential and enlightened men appear disposed to leave the nomination of that officer to the Government, to avoid the petty intrigues and vexatious canvassing certain to ensue if it be left to a majority of the justices of the peace. If this be the case, Calcutta is rather premature in demanding the privilege of self-government.

While Municipal regulations are occupying the attention of prosaic men, a far more momentous question is mooted among the fair leaders of the fashion. It is proposed to do away with morning calls, and to have "Evenings at Home" instead, at which only gentlemen will attend. Six ladies of good position have decided upon making the experiment, which is certain to be followed by both the sensible and silly—by the former because it is really a good arrangement, and by the latter because Lady This or Mrs. That has set the example.

The 10th passed over without a single public demonstration of any kind, with the exception of a military parade in the morning. But we wish the Prince and Princess all happiness, "for a' that and a' that."

NATIVE PILGRIMAGES.

The pilgrimage of the Maharajah of Jeypore to the City of Palaces to the famous shrine of Juggernaut, is not perhaps an extraordinary event in itself, as Maharajahs and Zemindars frequently perform similar pilgrimages; yet it awakens trains of thought which are at least interesting, if they are not altogether new. We reflect upon the religious element which leads all classes, from the poorest ryot to the wealthiest millionaire, to undertake such pilgrimages; the revulsion of thought which follows the first practical experience of the railway, the steamer, and a European city; and the permanent effect which such novel scenes cannot fail to impress upon minds hitherto confined within the little sphere of a native court and zenana. To such a visit to the European world must be as strange and exciting as a visit to the stars would be to ourselves. Pilgrimages, or rather the impulse which induces men to perform pilgrimages, is common to all nations in certain phases of their development. It is natural that men should take a delight in visiting spots which have been rendered famous in their national or religious history, which were erewhile the scenes of the exploits of ancient heroes or teachings of ancient sages; and when these spots have been further consecrated by pious acts and traditional miracles, and when men are taught that such pilgrimages are pleasing to God, and will atone for sin, the passion becomes all-powerful, and only weakens as the national faith decays. The Jew still climbs the hallowed heights of Zion and Moriah, and recalls the ancient glories of the old temple to Jehovah. The Mussulman, though twelve centuries have passed away since the death of his prophet, still pays a reverential and superstitious pilgrimage to the shrine of the founder of his religion. Even the Christian of the nineteenth century, though the childish ignorance and besotted credulity of the middle ages have passed away, still feels that he is treading on holy ground as he wanders through the garden of Gethsemane to the Mount of Olives, or gazes with solemn thoughts on the waters of the Lake Genesareth. But the Hindoo pilgrimages involve conditions, which, in their elements, may resemble these, but which, in their manifestations, are widely different, and excite many thoughts which seem to add a new chapter to the history of man. It is a melancholy but an over-true reflection that religious festivals, based as they are upon the ignorance and credulity of the masses, are invariably accompanied by vice, or, to speak more plainly, by that keen relish for sensual enjoyments which can only be controlled by reason, or moral and religious principles strengthened by the reason. The Martin Marprelates, who exposed the shameless immorality of pilgrims to Canterbury and elsewhere, and even the Puritans of two and three centuries ago, who made war upon such festivals as those of Christmas and Easter, were all perhaps justified by the disorders which prevailed in ages when religious faith was most powerful, and which have since then only been suppressed by the advancing spirit of the age. But we are not about to indulge in a tirade against the Hindoo religion, because the immorality which prevails at pilgrimages to Juggernaut or elsewhere, springs not from idolatrous faith or idolatrous worship, but from their downright ignorance and superstition, such as prevailed in the benighted spots of Europe in the old time. Princes, zemindars, and earnest devotees, may indeed visit such spots and return uncontaminated; but that is because they do not expose themselves or their families to the temptations of the place. But our object is simply to indicate the good which may result from pilgrimages, and the impetus which might be given to that good to enable it to overcome the evil. The pilgrimage of the Maharajah of Jeypore to Juggernaut, like the pilgrimages of princes and wealthy zemindars generally, will doubtless consist in the usual number of bathtings and other ceremonies, the offerings to Juggernaut and his priests, the recitation of prayers and hymns, and certain performances of a doubtful character, which are excused on the score of being mysteries. And, of course, the Maharajah will return to Jeypore with the satisfaction, arising from having fulfilled what is believed to be a religious duty, which washes away his own sins and those of his ancestors. A generation or two ago this would be the only result; but now a-days may we not hope that the wonders of the railway and the telegraph, the steamers and ships ploughing the sacred waters of the Ganges, the sight of a European city lit by gas, and exhibiting other wonders which need not be indicated, have excited new thoughts and new desires for knowledge? We believe such to be the case, and we would hope, too, that the day is not far distant when such visits to Calcutta may be more frequent, and leave deeper and still more salutary impressions upon the native mind than they can do even now.—Englishman, March 22.

THE BENGAL MILITARY FUND.

Acting upon the instructions received from the Secretary of State for India, the Government here placed itself, through Major Burne, of the Military Secretariat, in communication with the managing directors of the Military and Orphan Funds of the Bengal army, desiring that the latter would submit a statement of the financial condition of those institutions; and would, moreover, favour the Government with their views as to the system of management which it would be advisable to adopt for the future, when the funds shall have virtually passed from the possession of what once was the Bengal army into that of the British Government. It must first be observed that no order has been, or could be, issued by Sir Charles Wood, or any one else, for the transfer of the charitable funds in question from their proper owners and supporters to the Government; and that the action of the said Government to effect that end is taken in the shape of a proposal, which can be accepted or declined, as shall seem best to the officers of the late Bengal army. We may also remark that the expression of the wish of "the army" in these important matters is, to the Secretary of State for India, a new element in the settlement of difficult questions such as that now before us, seeing that the British army never had any such independent charitable institutions as the Indian funds, governed by the officers of the Indian armies. All else connected with the late Company's armies Sir Charles Wood has rough-handled—abolished, changed, amalgamated, and swept away, pretty much as he liked; but the charitable funds he dared not touch arbitrarily, as they are protected by the civil law, and in no way subject to governmental power or military orders. The consequence is that on this occasion Sir Charles Wood is obliged to come forward with civil proposals, instead of dictatorial commands; and we hope that the managements of the funds will take all due advantage of the equal ground upon which they stand, and see well and carefully to the interests of the institutions committed to their care before sanctioning and effecting the final transfer. Thanks to recent careful and conscientious management, the Military and Orphan Funds are now in a very prosperous condition, and, consequently, the directors have been able to represent that, according to the most accurate calculations that can be made by the actuary, if the Government now take over these institutions as they stand, with their capital, subscription lists, property, future liabilities, &c., it will not be put to any expense by the Military Fund for the next seventeen years; whilst, in the case of the Orphan Fund, so valuable is the property belonging to it that the Government will, by taking it over in a similar manner, be a positive gainer to a very large amount. So far for the condition of the funds; now as to the propositions for their future management. The most eligible plan, in our opinion, is to form a mixed management, partly composed of its present element, officers of the Bengal army, and partly of nominees of the Government, so as to provide that the interest of the two contracting parties in the transfer shall be hereafter safely guarded. To this mixed management it is, as regards the above proposition, intended to attach a secretary and office establishment, retaining those now in office should it suit their views to remain. The other proposition as to the future management of these funds is to make the whole thing over to the Government, to abolish all army management and interference, dismiss the secretary and office establishment, and let the Government carry on the accounts and the work of the funds in the general treasury, or in any other office of its finance or account departments. This latter proposition is, in our opinion, most faulty and dangerous; and we would seriously advise the officers of the late Bengal army—to whom, of course, these propositions, and any others that may be made, will be submitted—on no account to surrender a fair share in the management of their funds for the future, or they will certainly, when too late, regret having done so. The subscribers to these funds should never lose sight of the fact, that, looking to the present and the probable future of these institutions, it is their interests, and those of their wives and children, which will have to be jealously looked after, whilst those of the Government will be comparatively safe and assured; and they should on no account enter into any compact for the transfer of their funds to the Government, which shall not have, as one of its main conditions, a prolonged action of their body in the management, for very many years to come. We hope that when the voting papers with reference to the all-important matters here noticed shall be circulated to the officers of the late Bengal army, they will think over them, and record their wishes with more seriousness and care than used to be the case as regards these matters in days gone by.—Englishman, March 19.

THE BENGAL ARTILLERY PURCHASING-OUT FUND.

When, in the middle of the year 1861, the Bengal Artillery Purchasing-out Fund was reconstituted and reorganised, to meet the changes induced by the amalgamation in that branch of the service, we were favoured with a copy of a brochure containing a plan of the arrangements and rules which were to govern and support the remodelled institution, and keep it in working order and full action, as assumed by the writer of the pamphlet, for the next thirty years, or more. The pamphlet was, of course, sent to us for editorial comment and opinion, which accordingly we gave at the time, to the effect that, whilst wishing all benefit to the interests, and all rapidity to the promotion, of the gallant body of officers concerned, we could not, at the same time, see how the Artillery fund could, in the face of service out of India, and English pay, be maintained as proposed; and we foretold that it could not be long sustained in steady vital action. Our judgment was questioned, and our opinion attempted to be invalidated, both in personal interviews and through our correspondence columns; but as it was assumed that those who differed with us could not be proved right, and we could not be proved wrong, for several years to come, the matter dropped and was left to the settlement of time and experience. Contrary to what was expected, the years which were to settle the question have been turned into months, and the little experience that has been had of the intended working of the artillery fund has, we fear, unmistakably demonstrated the correctness of our views. Even before a single troop or battery of artillery has left India and gone on English pay and allowances, the artillery fund has shown evident signs of deficient vitality, and, indeed, of total failure at no very distant date. One lieutenant-colonel of the artillery has just retired under a guarantee of the bonus at the rate assigned him by the rules of the fund, but he has not as yet, we believe, received a rupee from the regiment; another lieutenant-colonel who had sent in his papers to retire, in expectation of the bonus, is now about to withdraw them and remain in the service; and a third, who was also about to retire and go home to England, tempted by a similar inducement, is going home on medical certificate, and remains in the artillery regiment. The fact is that, even without service out of India and English pay and allowances, there is a want of that unanimity amongst the artillery officers as regards the fund; and if this be the case now, what will be the state of affairs when the immense force of artillery now serving in India shall be dispersed all over the globe, from Woolwich to Hong Kong, from Newfoundland to Australia? This want of unanimity can only arise from strong doubts as to the stability and efficient working of the artillery fund; for in the old fund, before the mutiny, the amalgamation, and the "royalising," there was no slackness in subscribing, the exceptions to the general practice of doing so were exceedingly few; any officer desirous of retiring and giving promotion was quite willing to go on the regimental guarantee, and perfectly safe in so doing. Times are changed; they will be still more changed when service out of India and English pay come to be tried; and the junior lieutenant of artillery who was, by the rules of the new fund, to retire and receive back more than all he gave, and more, some thirty years hence, will touch his bonus about the same time as Macaulay's plagiarized New Zealander sits yawning on London-bridge and contemplates the ruins of St. Paul's.—Englishman, March 12.

THE INCOME-TAX.

The Calcutta newspapers are unanimous as to the desirability of abolishing the Income-tax, and as regards the oppressive character of that levy, even the Englishman, who a short time back, in the "interests of commerce," was as anxious as the Friend of India that the tax should be retained, now denounces it. We have throughout been consistently opposed to the tax, and it is therefore not a little gratifying to us to now witness those who took directly opposite views so signally convinced that they were in the wrong. The recantation is, however, of little worth. Anything which at this eleventh hour the journals can have to say about the Income-tax is of trifling import. It must ere this have been settled whether the tax is to cease or not. Sir C. Trevelyan must now be in a position to decide whether or not it can be done without. The accounts for 1862-63 are made up, and they must afford ample data for a conclusive finding. We are without official inspiration to guide us, but we are nevertheless inclined to deem the probabilities in favour of a total abolition of the tax. Financially the Act has been, and is, a failure. But though it has failed to bring in the estimated amount of money, it has not failed to cause a degree of exasperating oppression that the Government should not lose a day in closing the sources of. The Act in the Mofussil districts has been made an engine of oppression to a degree that few beside the unfortunate sufferers have any idea of. It has been levied from parties who never should have been assessed, while numbers intended to be relieved by Mr. Laing's Act are still forced to pay. It has done the Government of India more injury in the estimation of the mass of its subjects than all the other regulations and Acts issued or passed by it. It is about the first law ever passed by the Indian Government which directly takes money out of the pocket of the native subject. This alone, were the tax assessed and collected by men as honest as ever trod the surface of the world, would cause it to be hateful to the masses. The theory that Government should carry on the business of the State with the land tax and sundry sayer and excise collections is as old as the country itself. No former Government, Hindu or Moghul, ever attempted to draw money from the people by means of direct taxation, that the people did not rebel if at all in a position to resist with a shadow of success. Similarly would the masses of India be now found resisting in arms the levy of an Income-tax, but that the misery, the recent rebellion entailed, has taught them the present raj is too strong to be overthrown. Where dense ignorance prevented this salutary conviction from penetrating there has the Income-tax caused revolt, as in the Cossyah Hills, and in Assam. It is at best but bad policy to retain a tax which thus breeds and keeps alive disaffection in the hearts of the people. Such an imposition should never have been resorted to, and now that all confess it to have been a mistake, it should not be suffered to exist another quarter of a year. The case for its abolition is about the strongest that could be submitted to a Legislature. Imposed under an unfounded apprehension of State bankruptcy, its working has shown it the most unpopular—and as oppressive as unpopular—measure of the British in India, rankling the minds of the people into hate of their rulers, while the only plea that can be put forward for its retention is that its continued levy would enable Government to further develop an already very expanded commerce! If, after the 30th April next, the tax in any shape continues, the Government of India will have been guilty of both a crime and a blunder. They will have decreed there shall continue to be levied in unenlightened India a tax which had the civilization of England been of a less advanced character would have caused revolt even there.

There is nothing for Sir Charles Trevelyan but under any circumstances to propose the repeal of the Income-tax. Were even the abolition of the infliction to change a good surplus into a small deficit, such should not deter him from doing away with that, the tendency of which is, in plain language, to cause the people to hate British rule and sigh for its extinction! Better, far better, a deficit for two or three, or even 10 or 20 years longer than that the corrosion of the loyalty or good will of the native subjects of England, which there is ample evidence to show the income-tax is causing, should continue unchecked or unremedied. Far and wide through the land rings the bitter native plaint:—"Tis only within the last few years the British grew extortionate, wresting from every man a portion of his substance, and forcing him to lay bare all he has in order that they may take enough! The Mahrattas in forcibly extorting chout did no more!"

Knowing this it is not wonderful that thoughtful men hold Sir Charles Trevelyan will fail in his duty to England, if independently of whether there be a large surplus or a small one, or no surplus at all, he fails to propose to the Council of the Governor-general of India the unconditional repeal of the income-tax.—Phoenix.

PORT CANNING AND ITS RAILWAY.

The South-Eastern Railway has been opened throughout from Calcutta to the Mutlah. On Monday morning a party of some twenty-five gentlemen accompanied the energetic projector, M. Schiller, along the line of twenty-six miles on a trial trip, and inspected the future town and port of Canning, which in America would assuredly have borne the name of the public-spirited merchant to whom chiefly its existence will be owing. For the first twenty miles the line passes through a well-peopled and highly cultivated district. Near Calcutta the country is a kitchen garden; further out it is a vast and fertile rice field more scantily inhabited. The last five or six miles are still covered with the scrubby jungle of the Sunderbuns, in which here and there a clearance has been effected, but where wild hog may be seen running in droves terrified by the scream of the engine. The bridge over the Piale, midway, is nearly completed, and trains run on either side of it. This is the mistake of the line, due, like other evil legacies left to Bengal, to Sir J. P. Grant's administration. The Piale is a tidal creek of some depth but trifling breadth, which was once dammed up altogether, and which the railway were forbidden again to close, though the traffic is at the utmost a dozen boats a day. A piled embankment would have effected the closure with ease, and the line would have been open a year ago; but a guaranteed company must obey a Government engineer, and so a bridge was built on dry land, and the current of the creek was turned under it, leaving the old bed dry. That bed is now the difficulty, and threatens to be the source of endless expense. Hundreds of coolies may be seen swarming, as the Egyptians of old must have done when building the pyramids, and all carrying miserable little baskets of a stiff clay to fill up the channel. But in vain. Sixty feet in depth have already been thrown in, but the weight only presses out towards the sides, falling as it does on a viscous mass of quicksand; and it is even suspected that the clay is pushed out so far to the sides that the current in its new bed carries it away. An attempt is now to be made to pile the sides of the way, confining the new clay to a definite breadth; but the success of even that is doubtful. A long bridge over the old channel may ultimately be necessary, and thus, through the useless obstinacy of the late Bengal Government, and the attempts of engineers to accomplish a difficult work in too economical a manner, the public have for more than a year been deprived of the use of the line, meanwhile paying the guaranteed interest on the capital, while nearly as much money will yet be spent on this wretched creek as on half of the whole railway.

We have hitherto abstained from expressing any opinion on the prospects of the port of Canning and its railway. But a visit to the spot has made us think far more highly of its prospects than we were previously inclined to do. To one accustomed to the Hooghly, with filth and its three sets of great dangers at the James and Mary Shoal, Mud Point and the Bedford Channel, the Mutlah seems indeed a noble river, and the frontage of the future town on its south bank is unexceptionable. For seventy miles to the sea there is a clear passage for the largest ships that may be built, requiring no expensive pilotage nor dues. For years the stream has never changed. At the point where the Bydiadurree runs into it—the stream which at present communicates with Calcutta—the new town juts out, and thence stretches down in a long reach, compared with which Garden Reach in Calcutta is inferior. On the other side the tall chimneys and bungalows of the Ellengunge estate are visible. Here there is no reason why ships should not intercept the rice and jute and seeds of the Eastern districts and Dacca, if not the tea of Assam, and carry them off at once at one-third of the expense and danger caused by the Hooghly. Already one ship has thus loaded with rice, and six are now on the way, chartered to the new port at rates of freight considerably less than are asked for Calcutta. A screw pile jetty with steam cranes will transfer their cargoes into railway trucks for the capital in half the time now spent, and with none of the pilfering and vexations experienced in Calcutta. Indeed, it is a question if boats and steamers cannot come more speedily from Dacca to Port Canning than to Kooshtee, which the Ganges is abandoning. The British India Steam Navigation Company are not unwilling to send one of their steamers up the Mutlah on a trial trip, and Government might put to the test the assertion of one of the P. and O. Company's commanders that, by discharging mails and passengers at the Mutlah, he would save one day in arrival and two in departure, besides much risk and expense. The last mail steamer took four days to get out of the Hooghly to sea. Lord John Hay has strongly recommended the Mutlah for her Majesty's ships, since the docks at Bombay are so inferior that they could not admit the Nemesis lately, and the risks of the Hooghly are so great. As auxiliary to Calcutta, there can be little doubt of the advantages of Port Canning.

On the subject of the town we would write more cautiously. It is splendidly situated, and looks like what Calcutta would have been a century ago had it been begun on the Howrah side of the Hooghly. At present not a building is visible, save the railway erections and the Government cutcherry. The jungle has been cleared only sufficiently to mark off the various lots. A road half-finished runs along the banks of the Mutlah, and will be the future "course" of Port Canning. But the whole of the area must be raised several feet by earth, which it is proposed to excavate from tanks. This will be a work of great expense, which it is intended to meet by raising a loan on the freehold part of the lots. Already they have risen enormously in value, lots bought at a hundred rupees now selling at ten thousand. The creation of the town will, we fear, be a work of time, but it will follow closely on the success of the port. At least three tanks now furnish sweet water, and time with care will sweeten the rest, if they be not dug so low as to reach the salt sand. On either side of the line near Calcutta there is a large expanse of high garden land, well suited for building such suburban towns as have sprung up out of London, while near the Sealdah station there will arise a large market into which the train will every morning convey fresh fish, vegetables, and firewood. With no interest in this undertaking beyond that which we must feel in any work intended to benefit India, we would advise all who have a pecuniary interest in it to hold on. Ten years will make a vast difference, and a quarter of a century create a great port and town. Meanwhile the risk is slight and the success already achieved—always excepting the Pallee matter—is encouraging. We have not alluded to the main staple which, we believe, will yet be raised by the now waste districts tapped by this line. Cotton—Egyptian and Sea Island—will grow luxuriantly wherever it is scientifically tended. There was less hope a century ago of New Orleans becoming what it is than there is now of Port Canning rising to be the chief depot in Eastern Bengal for the exportation of cotton, rice, and fibres. The intelligent energy and enthusiasm of a man like Mr. Schiller, its founder, are worthy of all praise, even in a country which owes so much of its progress to the independent European.—Friend of India.

MISCELLANEOUS.

DR. DUFF.—The Friend of India urges the claims of Dr. Duff to the honorary and honourable post of Vice-Chancellor of the Calcutta University. As "one of the two authors of the Education Despatch which gave universities to India," he is "more than any other identified with the creation of the Calcutta University." Few, we imagine, will be found to dispute these claims, or to deny the truth of our contemporary's declaration that "no act of Lord Elgin could be more just to the independent element in the university, or more graceful towards the father of English education in India, than a request that Dr. Duff should act as vice chancellor."—Bengal Hurkaru.

EAST INDIANS.—"But what," says a friend, rising from the perusal of the Hurkaru's remarks, "is meant, after all, by being taunted as an East Indian? Is it a disgrace to be an East Indian? The great Metcalfs was one, so was the equally celebrated Skinner. The Edmonstones are East Indians, so are the C——ns; Thackeray is one, too. Perhaps it is the taunt of dark blood! Adam was a swarth man, so was our Saviour! The purest races of mankind are so. It won't do for the white elephant, because he is worshipped for his peculiarity, to taunt his dusky kindred with being either less pure or less perfect. Perhaps, it is the taunt of being an Eurasian, i. e., of mixed blood—a taunt that an Englishman, the descendant of mixed races, ought to be most careful of himself. What is really meant in the sneer is illegitimacy, because so many Eurasians were in former times begotten by European fathers of bad native mothers. But there is many an Eurasian whose tint descended to him without a shadow of disgrace; and of such I can mention many in the highest walks of life. I need hardly say, that Smith is white, with but a slight dash of dark blood."—Oudh Gazette, March 14.

INDIAN MEDICAL SERVICE.—From the Hurkaru we extract two paragraphs, the former of which, supposing to convey, as we trust it will be found to do, authentic information, is of very considerable interest to our readers of the medical service:—"The medical amalgamation scheme has at length been finally settled by the Home Government, though the details have not been made public. It is generally understood, however, that the pay of the assistant-surgeons is to be considerably increased, and in the Bengal Presidency thirty-five of their number are to be immediately promoted to the higher grade. Every claim, it is said, has been carefully weighed with a view to a most liberal adjustment. The additional annual expenditure likely to result from the augmentation of pay in the three presidencies, is estimated at ten lakhs. To supply the necessary information required by the financial member of the supreme council the Government of Bengal has called upon the several district commissioners for a return of the amount of income-tax realised in their respective divisions during the year 1862, showing it in two separate heads, the two and the four per cent. rates."

CLEVER TRICK.—A case of some cleverness was yesterday heard in the Calcutta police court. Bissonath Dutt was made over to the police by a native confectioner for giving him an electroplated double pice as a rupee. At the thannah the accused insisted that he had given a rupee, asked to see the disguised coin, put it in his mouth, swallowed it, and produced a genuine rupee which he must have had hid in his mouth secretly. As the disguised coin must be produced to obtain a conviction, the deceiver was made over to the medical college authorities to make him disgorge it.

LORD CANNING.—We lately came across carte-de-visite copies of the late Earl and Countess Canning reduced by Mr. Hering of London from the larger portraits taken by Mr. Rowe of Calcutta. It is well known that Lord Canning would not allow Lady Canning's picture to be published, and was furnished with a list of the few friends to whom a copy had been given. Yet Mr. Hering not only copies the print without acknowledgment, but is guilty of the immorality of declaring that it is his copyright. At the last meeting of the Bengal Photographic Society Mr. Rowe brought up the matter, and the following resolution was passed:—"It appearing that Mr. Hering, photographer to the Queen, has published photographs of Lord and Lady Canning, reserving the copyright, such photographs having been originally those of Mr. Rowe of this city, this meeting protests against such unacknowledged appropriation of Mr. Rowe's photographs, and requests that the Secretary will forward this protest to the London Photographic Society."—Friend of India.

THE PLAGUE OF LOCUSTS.—Swarms of locusts have of late done much damage in Sind and the Punjab. At night they always select one tree in preference to all others, viz., the Acacia leucophlea or Kikar (Hind). The peculiar and numerous long thorns which cover the branches seem made on purpose for the locust to cling to, just fitting in size the hooked claws with which its feet are furnished. Is their selection of this tree to be accounted for by its being, like themselves, a native of Egypt? The Locusta Migratoria is only a native of Egypt, Barbary, and the south of France. This Acacia is the Shittim tree of Scripture. In the districts at the foot of the Hills, the villagers, in gangs of a dozen brushers and three diggers, destroy the thick heaps of locusts and sweep them into trenches, where they are covered up. Occasionally bushes where they rest are burned. This is done at dawn and at sunset daily. It has been recommended that a reward of a rupee per seer be offered for eggs brought in for destruction. Each female lays nearly one hundred eggs, which she deposits in sandy ground. They adhere to each other, and have much the appearance of an ear of corn. Much mischief has been done by the insects; but it is nothing to what may be anticipated from the young when hatched. Government have directed the attention of all subordinate officials to the subject.

BURMAH.—Both Colonel Phayre and Colonel Sparks (now a Colonel) have come back, the former from Mandalay, the later from Tonghoo. Everything appears settled about the treaty with the Burman Court, and in a very short time we shall know all about it in the Calcutta Gazette. Colonel Phayre met the Mail Steamer India going out, on his return from the capital, and sent on his despatches at once by her. I hear he is to be made a K.C.B. very soon, and he very well deserves it, and he has earned it. Mr. Edwards, our collector of Customs, who accompanied him every time on these missions to the Burman Court, as interpreter, has been recommended for an increase of salary from 600 to 1,000 Rs. a month, which no doubt will be at once sanctioned. Colonel Sparks since his return from Tonghoo, has been laid up with bilious fever, evidently contracted on his journey. Major Ardagh has returned from leave, by the present Steamer Rangoon, and has resumed charge of this district, a Deputy Commissioner, from Mr. G. Hough.

GWALIOR.—His Highness of Gwalior seems systematically determined to show his want of respect and gratitude towards the British Government, which has just loaded him with favours. We have several times had occasion lately to notice offensive behaviour on his part, and the Englishman now furnishes us with another example, which will, we trust, provoke a grave admonition from Lord Elgin. That journal says:—"It will be within the remembrance of our readers that some short time since an outrage was committed upon Lieutenants Strong and Cotton by the Gwalior troops. The matter was referred to the Rajah, but he has awarded such an excessively light punishment that the subject has been brought to the notice of the Supreme Government for final decision."

RANGOON, March 10.—I regret to have to record a very daring fraud perpetrated the other day on the Bengal Bank Agency here. A forged cheque for Rs. 2,500 was presented at the bank and cashed. The mistake on the part of the bank officers who passed the said cheque was soon discovered, but the parties who received the money took to their heels.—We have received several copies of the new Customs Act, which comes into operation from the 1st of May next.—The weather is growing very hot, and unless we get a heavy shower or two to allay this intensity of the heat, sickness in a variety of shapes will most likely follow. At present, however, the general health of the station is good.—Hurkaru.

RAJAH BROOKE.—We were agreeably surprised to witness the return to the East of Rajah Sir James Brooke by the last Messageries steamer. He went down to Borneo a few days ago, where he will assume the head of the Government. The Rajah Muda Captain Brooke has gone to Europe by the Messageries steamer on the 6th. The Rajah's kingdom is said to be in a flourishing condition; trade is prospering, the resources of the country are being developed, and the revenue of the last year has reached a much higher sum than ever it did before. It is said to amount to £23,000, and as this large sum is almost entirely devoted to the improvement of the place, we may expect its progress to be sure and steady. Some time ago a petition went home from this bearing the signatures of a large portion of the community, praying that the Straits might be constituted into a bishopric, which would include that of Labuan. This petition was not the result of any public meeting, but was got up privately and sent round to the different people for signature. The measure seemed at first sight an advisable one, and it was, consequently, very generally signed. It seems now, however, that the petition had more in it than appeared on the face of it, and that if granted, it is just possible that we may have the present bishop of Labuan to preside over the joint bishopric. Now, such an event was never contemplated by most of those who attached their names to the petition, and if we are to judge by the public feeling at the present moment, the bishop of Labuan had much better be left to the superintendence of his present mission. Considerable changes are shortly to take place here amongst the military. The 40th, which has been for a long time in the Straits, leaves this for Cannonore, and is to be replaced by the 34th. We understand, also, brigadier R. Shubrick is to leave this at the close of the month for Burmah; he will most probably be succeeded by Colonel D'Sausmerez. Brigadier Shubrick's departure will be generally regretted. The disturbances which existed in Pahang seem now to have almost terminated, and the people are returning to their occupations. Wan Ahmet, it is reported, has retired from the country. The Sultan of Lingga will have been removed by this time to Bangkok, the King of Siam having sent down one of his war steamers to Salangore to take him up.—Straits Times.

RAILWAY.—The Lahore Chronicle states, what we believe to be correct, that the Tonse Railway bridge, between Benares and Allahabad, will be finished in six months, when the line will be open to near Delhi, with only one break at the Allahabad Jumna bridge. The bridge over the Hindun, near Delhi, and that over the Jumna at Delhi, are being actively pushed on. The piers of the former are completed, but the arches have not yet been added. In the case of the bridge over the Jumna at Delhi, some of the piers are built, and the well foundations of the others are now being sunk.

SPEECH OF H.E. THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF, to the troops at Bareilly, on the occasion of presenting new colours to her Majesty's 104th Foot.—“Officers and men of the 104th,—It is with great pleasure that I, to-day, have the honour of presenting to you your new colours. The colours of this regiment are to the soldier the most sacred of his treasures. What will not a soldier do for his colours? He plants them, amid the deadly storm of fire, upon the shattered breach. Should the tide of battle turn against him, he is ready to die for them, but will never forsake them. They are, to him, emblems of a soldier's greatest virtues—courage and discipline; courage to guard them, discipline, to do so with skill. But I need not remind you of these duties; it has been your lot to see several campaigns, ‘the Sutlej,’ Punjab, and the minor one, ‘Burmah.’ There are already inscribed on your colours the names of five engagements, and shortly they will receive a sixth—Delhi—the greatest victory of all. The regiment, one small band, matched against a countless foe, besieging a fortified and strongly garrisoned city, amidst torrents of down-pouring rain, under the burning sun, exposed to the incessant attacks of the enemy, you did your duty well and nobly. I had the pleasure yesterday to call to the front, as is my custom, those who are distinguished for war services or good conduct; amongst them was an officer whose name was mentioned in the despatches, for having, with his company, captured four guns. I allude, of course, to Major Harris. I do not speak from those despatches only; my excellent friend, Brigadier-general Showers, has often told me how gallantly that officer behaved. Men, I congratulate you on having such an officer.”—Mofussilite.

MILITARY DETAILS.—The Englishman states that General Showers, commanding the Presidency division, is about to take six months' leave to England, and that Major General Becher, C.B., whose term of office as Quartermaster general is about to expire, will officiate for him. The same paper says the new scale of military pay and allowances will come into effect on the 1st of May. A lieutenant colonel, commanding a native cavalry regiment, will receive Rs. 1,550 a month; and if commanding an infantry corps, Rs. 1,450. From these rates the pay of commanding officers will graduate down by a sliding scale, according to their rank, a captain in command of a native regiment receiving Rs. 900 a month. The staff pay of a number of appointments will also be increased; amongst others that of assistant adjutant general of division, which will be Rs. 500, instead of Rs. 400, a month. This scale does not materially differ from what we published, as recommended, last year.

EASTERN RAILWAY.—The Government of India, on the conclusion of the Eastern Bengal Railway Works, has passed a high eulogium on the services of Mr. Purdon, the chief engineer, and acknowledges those of Messrs. Leslie, Prestage, and Granville. The agent of the contractor, Mr. Henfrey, is informed that his successful prosecution of an undertaking of such magnitude as this railway, under circumstances so novel to English contractors, entitles him to the hearty approval and congratulations of the Government.

DESERTIONS.—The desertion of English soldiers on the Punjab frontier is becoming too common. We lately recorded the murder by a Mussulman of one private of the Hussars for his money, in the hills beyond Sealkote.

VISITATION.—In obedience to a mandate under the hand and seal of the Right Rev. Father in God Frederick, by Divine permission, Bishop of Madras, bearing date the 7th day of March, I, the Rev. Thomas Dealtry, Master of Arts, Archdeacon of the Archdeaconry of Madras and Commissary, duly appointed, do hereby cite, all and singular, the ministers and chaplains, and all priests and deacons in holy orders, of the United Church of England and Ireland, being within the Archdeaconry of Madras, or on the receipt of service of my citation, within fifty miles from Madras aforesaid, to appear before the said Lord Bishop at his Visitation, to be held at the Cathedral of St. George, Madras, on Thursday, the 23rd day of April, at the hour of half-past eleven o'clock in the morning, and then and there to produce their Letters of Orders of Priest and Deacon, with all licences and other faculties relative to their official appointment, to be by them exhibited, and to hear and receive all such matters and things as may be delivered in charge. Witness my hand, this 7th day of March, in the year of our Lord, 1863, THOMAS DEALTRY, M.A., Archdeacon and Commissary. Notice is hereby given, that the Lord Bishop of Madras, in pursuance of his primary Visitation of his diocese, has appointed Thursday, April 23, for holding a Visitation at St. George's Cathedral. He purposes, after the hot season, visiting and confirming in those parts of the diocese which he has not yet visited. The ministers and chaplains in such parts are desired meanwhile to prepare and examine all who are candidates for confirmation. On the day abovementioned—morning service will commence at the Cathedral at half-past eleven o'clock, and the Visitation sermon be preached by the Rev. A. H. Alcock. After which the Holy Communion will be administered. In the afternoon—service will be held at half past four o'clock, and the Lord Bishop will deliver his charge. The licensed ministers and chaplains who reside within a convenient distance of Madras, and receive a citation to attend at the Visitation, will be expected to produce their letters of orders of priest and deacon, with all licences and other faculties relative to their official appointment. By order of the Lord Bishop of Madras.

THE BANK OF KURRACHEE.

This institution may now be numbered with the things that were, it having been determined on Saturday last to wind it up, and to entrust the consequent work of liquidation to Mr. Melver. We are aware that much blame has been attached to us for setting before our readers, from time to time, such of the irregularities connected with the management of the institution as happened to come publicly to our knowledge; but we had a difficult, though delicate task to perform. We were in the confidence of all parties, and were constantly consulted in the matters that are now fully placed before the public, with whom our sympathies were, it is now needless to say. We had a stern duty imposed on us, and we executed it to the best of our judgment and ability. With the facts staring us in the face that appear in the records of the proceedings of the meeting assembled on Saturday last, we yet refrained from defending ourselves from the calumnies that are in circulation touching the motives that induced us to take the course we adopted; and even now, if we thought any good would be served by keeping from the public the matters that transpired at the meeting, we would gladly shut them out from our paper. As we write, do we hear of two cheques for 620 odd rupees drawn by the late Manager on the Oriental Bank of Bombay being returned unpaid, and we cannot perceive why it is wished that the general public should be kept in ignorance of acts which are known to hundreds of the community. The Bank of Kurrachee was an institution in which many, who were not in the country have a deep interest, and whom it was imperatively necessary on us, as journalists and public servants, to apprise of the actual condition of the institution in so far as we were permitted to state them. We shall not further continue our defence, but leave it to our readers to decide whether, in any of our writings, we displayed bitterness of spirit towards the late manager, or evinced a desire to crush or ruin him. Mr. Plunkett never did us any personal injury; on the other hand, he was a man we very much liked, and on whose uprightness and integrity we always had the most unbounded confidence. We were aware certainly of the pearl business, which turned out so disastrously for him; but as he had often told us that there were three others, men of repute, who were connected with him in the business, we never apprehended the dreadful results that have ensued. Mr. Plunkett, to more than one, both verbally and in writing, declared that the whole loss of the pearl business would not exceed £2,000; and to that extent, we fear, the shareholders of the Bank of Kurrachee will find themselves involved. Of this sum one-half has already been secured—we should say realised; the other moiety will involve a law-suit. There were whisperers abroad that Mr. Passmore, the Chairman of the Bank, was implicated in the delinquencies of the Manager, and we freely confess that we ourselves gave credence to them, but we would refer our readers to his speech and to what subsequently transpired at the meeting, and the best friends of Mr. Passmore can wish no more. Most satisfactorily has everything been explained, and there can now be but one opinion in the matter, viz., that Mr. Passmore was wholly ignorant of the tampering with the accounts of the bank by the late manager, which, we may add, chiefly occurred during that gentleman's absence from Kurrachee in the months of Dec. and Jan. last. There may be those who exclaim in well-assumed horror that Mr. Plunkett's delinquencies are unpardonable; but if such be in earnest they cannot know the force of the temptation a man with a reputation in the mercantile world has to impel him to do anything rather than proclaim his bankruptcy. What greater illustration of this fact do we need than the instance under notice? Mr. Plunkett was a man of little ability; but he had early learned to know the value of a reputation for correctness in monetary dealing. By a scrupulous regard to the principles he formed in entering the world, he rose step by step in the Government service, until he obtained the situation of an inspector in the Telegraph department, from which he transferred his services to the Red Sea Telegraph Company, of which he was the Indian Superintendent; and lastly, he obtained the post of Manager of the Kurrachee Bank, without even furnishing the security usual under the circumstances. Yet, rather than state at once to his friends his true position, he adopted the terrible expedient of tampering with the accounts of the bank entrusted to him, and which we firmly believe he made sure would never transpire. He deceived his own partners, his wife, his relations, and nearest friends, in the hope that he would be able to stem the torrent that had set against him. He failed. And when he saw not even a straw to support him against the current of public opinion, he determined upon destroying himself. He is now before a higher tribunal than any in this world, and we presume not to judge him, nor to analyse his acts; but he has left behind him a widow and five children, and these imperatively demand the kindly feelings of the community. Let all forget the delinquencies of the husband and father in the sorrow, the misery, and wretchedness of the widow and children, and let us all do unto these destitute and unoffending creatures that which we are enjoined to do both by the laws of God and of man. All our readers are aware of the deep interest we personally had in the Bank of Kurrachee. They well know that no endeavour would have been spared by us to sustain it in difficulties, but, under existing circumstances, there is no alternative but to allow it to go by the board. In doing so, however, we cannot refrain from reminding our fellow-citizens that the bank was established under many and, apparently, insurmountable obstacles in our own office. It flourished under the auspices of Mr. Passmore and his brother directors, in despite of all the efforts made to crush it; and it is now fallen, not because the people of Kurrachee were unable to support a bank, but because the accounts of the institution were tampered with, its keys abstracted, its cash books stolen; and because the magistry and police took no steps whatever to trace the culprits and protect public property. We cannot but say that Mr. Boulton, the deputy-magistrate, as well as the Fouzdar of this city, acted in a most inexplicable manner when they allowed the institution to be robbed without showing the slightest animation to trace the offenders. Few but will agree with us that had Mr. Boulton granted the search warrant on the application of the acting manager of the Bank, matters would have come to a crisis at once; and the false delicacy having been removed, Mr. Plunkett would to this day have been alive, in an altered position perhaps, but still spared to those who loved him not for his status, but for himself. It is a remarkable fact that the two last sermons Mr. Plunkett heard in his life, and which were delivered on the Sundays immediately preceding his death, were on the subject of "Suicide."—Our Paper, March 10.

HIGH COURT SALARIES AT BOMBAY AND MADRAS.

We see that the Bombay Saturday Review gives the undermentioned salaries as those finally determined upon for the officers of the New High Court there, viz. :—

Master in Equity	Rs. 2,700
Registrar on the original side (including the duties of Prothonotary, Ecclesiastical Registrar, and Admiralty Registrar)	2,500
Registrar on the official side (i.e. merely for Mofussil appeals)	2,000
Taxing-master	1,500
Commissioner to take account	1,200
Deputy-registrar	500

And, it adds, that the present Master in Equity is to have compensation, equal to the difference between Rs. 2,700 a-month and his salary under the old régime.

We do not quite understand the list. Is there to be a Master in Equity in the High Court? We had understood the reverse. Nor do we quite understand what there will be for him to do, if there is to be besides a Taxing-master and a Commissioner to take accounts. The other references to inquire and report can hardly, we should opine, require an officer upon Rs. 2,700 a-month.

With the above exception, however, we cordially approve of the proposed scheme of salaries for the Bombay High Court, and especially of that part of it which indicates that due regard is to be had to what are always scrupulously respected in England, where changes are introduced for the benefit of the nation at large: but which, we regret to say, are seldom cared for here at all, and never—we believe we might say—to the fair extent of their claims; we mean the vested rights of actual incumbents.

We wish we could learn that the good example of Bombay was likely to be followed in Madras; but here report, which is the only ground upon which we can as yet speak, is very unsatisfactory.

According to this report, it is said that the Chief Justice has considered Rs. 900 a month a proper salary for the officer, to be called Commissioner, who is to discharge the functions of the present Master; and for an officer who, under the name of Public Prosecutor, is to conduct all criminal prosecutions in the High Court, advise on all criminal prosecutions in the Mofussil Courts, and appear for the Crown in all criminal appeals from the Mofussil, Rs. 200 a month!!

This we can hardly credit, especially as it is said that Rs. 406 a month has been, or is to be, assigned as salary for the comparatively easy duty of reporting cases in the High Court. We by no means consider this salary excessive, quite the reverse, for we are well aware of the value of good reports, especially at the commencement of the working of the High Court; but taking this as a fair and proper salary, which we consider it to be, that said to be contemplated for the onerous, important, and highly responsible office of public prosecutor, which would require the almost exclusive attention of an experienced practitioner, seems really an insult to common sense; and Rs. 900 for the duties of master is hardly less so.

In saying this, it is not to the Chief Justice that we mean to attribute blame, even if the report we refer to be correct. We believe the Government, i.e., the civilian members thereof, to be the parties really responsible. Economy is of course the pretext, but we can conceive no worse economy than that of crippling the High Court at its first start, into insufficiency. Moreover, we doubt whether this is in reality the only motive. Civilians of the old school, as a body, never did sympathise with the Supreme Court or the legal profession, and we suspect that there still remains enough of the old leaven to exercise a very wide influence. To this school, Sir Henry Montgomery is well known to belong; and rumour has it, that it is mainly to his efforts in the Indian Council, Madras owes the denial of a third Barrister Judge to her, while the Bombay Court has obtained one.

We believe, too, that a not very legitimate use has been made there of poor Sir Henry Davison's enforced absence from the bench, and of the strenuous over-exertion by which, during that time, Sir Adam Bittleston partly managed to prevent business from falling into arrears; but we shall say no more on this point at present.

There is, however, another matter which, it occurs to us, is very likely to have had a considerable share in the anxiety which, as report says, the civilian members of Government have been exhibiting to minimize the High Court establishment. It was a favourite maxim of most civilian judges (though men like Mr. Holloway and Mr. Collett know better) that anything like legal education was rather a disqualification for the bench; that Mr. Strange's favourite nostrum, a "simple procedure" and "common sense," were the only two requisites; that forms and law were alike superfluous. Mr. Strange, we take it, is not the man to give up that crotchet of all among the many which have rendered him famous.

As regards the two Registrarships on the Original and Appellate sides, we have not heard what salary is contemplated for either; but we believe that the late registrar of the Sudder Adawlut being a civilian, and as such having, probably, the ear and good wishes of the two Civil Members of Council, a strenuous attempt has been, and is being, made to exalt him over the head of the late Registrar of the Supreme Court, both as regards position and salary. This, we do not hesitate to say, would be decidedly unfair to the latter. At worst, he should be placed on a footing of equality with the other registrar; and even this, we feel satisfied, would not be doing him justice; when we consider, in addition to his other labours, the very serious amount of work that has devolved on him under the new Procedure Code, as regards issuing of summonses and settling issues in chambers with Sir Adam Bittleston, whose heavy work and late sittings in that department appear, we are sorry to say, to be telling visibly on him, and are certainly considered excessive by all others professionally engaged in them. The Chief Justice, also, is showing the effects of hard work, though so lately arrived.

While on this point, we may say at once, that it is no use for the High Court to attempt to carry on as it has been doing. It should at once insist upon an additional Barrister Judge. The two present judges are working at high pressure; so high, that it is already plain they are not likely to hold out long at the present pace; and yet the business has already fallen largely into arrears, and those arrears are increasing every day. The old Supreme Court was extinguished on the 18th August last. Its arrears have since been brought on for disposal at four or five separate sittings, interposed between either sittings for disposal of new cases in the High Court, under the new Procedure Act—an arrangement which has entailed great inconvenience and expense to suitors, and their attorneys and witnesses, besides obliging counsel to get up their cases over and over again, after they have been clean forgotten—and on Friday last these unhappy Supreme Court remnants were again adjourned from February to May next. The judges are doing all they can, but they cannot do impossibilities. They require at least one additional Barrister Judge, and should have him at once. If all arrears were once disposed of, perhaps (though we doubt it) five judges might suffice to dispose of the then current business; but convinced as we are of the soundness and value of the principle to carry out which the Supreme and Sudder Courts were amalgamated, we are satisfied that it is the worst possible policy to compel that Court, by keeping it unduly short-handed, to exhibit itself as unable to deal with the current business, from being overwhelmed with arrears, which every day only tends largely to increase.—Madras Athenæum, March 7.

MISCELLANEOUS.

CAUSES OF MR. PLUNKETT'S SUICIDE.—KURACHEE, March 7.—This has been a most eventful week for us. In the first place, on Monday morning the acting manager of the Bank of Kurachee lodged a complaint before the deputy-magistrate, Mr. Boulton, to the effect that the late manager, Mr. George Plunkett, had gone early that morning to the bank premises, ordered the peon in attendance to open the doors, and taken certain papers away; and moreover that, on opening the safe, the English and Sindee cash-books were found missing, and that, as Mr. Plunkett had not delivered over the duplicate keys to the acting manager, it was legitimate to suspect that, while in the bank, and while the peon had been sent upstairs, Mr. Plunkett had opened the safe and abstracted the books to conceal the extent of the frauds in which he was implicated. The magistrate, instead of arresting Mr. Plunkett, and granting a search warrant, as applied for, sent on Tuesday for Mr. Plunkett, who produced a receipt from Mr. Byramjee Pestonjee, the acting manager, for all the keys. This led Mr. Boulton to suppose there was a mistake, and he warned Mr. Pestonjee to be very careful how he pressed the charge, and even advised him to withdraw it. But Mr. B. having a memorandum in Mr. P.'s handwriting, stating that two of the keys were with the chairman, further investigation would doubtless have been held, had not the mystery been solved by the tragic event which transpired on the following day, and which put an end to the affair. On that day (Wednesday) the shareholders were to meet to hear the report of special auditors appointed to examine the books, and on that day, too, a bill of rupees 8,000 in which Mr. Plunkett was interested, drawn by a firm in which he was, and still is supposed to have been, a partner, fell due, and the head of that firm intended to repudiate it. Mr. Plunkett did all he could to prevent this, or to meet the bill otherwise, but failing, at about three o'clock in the afternoon, while in the office of the firm above alluded to, he took in a glass of beer about three drachms of cyanide of potassium, which he had obtained from a photographer on the 26th ultimo, under the pretence of wishing to remove ink stains from some pocket-handkerchiefs; and when his presence was demanded at the bank, the shareholders were thunder-struck at the intelligence that the unfortunate man was dying. Of course the meeting broke up at once, and several persons ran over. Dr. Bean, the civil surgeon, although promptly on the spot, could do nothing for Mr. Plunkett, who expired in a few minutes. His corpse was taken to his house in camp shortly after, and on Thursday Mr. Henry Ingle, the deputy-collector and magistrate, was employed from 10 A.M. until after 6 P.M. with an inquest, the result of which was a verdict that :— "From the evidence rendered, the members of the Court of Inquest are of opinion that Mr. George Plunkett died from the effects of some form of prussic acid taken while in a state of temporary insanity, brought on by extreme mental excitement." On Friday the remains of the deceased were interred. He leaves a wife and five children, I believe, and a large circle of highly respectable relatives to deplore his tragic end. His misfortunes date from an ill-starred venture at pearl-fishery in the Persian Gulf some six months ago, in which it is said the firm he claimed to be a partner of, as well as a native merchant of the town, had a share, but who, he asserted to his last, had left him in the lurch when, through the interference of the Government to protect the rights of the divers, it had proved ruinous. It seems he involved himself in the purchase of apparatus, the chartering of a steamer, and the getting up of a party, to the amount of Rs. 20,000, and that, seeing he was left to bear it alone, tried every means to meet his liabilities, and not succeeding, put an end to his life as already stated. Unfortunately, while under the pressure of demands against him, he was weak enough to use the funds of the bank, and to make false entries in its books to conceal the deed. This, however, had already been discovered, and steps adopted and perfected to secure the shareholders against loss, and he had been allowed, for the sake of his family, to resign, instead of being prosecuted. But a prosecution must have ultimately followed, on the discovery of fresh frauds by the special auditors, and feeling this could not be averted as long as the evidence of his guilt remained in the bank, he no doubt abstracted the cash-books as I have already mentioned. Yesterday (Saturday) saw the end of all this. The shareholders met, and after the auditor's report had been received, and the extent of the frauds practised detailed, it was resolved unanimously to wind-up the affairs of the bank; and to carry this determination out, Mr. McIver was appointed sole liquidator of its affairs.

HINDU VISITORS TO ENGLAND.—The translations from the native journals in the Bombay Times mention the proposed departure for England of several educated Hindoos, of whom the chief are Mr. Kursondas Mooljee, Rao Bahadoor Ramchunder Balcrinajee, and Rao Saheb Vishwanath Narayan. The first is well known as the defendant in the Maharaj libel case. The second is the head dusterdar to the commissioner of customs; and the third is a deputy inspector of schools, both being distinguished alumni of the Elphinstone College. They proceed to England for the purpose of commerce in connection with a firm which a rich Bania gentleman of Bombay is about to establish in London. Mr. Kursondas will be the first Banian, and Rao Saheb Vishwanath the first Maratha Brahmin, to set foot on the shores of England.

OZONE.—Some time ago we directed attention to the interesting results of Dr. Ireland's experiments, when an invalid at Kussowlee, as to the conditions of the presence of ozone, the active and disinfecting principle of oxygen. The Bombay Times, says Dr. Cook of that Presidency, has been conducting similar experiments. In 1861 he discovered that all trees yield ozone—not only the coinferae—and that the ozone increased as the foliage was at once luxuriant and in a position to enjoy a free supply of air. He has proved that charcoal also is a producer of ozone. The Bombay Government has called on Dr. Cook to sketch a plan for the systematic registration of ozone throughout the Presidency. The plan is about to be carried out, but the details are not fully settled. It is intended to give to Dr. Cook the task of drawing up the statistics, and eliciting what facts he may be able to gather from the general returns of the presidency.

ACCIDENT TO A STEAMER.—The Scindian of the 16th inst. reports an accident to the Sutlej:—"A message came in, at about 1 o'clock on Saturday morning, bringing intelligence of the grounding of the Oriental Steam Company's steamer Sutlej, at the Kiddeawarre mouth of the Indus. Mr. Dunn, superintendent of the company, started at 10 o'clock a.m., in the Rifle, with workmen and gear, to relieve the steamer; and, in the course of the evening, the Hugh Lindsay was despatched with flats, to render further assistance. We made enquiries, a few minutes ago, as to the operations of the relieving party, but learnt that no reliable intelligence had as yet been received from the seat of the disaster. The Sutlej, which was on her way down, is heavily laden with cotton, and so are two barges she has in tow.—Times of India.

CHINA.

HONG KONG, March 15.—The rebel victory at Tai-tsan on the 16th ult. has been succeeded by another victory at Shaouhing (more properly Shaou-hsing), ninety miles from Ningpo, which took place on the 20th of February. This is, unfortunately, the second repulse which the Imperial disciplined troops have met with before Shaouhing; in the first attempt to take the city General Lebrethon, it will be remembered, was killed by the bursting of a gun, and the troops under his command became disheartened in consequence. On this occasion General Tardif, his successor, was also killed by the fire of his own men as he was leading the assault. For a second time, too, the assault was impeded by the want of proper means for crossing a moat that surrounded the city—the first time being at Tai-tsan. Such blunders are beginning to prove expensive. It continues to be noticed that the rebels seem well supplied with European arms, of the newest pattern, if we may judge by the bullets that have proved so fatal in the Imperial ranks. Captain Dew and Lieutenant Tinling, from her Majesty's ship Encounter, were present at the second attack upon Shaouhing, in the capacity, it is said, of spectators. Lieut. Tinling received a wound in the head, which has proved fatal; he died in Ningpo a day or two after receiving it. Captain Dew and he were both undoubtedly absent from duty on the unhappy occasion, and the event will likely put an end to British officers travelling beyond a radius of thirty miles.

After the defeat at Tai-tsan, General Staveley took a force to Kahding, and scoured the adjacent country. All was quiet. Captain Gordon, R.E., has been appointed by Prince Kung to the command of Ward's force. He was recommended for the post by General Staveley and Sir F. Bruce.

From Pekin we have no news. Prince Kung seems to be as active as ever in reforming the general administration of the empire. The viceroy, who was a month ago appointed to succeed Laou at Canton, has been called to Pekin to receive, it is supposed, instructions of a personal kind as to the imperial policy with regard to foreigners. A new Taou-tai has been sent from Pekin to Chaouchow-fu to settle matters at Swatow. Shing Pau, the Chinese general, who is answerable for the death of Major Brabazon and others, has been arrested and brought for trial to the capital on various charges of fraud and extortion, and he will most likely lose his head in consequence. He is succeeded in the command of the army in Shensi and Honan by To-lung-ah, a Tartar commander of high reputation, of whom Sir Harry Parkes has recorded a favourable opinion in the Yang-tze Expedition Blue book. To-lung-ah and Sang-ko-lin-sin are now the two principal commanders on the north of the Yang-tze; whilst in the southern regions the Imperial Commissioner Tseng-kwo-fan remains generalissimo.

From the three northern ports, Chefoo, Newchwang, and Tientsin, we shall now have regular intelligence, as the ice has broken up for the season. Rebels from Shantung are stated to have been 100 li (or thirty miles) from Tientsin when the last advices left. The fact of their coming no nearer than thirty miles almost seems to show that they have heard of the "radius." They are said to have cut off the heads of several mandarins. The season in the north has been very mild.

From Chinkiang we hear that the Taepings have been troublesome in the river, plundering junks; the gunboat Staney has had to interfere. The Yang-tze is reported to be far from safe at present. The residents at Chinkiang have good deer and pheasant shooting close at hand; the winter has been a mild one.

All is quiet in Shanghai. The Imperialist troops are said to have been defeated by the rebels at Plover Point.

The news from Japan is scanty. Nothing has happened to alter the alarming aspect that affairs are there assuming. All reports speak of increased vigour on the part of the Japanese Government in military matters; the army is being brought to a high state of effectiveness. Admiral Kuper has gone to Japan, but his object has not transpired. He is said to have gone to demand a fine of £125,000 for Mr. Richardson's murder; if so, this is the beginning of hostilities which must prove most costly and disastrous to England.—Overland China Mail.

Artillery New Brigades.

His Royal Highness the Field Marshal Commanding in Chief, with the concurrence of the Right Hon. the Secretary of State for India in Council, has decided that, in future, all vacancies amongst the officers of the new brigades in India shall be filled up in the same manner as those in the old royal artillery, and that the promotions consequent thereon shall appear first in the London Gazette, instead of being made, and provisionally gazetted, in India, as at present.

To facilitate this arrangement, and to avoid the inconvenient and unnecessary delays that now arise, commanding officers of brigades will immediately report to this office any casualties that may occur amongst their officers, giving the date, place, and cause of each casualty. In case of batteries detached from their brigade head quarters, this information is to be forwarded direct to this office by the first mails after the occurrence of the casualty. The death of any officer who may be in Europe is in like manner to be reported to this office instead of to the presidency to which he may have belonged, and his corps will thus gain the advantage of the promotion much sooner than under the existing arrangement, whilst, by all promotions being carried out in one office, all doubts and difficulties will, it is hoped, after the first start of the new system, be done away with.

BY THE COMMANDER IN CHIEF.

INVESTITURE OF THE VICTORIA CROSS.

Adj. Gen.'s Office, Poona, March 20.—No. 220.—Adverting to extracts from the London Gazette of Feb. 25, 1862, and Aug. 13, 1861, republished in G.O. No. 273, of April 14, 1862, the C. in C. has much pleasure in notifying to the army that the Victoria Crosses, which her Most Gracious Majesty the Queen has been pleased to confer on the officers noted in the margin:—

Maj. R. H. Keatinge, staff corps;
Capt. J. Blair, 2nd cav.;
Lieut. W. F. F. Waller, 25th regt. N.I.I.;
Private McDougall, 44th foot; to commemorate the acts of bravery recorded in the

Gazettes above mentioned, have been presented to them in the following manner:—

Upon the C. in C. devolved the important duty of investing Lieut. W. F. F. Waller, 25th N.I.I., with the Victoria Cross, and it was carried out as follows:—

On Monday, Sept. 29, the troops composing the Poona and Kirkee brigade (D battery R.H.A., No. 1 battery R.A., No. 6 battery R.A., 3rd regt. L.C., sappers and miners, 95th foot, 103rd foot, 25th regt. N.I.I., 26th regt. N.I.), under the command of Maj. gen. Hale, having been paraded, the C. in C. being in front of the troops, read the letter from the Right Hon. the Secretary of State for War, of Oct. 30, 1862, and a copy of the London Gazette recording the act of valour, and presented the Cross to Lieut. Waller, who was thus decorated in the presence of the regiment which witnessed his bravery.

Owing to the great distance at which Maj. Keatinge, staff corps, political agent, Kattywar, Capt. Blair, 2nd regt. L.C., and Private McDougall, 44th foot, were serving from army head quarters, and the inconvenience to the service that would have occurred in bringing them to Poona, Sir William Mans was unable to have the gratification of presenting in person the Victoria Crosses to these gallant soldiers.

The duty was therefore delegated, in the case of Major Keatinge, to Brigdr. J. Liddell, c.b., as Major Keatinge happened to pass through Bombay when Sir W. Mansfield was on tour; in that of Capt. Blair to Major gen. Sir C. V. Stranbenzee, k.c.b.; and in that of Private McDougall to Brigdr. F. Adams, c.b.; these officers were instructed to carry out, in the manner best adapted to evince her Majesty's sense of the noble daring displayed by these soldiers before the enemy, and to testify her Majesty's wish that a distinction in which the officer or private may equally share might be highly prized and eagerly sought after by all, of whatever rank or degree, in her Majesty's naval and military service.

The C. in C. has had the pleasure of receiving from Major gen. Van Stranbenzee and Brigdrs. Liddell and Adams, a report of the Victoria Crosses having been duly presented on the dates specified.

To Major Keatinge on Jan. 13, at a parade of all the troops composing the Bombay garrison, and in the presence of H.E. the Gov. Sir Bartle Frere, and a large concourse of spectators.

To Capt. Blair on Feb. 5, in the presence of the troops serving at Rajcoote, and a number of spectators.

To Private McDougall on Sept. 2, 1862, at a brigade parade of the whole of the troops composing the Belgaum brigade, and in the presence of a number of ladies and gentlemen, native chiefs, and the respectable portion of the inhabitants of the town and camp of Belgaum.

On these occasions the instructions of her Most Gracious Majesty as above referred to were strictly attended to.

Official Papers.

SERVICES OF THE ENGINEERS EMPLOYED IN THE CONSTRUCTION OF THE EAST- ERN BENGAL RAILWAY.

GOVERNMENT OF BENGAL, PUBLIC WORKS DE- PARTMENT.

From the Officiating Joint Secretary to the Government of Bengal, in the Public Works Department, Railway Branch, to the Secretary to the Government of India, Public Works Department, (Fort William, the 17th January, 1863).

Mr. Purdon, the Chief Engineer of the Eastern Bengal Railway, being about to retire from the employ of the Company, has submitted a report naming the officers connected with the undertaking who seem to him to be deserving of commendation, and I am directed to forward a copy of it with the following observations:—

2. Mr. Purdon's own services appear to the Lieutenant-governor to be highly deserving of the favourable notice of the Governor-general in Council. The zeal with which he has discharged his duties and the rare judgment and ability that have characterised his operations entitle him to an official expression of the satisfaction of the Government, and his Honor trusts that H.E. the Viceroy's approval of his exertions may be communicated before Mr. Purdon leaves.

3. The Lieutenant-governor also desires to bring forward the services of Mr. Leslie (now in England) who was superintendent of the iron bridge department and engineer of the Calcutta district, and of Mr. Prestage (at present officiating as Resident Chief Engineer), who held charge of the furthest district of the railway. The value of Mr. Granville's services to the company, and his skill as an architect, are already well known to and appreciated by the Government.

4. His honour likewise altogether agrees in the justice of the tribute paid to the personal merits of Mr. Henfrey, the agent and partner in this country of the contractors, with regard to which gentleman the Officiating Consulting Engineer has also recorded that "it is not too much to say that the success of the contractors' operations is due principally to his tact and management."

From Lieut.-Col. R. Strachey, R.E. Secretary to the Government of India, Public Works Department, with the Governor-General, to the Officiating Joint Secretary to the Government of Bengal, in the Public Works Department, Railway Branch, dated the 24th Feb., 1863.

I am directed by H.E. the Viceroy to reply to your letter No. 192 G. dated 17th ultimo, bringing to the notice of the Government of India the services of the Engineers engaged on the construction of the Eastern Bengal Railway, the opening of which line has recently taken place.

2. H. E. has much gratification in expressing his full concurrence in the high eulogium passed on the ability that has characterised the operations of Mr. Purdon, the chief engineer of the company, and requests that the Lieutenant-governor will convey to that gentleman the assurance that the Government of India cordially acknowledges the services he has rendered to the country by the skill with which he has laid out and directed the works of the Eastern Bengal Railway.

3. The Governor-general also desires that Messrs. Leslie, Prestage, and Granville may be assured that the Government of India is fully sensible of their meritorious services; and that Mr. Henfrey may be informed that the successful prosecution of an undertaking of such magnitude as this railway, under circumstances so novel to English contractors, entitles him to the hearty approval and congratulations of the Government.

A PROPOSED EXHIBITION.

From the Secretary to the Government of Bengal to the Secretary of the Agricultural and Horticultural Society of India—(Fort William, March 6, 1863).

Sir,—The Lieut.-gov. has been led to think that it would tend materially to promote good agriculture in these provinces especially, by drawing the attention of the native zemindars to the subject, and enlisting their interest in it, if an Exhibition were to be held next year in the neighbourhood of Calcutta under the general direction of the Government.

2. His Honour desires me to invite the assistance and co-operation of the society in framing and carrying out a plan for such an Exhibition, if the project should appear to them likely to be useful. The object of the Exhibition would be to bring together from all parts of the country, for the purpose of show, competition, and eventual sale, cattle and other live stock, agricultural implements, and all kinds of produce.

3. It is anticipated that an exhibition of this kind would be self-supporting, and that the expenses of it would be covered by the sale of admission tickets to the public. The Lieut.-gov. would look to the society to conduct the details of the Exhibition, assisted by the officers of Government and others who may be expected to take an interest in the undertaking, and his Honour is prepared, on the part of the Govt., to advance the funds necessary to carry it out.

4. His Honour desires also to be permitted to place at the society's disposal, for the purpose of the Exhibition, the grounds adjoining Belvidere on the south, about thirty-five acres in extent.

5. In order to give ample time to exhibitors to prepare for the occasion, the Lieut.-Governor would propose that the Exhibition should take place next January. It will probably be most convenient that it should commence on Monday the 18th, and terminate on Saturday the 28th of that month, the public being admitted during the whole week at such rates of payment as may hereafter be fixed. One day should be set apart for the award of prizes to the most successful competitors in the several departments.

6. The Lieut.-Governor would be glad to receive an early reply to this communication, and to confer personally with the President and any members of the society as to the steps proper to be taken to promote the object in view.—I have the honour to be, Sir, your most obedient servant,

E. H. LUSHINGTON,
Secretary to the Government of Bengal.

A MAHOMMEDAN TARQUIN.—A gross outrage was perpetrated here (in Oude) the other day. It appears that at one of the mahals, the residence of an officer on the staff, several ladies and gentlemen were staying as guests; but one lady's husband was out in camp for practice. One night she was aroused by some one standing near her bedside, and as it was dark she supposed the person to be a thief, and became alarmed. On his threatening to kill her if she made a noise, she screamed, and the villain thereupon put his hand to her mouth, and threatened violence if she did not remain quiet. She, however, indignantly thrust him aside, and gave vent to her terror and rage by the utterance of repeated shrieks, which roused some of the inmates of the rooms near hers, and they succeeded in seizing the intruder before he could make his escape. When a light was brought in, it was discovered that the scoundrel was no other than a kitmutgar in the service of one of the gentlemen visitors. He was sent off to the magistrate, by whom he was tried and sentenced to hard labour on the roads for a period of seven years.

AN AWKWARD CASE.—Absorption is never a pleasant process to undergo. We think our readers will agree that it must be especially unpleasant under the following circumstances. The officers of the 19th Hussars, junior to the major, the other day, according to the custom in such cases among her Majesty's Indian regiments, made up a purse of Rs. 30,000 for their major's step. The major takes the money and sends in his papers, when lo! out comes the announcement that certain Hussar Regiments, among them the 19th, are to be decreased by a troop, the supernumerary officers being absorbed. The consequence, of course, is that the only people who benefit the least by the transaction are the major, who pockets all the money, and the senior captain, who gets the major's step. To all the rest it is a dead loss. Knowing as the Government do that purchase on this system was carried on, and was authorised and permitted and sanctioned, it is, to say the least, most inconsiderate to take a step like that of the reduction of a corps without giving notice. The major may not yet have gone—in that case, disagreeable as may be the duty, we should feel bound to pat him on the shoulder and gently hint that that Rs. 30,000 must be refunded. "Unpleasant work that refunding, but you see, Major, it must be done." Our advice to those concerned is to memorialise his Excellency the Commander-in-chief at once.—Dalhi Gazette.

GREAT SOUTHERN OF INDIA RAILWAY COMPANY.

At one o'clock to-morrow the fifth annual general meeting of this company is to be held at the London Tavern. The line from Tanjore to Trinchinopoly was opened on March 11, 1862. The directors have prepared their revenue accounts, showing the results of the working of the entire first section of the railway during the period of nearly ten months. The revenue statements for the two half-years ending June 30 and December 31 are exhibited separately. The total receipts on account of revenue for the year amounted to Rs. 2,38,600-13-1, and expenditure to Rs. 1,05,033-8-4, leaving a balance of Rs. 1,33,567-4-9 available for the dividend. The number of passengers carried was 313,725, about 94 per cent. being due to third-class traffic.

COAL-MINES IN INDIA.

AMONGST the records of Government in the official Calcutta Gazette is a paper of considerable interest on the subject of coal-mines at Thatay Khyoung, near the great Tenasserim River, in Mergui Province. It appears that Lieutenant Harrison, the Deputy-Commissioner, in 1861, had directed his attention to a coal-field which had been for many years neglected on account of the cost of the working. It was first worked for a little while by Government in 1840. In 1854 it was worked by Lieutenant Clare, the then Deputy-Commissioner of Mergui; but as he found that he could not convey the coal, even to the port of Mergui, at less than 34 rupees per ton, the field was again abandoned. Lieutenant Harrison asked for only 1,000 rupees advance, and undertook, with that small sum, to work the mine and sell the coal in Mergui for 12 rupees a ton, at which rate it would never want a market. He thought that if Government would afford him, at this small cost, an opportunity to show that coal could be delivered from the mine at that rate, many private individuals or companies would eagerly take the trade out of the hands of the Government. Lieutenant-colonel A. Fytche, the Chief Commissioner of the Tenasserim and Martaban Provinces, in forwarding his subordinate's spirited proposal to Government, together with a box of specimens of the coal, seems to have thought more of his own discovery of tin ore in the bed of a stream than of Lieutenant Harrison's offer, and instead of supporting him in his modest request for Rs. 1,000 for a great public purpose, takes especial care to tell the Government that if the sum of Rs. 1,000 is advanced, it could not be met from the current year's budget. He then gives an elaborate, but not, however, by any means unimportant or uninteresting account of the tin ore, specimens of which he had himself collected. The Government declined to advance the pitiful hundred pounds for the coal experiment, and the only return or encouragement to the Commissioner and his assistant for labours and inquiries, was the announcement that their specimens of coal and tin should be safely deposited in the Geological Museum of Calcutta; and though the sum of £100 was not to be advanced for the coal or tin mines of Mergui, if private persons were disposed to work them on a large scale, those officers might afford them every facility and encouragement; the facility or encouragement, however, we may fairly conclude, was to cost nothing to the State. This is the way in which the vast natural resources of our great Indian possessions have been neglected, and it is an additional indication of the cold indifference of the Indian Government on such subjects that Lieutenant Harrison's proposal was dated the 17th of August, 1861, and was not answered until the 20th of March, 1862. These gentlemen were not much encouraged to make further researches into the resources of the country, for they no doubt thought that seven months was a long while to wait for such an answer as that with which they were at last honoured.

SALE OF WASTE LANDS IN INDIA.

THE question of the sale of waste lands in India is still a vexed question, though Mr. Harrington's late Bill ought to have set the matter at rest. Amongst the opponents of Sir Charles Wood's proceedings on this question is Mr. John O'Brien Saunders, who is well known in India as for a long time the editor of the Calcutta Englishman. Mr. Saunders is a man of great ability and experience, and is entitled to be listened to with respect on all Indian questions, for he is well acquainted with India and the character of the people. He has published a pamphlet on the subject of the Sale of Waste Lands and on the Law of Contract. We venture to take a different view of the two questions which he has therein discussed. He has indeed urged all the objections that can be brought against Sir Charles Wood's decision with great force; but then he has not, we think, looked on the other side of the matter with quite the same attention. He is very anxious, for example, to protect the interests of the individual settler who may have discovered at some personal expense and trouble a piece of waste land of great "capabilities." He thinks it hard that it should be put up to the highest bidder, and not sold at once to the first applicant. He gives an eloquent account of the intending settler's long travels, his heavy expenses, his exposure to the climate, and his hopes and disappointments. We admit at once that no serious man would withhold his sympathy and goodwill from the energetic adventurer; but, then, the public interests are surely not to be sacrificed to this personal feeling. "If," says Mr. Saunders, "he (the adventurer) has found the land he is in search of, to the extent of from one to three thousand acres, with its rich valleys and pleasant sites, on which he may dwell with comparative safety, above the influence of malarious exhalations, others are to benefit at his cost by the labours and anxieties he has undergone, few will be found to undertake the risk. And yet, this is the result of Sir Charles Wood's interference with Lord Canning's well-matured plans." Mr. Saunders would not only have first come first served, but best served; but India is not a wild, and uninhabited, and newly discovered land, without an owner. The unclaimed waste grounds in India are supposed to be the property of the British nation, and the local rulers are the trustees of that property. Would it be quite fair to the State if the first lucky discoverer of some of the best waste lands of rich valleys and pleasant and healthy sites were to take possession of them in perpetuity at a cost infinitely below their real value, and to the exclusion of all competition with other intending settlers? Surely this would be unjust to all other British subjects, who have precisely the same claims in common to the waste lands of India at the prices fixed by the Government, or at the prices obtainable by public sale; and the Government has clearly no right to undersell to one man, secretly, as it were, or in a hole-and-corner fashion, property that would realise ten times the amount if put up to auction. We quite agree with Mr. Saunders that intending British settlers should have every reasonable or possible encouragement,—every indulgence with respect to the mode of payment—all possible facilities of information respecting the situation and character of lands for sale—but no individual amongst them should have a preference over all others, solely on the ground that he has taken more trouble than others to find out a spot exactly to his own taste, and best suited to his own interests and convenience.

Mr. Saunders makes a statement of much importance, to the effect that the waste lands offered for sale are at the absolute disposal of Government, simply because there are no claimants for them, either from their never having been in the occupancy or possession of any other landholder than the Government, from their having lapsed to Government in default of a legitimate heir, or been attached under attainder, or else in possession of Government by right of conquest. "There can, therefore," he says, "be no claimants to the soil itself, and but few, if any, to the occupancy; for no lands are available for purchase that have not lain waste over five years." If this be the case—and we really know not positively whether it be so or not—Sir Charles Wood's anxious consideration for native proprietors is, of course, perfectly needless. But it is clear that both the home and the local Government seem to proceed on a very different supposition. They admit that there may be original proprietors, who will start up some day or other from their long obscurity; and it is agreed that a certain period shall be fixed during which the claims of such original proprietors shall be considered, and that special Courts shall be appointed to adjudicate their claims.

If, as it is said Sir Charles Wood argues, that as the European element increases in India the expenditure for police and civil government will increase too, and the advantages of immigration are more apparent than real, we quite agree with Mr. Saunders in his denial of the probability of this result;—that is to say, the increase of the Government expenditure would by no means be proportioned to the additional revenue which would be derived, more or less directly, from the industry and capital of the settlers—not to mention the moral advantage, of an example to the natives of order and enterprise, and honourable dealing, and the additional support which they would afford to the Government in cases of sedition and rebellion, and the money that might be saved in the military department;—for if we had a large population of English settlers in the country, not only would its natural resources be made the most of, but there would be very much less occasion for so large a body of European troops as is now deemed necessary to overawe the people. Mr. Saunders is very successful in his exposure of the great mistake of those who suppose that the interests of natives and Europeans are antagonistical, and we agree with him that if in the cotton and indigo trade we can put down native fraud we shall do good to all parties, and not to European traders exclusively.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—APRIL 20.

The SPEAKER took the chair at four o'clock.

THE BANDA AND KIRWEE BOOTY.

Mr. ANGERSTEIN wished to ask the First Lord of the Treasury whether the law officers of the Crown had been consulted and had pronounced their opinion on the subject of the Banda and Kirwee booty, and whether there was any objection to communicate their opinion to the House; whether it was the intention of the Government to recommend the distribution of this prize money according to the opinion of the law officers of the Crown; and if the preferential right of the actual captors had been established, whether there was any other cause for delay in distributing this prize money.

Lord PALMERSTON said the Government were not yet able to come to any decision on the subject. He had received counter statements from some of the parties concerned in answer to the statements made adverse to their claims. Until the Government had considered those statements—and they should be well considered—it was impossible to come to any decision. He might state, in explanation, that the matter was not one that turned on a question of law, as there was no law ruling the case. The decision rested entirely in the discretion of the Crown, and that discretion must be governed according to the principles of justice and equity as depending on and governed by the circumstances of the case.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—APRIL 22.

SIAM.

Sir J. HAY asked the Secretary to the Admiralty if he would lay upon the table of the House the report of the attack upon Tringany by her Majesty's ship Scout, on the 11th of November, 1862; the Secretary of State for India if he would lay upon the table of the House any correspondence from the Governor of Singapore or the Government of India on this subject; and the Under-Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs if he would lay before the House the papers containing a correspondence from the Government of Siam and Sir R. Schomburgk on the same subject?

Sir C. WOOD said the answer he was about to give would answer for the other two Secretaries of State referred to. There would be no objection to lay on the table of the House the reports when completed. When Government had received the whole of the papers referred to, he should have no objection to furnish them to the House.

FUNERAL OF THE LATE SIR JAMES OUTRAM.

Mr. P. WYNDHAM asked the Secretary of State for India if it was true that the Indian Government intended to defray the expenses of Sir James Outram's funeral; and if the sergeants of the 78th Highlanders, who volunteered to attend at their own cost from Folkestone, and did so, would not have their expenses allowed to them by the Government?

Sir C. WOOD: On the part of the Government, and with the entire concurrence of the Indian Government, I may say that we thought it only a tribute due to one of the bravest and most gallant officers that ever entered into any service, and who was distinguished alike in his military and civil capacity, that the expenses of his funeral should be defrayed out of the public treasury. With regard to the sergeants of the 78th Highlanders, it was a most touching tribute of respect to their late commanding officer that they should have ventured to come to bear him to his grave, and it certainly ought not to be allowed that they should bear the expenses of their journey, and those expenses also would be defrayed by the Government.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE NEW K.C.B.—Sir Neville Bowles Chamberlain, whom her Majesty has just been pleased to advance to the dignity of a Knight Commander of the Bath, is an officer remarkable for having been wounded, perhaps, more frequently than any other of his years and standing in the service. He is the second son of the late Sir Henry Chamberlain, Bart. (who was for some years Consul-General and Chargé d'Affaires in Brazil), and was born at Rio, January 10, 1820. He was appointed to the Indian army in 1836, and reached India in 1837. He served, while still a subaltern, with much distinction in Afghanistan and Scinde, and was wounded at Candahar and at Ghuznee. In 1842 he was attached to the Governor-general's Body Guards, and in the following year was appointed Deputy-assistant Quartermaster general to the Army of Exercise. In 1848 he was nominated by Lord Dalhousie one of his A.D.C.s, and commanded the 8th Irregular Cavalry attached to the army in the Punjab. In 1855, having already discharged some important civil duties as military secretary to the Chief Commissioner (Sir John Lawrence), he was placed in command of a force of irregular troops, which he retained until the breaking out of the Indian mutiny. On the death of Colonel Chester, before Delhi, Colonel Chamberlain (then brigadier-general) succeeded to the post of Adjutant-general of the Bengal Army, and was severely wounded in the sortie of July 18. He was nominated a C.B. in 1857, and in reward of his services in the mutiny, was appointed an A.D.C. to her Majesty.

LOAN FOR CEYLON.—The agents-general for Crown colonies invite tenders, to be opened on the 6th of May, for Ceylon Government Six per Cent. Debentures, to the extent of £250,000, being the first instalment of a loan of £1,000,000, authorised by the Colonial Legislature to be raised for the construction of a railway from Colombo to Kandy. It is pointed out that the public revenue of Ceylon has, for many years past, exceeded the expenditure, and up to the present date the colony has contracted no public debt, with the exception of a small loan of £100,000, which was borrowed in 1861 to pay off the shareholders of the late Ceylon Railway Company.

SINGAPORE GAS COMPANY.—At the first ordinary general meeting on the 21st inst. of this company, the directors' report was agreed to. The manager at Singapore reports very favourably with regard to the prospects of the undertaking. The total number of shares issued up to December last was 5,054.

COTTON FROM CHINA.—On Friday, the 24th inst., there arrived in the Mersey two ships laden with cotton from China. These two vessels are only the pioneers of a large fleet now at sea laden with "Celestial" cotton for Liverpool. The names of the two arrivals are the Genii from Hong Kong on December 20; and the Juanpore on January 8.

THE "ALABAMA."—The Punjab, Miller, just arrived in the Thames from Calcutta, reports:—At 11 P.M. on the 14th of March, in lat. 8.40 N., long. 81.30 W., while under full sail, saw a ship lying right in her track. She hailed her, and passed right alongside, when they lost sight of her. At daylight they saw a ship bearing down upon them, which, by the aid of a glass, they discovered to be a steamer under sail only. They at once concluded this to be the vessel they had passed. She, however, soon overtook the Punjab, and fired a shot to bring her to. She proved to be the Confederate steamer Alabama. Captain Semmes gave directions for Captain Miller to go on board, when he was told that either he must give a ransom bond or the ship would be burnt. A bond was given for 55,000 dols., and the Punjab was allowed to proceed, taking on board prisoners (crew of the American ship John A. Parks, which had been previously burnt). The Morning Star, also arrived in the Thames from Calcutta, reports:—At 11 A.M., on the 23rd of March, in lat. 23 N., long. 26 W., saw a vessel bearing down upon her under steam. In a short time she overtook her, and received orders to heave to. She was then found to be the Alabama, and Captain Semmes, after ordering the captain on board, compelled him to give a bond for 61,750 dols., or he would burn the ship. The captain having signed the bond the ship was allowed to proceed.

THE INDIAN MUTINY.—A massive monumental cross has just been erected on the grand parade, Portsmouth, in honour of the officers and men who were slain and died of disease during the Indian mutiny. In front of this elegant memorial are four illustrative bas-reliefs, artistically designed and executed. The cross is composed of Sicilian marble; the plinth of Red Mansfield stone, serpentine and green marbles; and the sub-plinth, of granite. The following is the inscription:—"This cross commemorates the services and death of 243 officers, non-commissioned officers, and private soldiers, lost by the 8th (the King's) Regiment, while engaged in suppressing the Sepoy mutiny of 1857-8. Some died in battle, some of wounds, some of disease: all in devoted performance of duty."

THE LATE GOVERNOR OF THE MAURITIUS.—The will of his Excellency Sir William Stevenson, K.C.B., Governor and Commander-in-chief of the Island of Mauritius, was proved in London on the 4th inst., by his cousin, the Rev. F. B. Zincke, B.A., one of the executors; the other executors appointed being Lady Stevenson, the relict, William Stevenson, Esq., his son, and F. A. Marinden, Esq., his son-in-law. The personal property in England was sworn under £20,000. Sir William was appointed Governor in 1857, the income then being £6,000, which was afterwards increased to £7,000. To his relict he has bequeathed, beyond her settlement on marriage of £8,000, a further sum of £8,000 for her life. This amount, on her decease, he leaves to his children. Sir William has also bequeathed to his relict and issue other legacies. To his eldest surviving son £4,000, and to a daughter £2,000, leaving the residue of his property to be equally divided amongst all his children. Legacies are bequeathed to his brother, Colonel Stevenson, and to his sisters.—Illustrated London News.

NEW COTTON COMPANY.—The Anglo-Indian Cotton Company is announced, with a capital of £500,000, in shares of £5 each; but the first issue is limited to only one-fifth of the amount. The object is to promote the cultivation of the superior qualities of cotton (New Orleans and Egyptian, &c.) in certain eligible districts in India possessing direct railway communication with Bombay, by purchasing the raw material from the ryots, and aiding them also with approved gins, hydraulic presses, and the best machinery for cleaning cotton.

A MEETING was held, on the 24th inst., of the creditors of Messrs. Saunders, Ouley, and Co., publishers, and East India army agents, when the liabilities were stated at about £17,000, with assets estimated to produce 10s. or 11s. in the pound. A committee was appointed to investigate the estate.

FIRE DEPARTMENT.

The Company now stands, in point of revenue, seventh on the list of fire offices in the United Kingdom.
Insurances granted against fire at home, in the colonies, and most foreign countries.

FOREIGN RISKS.—The Directors, having devoted great attention to this branch of insurance, are enabled to offer unusual advantages as regards rates of premium and conditions, and a discount is allowed to merchants and others effecting their own and correspondents' insurances.

LIFE DEPARTMENT.

(REDUCED RATES FOR THE EAST INDIES AND CHINA.)

The Directors have recently adopted a new system of Rates for the East Indies and China, by which the insured, instead of being subjected to a heavy extra premium during the years of his residence within the Tropics, has the option of throwing the same over the whole currency of his insurance, by paying an unchanging rate, which it will be seen is very little higher than that now given for residence in Europe.

The following are specimens of the new Rates for civilians:

FIRE! THIEVES!! FIRE!!!

C. H. GRIFFITHS having purchased nearly all the best quality of Fire-proof Safes from the International Exhibition of 1862, including those made by Messrs. Perry, Chatwood, Rhodes, and other eminent makers, is enabled to offer them at half the original cost. The patented improvements of the latter maker render it an impossibility for fire to take any effect under any circumstances of time and place. In consequence of the increasing demand for these essential and valuable repositories, which no house of business, or, indeed, private house (where plate, books, and documents are kept) should be without, in these hazardous and dangerous times, C. H. G. has taken additional premises, 3, Pentonville-road, opposite the Angel, Islington, where he also intends to keep a variety of Second-hand Safes by those eminent large makers, Milner, Price, Mordan, &c., at half the price of new. Sketches, with prices, free by post.
23, Cannon-street West, St. Paul's, London; and opposite the Angel, Islington.

MR. HOWARD, Surgeon-Dentist, 52, Fleet-street, has introduced an entirely new description of ARTIFICIAL TEETH, fixed without springs, wires, or ligatures. They so perfectly resemble the natural teeth as not to be distinguished from the originals by the closest observer. They will never change colour or decay, and will be found superior to any teeth ever before used. This method does not require the extraction of roots, or any painful operation, will support and preserve teeth that are loose, and is guaranteed to restore articulation and mastication. Decayed teeth stopped, and rendered sound and useful in mastication. 52, Fleet-street. At home from Ten till Five.

TENDER & DECAYED TEETH STOPPED with ANODYNE CEMENT, which instantly allays the most violent pain, and fills up cavities, however large, and answers where every other kind of stopping has failed. Prepared only by Mr. ALFRED JONES, Surgeon-Dentist to their late R.H. the Prince's Augusta and Duchess of Gloucester, the late Louis Philippe, and the ex-Royal Family of France, 64, Grosvenor-street, Grosvenor-square. At home from 11 till 4. No connection with any person practising in the same profession.

TEETH AND PAINLESS DENTISTRY.—

Messrs. LEWIN MOSELEY and SONS, 30, Berners-street, Oxford-street, W. direct attention to their GUM-COLOURED ENAMELLED BASE FOR ARTIFICIAL TEETH, GUMS, &c., specially commended at the International Exhibition—Class XVII. No. 3556. Single Teeth, from 5s.; Sets, from Five Guineas.—For the successful result and efficacy of their system, vide "Lancet."

THE OCCHIOMBRA, or TRANSPARENT VENTILATING EYE AND SUN SHADE, excludes wind and dust, and modifies the light, keeping the eye perfectly cool; it can be worn over spectacles, and is easily removed when required.

ALLEN'S

MAPS OF INDIA & CHINA.

MAP of INDIA; showing the British

Territories subdivided into Collectories, and the position and boundary of each Native State; chiefly compiled from Trigonometrical Surveys, executed by order of the Honourable Court of Directors of the East India Company. On six sheets—Size, 5 ft. 6 in. high; 5 ft. 8 in. wide. £2; or, on cloth, in a case, £2. 12s. 6d.; or, with rollers and varnished, £3. 3s.

The object kept in view in compiling this map has been to render it available to the greatest possible extent for popular use. For this purpose the names of all stations, civil and military, are inserted, as well as those of all towns and places of note likely to be looked for. To make clear the subdivisions of the whole of the country, both British and native, the limits of the various districts and collectories, with their names, are distinctly indicated. The railways and telegraphs are laid down, and the trunk roads conspicuously coloured. The newly-acquired district in Burmah is included. To avoid, however, the confusion consequent upon over-crowding, and make the map clear and easy for reference, the names of many small villages, and places of no present importance, have been omitted, and thus a very wide measure of comprehensiveness has been attained, while needless diffusiveness has been avoided.

A GENERAL MAP of INDIA; compiled chiefly from Surveys executed by order of the Honourable East India Company, with the railways and telegraphs. On six sheets—Size, 5 ft. 3 in. wide; 5 ft. 4 in. high. £2; or, on cloth, in a case, £2. 12s. 6d.; or, with rollers and varnished, £3. 3s.

MAP of the ROUTES in INDIA; with Tables of Distances between the principal Towns and Military Stations. On one sheet—Size 2 ft. 3 in. wide; 2 ft. 9 in. high. 9s.; or, on cloth, in a case, 12s.

In this map are given the whole of the military and civil stations, together with the principal towns, the villages being omitted, so as to make the stations more prominent. The colouring defines the boundaries of the three Presidencies and shows also the railways and telegraphs.

MAP of INDIA and CHINA, BURMAH, SIAM, the MALAY PENINSULA, and the EMPIRE of ANAM. On two sheets—Size, 4 ft. 8 in. wide; 3 ft. 4 in. high. 16s.; or, on cloth, in a case, £1. 5s.

MAP of AFGHANISTAN, and the ADJACENT COUNTRIES. On one sheet—Size 2 ft. 3 in. wide; 2 ft. 9 in. high. 9s.; or, on cloth, in a case, 12s.

MAP of CHINA, from the most Authentic Sources of Information. One large sheet—Size, 2 ft. 7 in. wide; 2 ft. 2 in. high. 8s.; or, on cloth, in a case, 11s.

A MAP of the WESTERN PROVINCES of HINDUSTAN, the PUNJAB, CAROOL, SINDE, BHAULPORE, &c., including all the States between Candahar and Allahabad. On four sheets—Size, 4 ft. 4 in. wide; 4 ft. 3 in. high. 30s.; or, on cloth, in a case, £2; rollers, and varnished, £2. 10s.

MAP of ARABIA, from all the most recent Authorities, by order of the Court of Directors of the East India Company. Size, 3 ft. 3 in. high; 4 ft. 3 in. wide. On cloth, in a case, £1. 5s.

HAND-BOOK to the MAPS of INDIA, giving the Latitude and Longitude of all places of note. By Major H. V. STEPHEN, late of Bengal Army Revenue Survey Department. In 18mo, bound, price 6s.

MAP of INDIA; from the most recent Authorities, showing the railways and telegraphs. On two sheets—Size, 2 ft. 10 in. wide; 3 ft. 3 in. high. 16s.; or, on cloth, in a case, £1. 5s.

MAP of the STEAM COMMUNICATION and OVERLAND ROUTES between ENGLAND, INDIA, CHINA, and AUSTRALIA. In a case, 14s.; on rollers, and varnished, 18s.

SARSAPARILLA.

WILKINSON'S (late BRIDGE'S) ESSENCE OF FLUID EXTRACT OF RED JAMAICA SARSAPARILLA is appreciated for its Purity, and marked superiority, daily prescribed by the Faculty for Impurities of the Blood, Affections of the Liver, Constitutional Debility, Attenuation of Body, as an Alternative Medicine at the Changes of the Seasons, and for freeing the system from the effects of Mercury.

In India and the Colonies it is extensively used to prevent taking complaints incidental to Tropical Climates, and as a renovator of the system after Sickness invulnerable.

"A superior preparation, that may always be relied on."—Sir Astley Cooper.

"We are in every respect satisfied with it."—Lancet.

"We recommend your Sarsaparilla as the best."—Medical Review.

"Latterly, in consequence of much debility, &c., subsequent to Cholera, I have freely used 'Bridge's Sarsaparilla' myself, with complete benefit and success."—J. Poett, F.R.C.S.

Sold in pints, half-pints, and quarter pints. One pint is equal to eight pints of the ordinary preparations.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.—The public are cautioned against cheap preparations of Sarsaparilla, which, instead of being what they profess, are nothing but a decoction of common herbs, sweetened with molasses, and flavoured with American Winter Green. The genuine has "Thos. Wilkinson (late Bridge and Co.), 270, Regent-street, London," engraved on each bottle.

AGREEABLE SEIDLITZ POWDER in one bottle, protected by a case with measure and spoon included. This preparation is highly recommended, not only as a Mild Aperient, but to allay Fever, Thirst, &c.

AROMATIC TINCTURE of QUINIDINE for the prevention of Fever, Intermittent or Remittent Ague, and other effects of Malaria. No person exposed to the influence of or predisposing cause of Fevers should be without it, for if taken in small doses daily the system will become so thoroughly impregnated with its principles as to be rendered proof against all attacks of Contagion or Malaria. Sold in pints, half-pints, and quarter-pints.

The above articles prepared only by Thos. Wilkinson (late Wilkinson, Bridge, & Co.), 270, Regent-street, London, W.

To prevent spurious imitations, please to observe that the words "KEATING'S COUGH LOZENGES" are engraved on the Government Stamp of each Box, without which none are genuine.

KEATING'S COUGH LOZENGES.

JUDGED BY THE IMMENSE DEMAND, this UNIVERSAL REMEDY now stands the first in public favour and confidence; this result has been acquired by the test of fifty years' experience. These Lozenges may be found on sale in every British Colony, and throughout India and China they have been highly esteemed wherever introduced. For COUGHS, ASTHMA, and all affections of the Throat and Chest, they are the most agreeable and efficacious remedy.

Prepared and sold in Boxes, Tins, and Bottles of various sizes by THOMAS KEATING, Chemist, &c., 79, St. Paul's Churchyard, London. Sold retail by all Druggists and Patent Medicine Vendors in the World.

PRICHARD'S AROMATIC STEEL PILLS

stand unequalled for restoring vigour to weak and relaxed constitutions, and have been proved to be the best medicine ever offered to the public. To those who are suffering from languor and exhaustion occasioned by a residence in hot climates, these Pills will be found particularly beneficial. They give energy to the muscles and nerves, strength to the stomach, and completely renovate the system, so that the patient is astonished at the effects produced.

Prepared by W. PRICHARD, Apothecary, 65, Charing-cross, London. In boxes 1s. 1d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., and 11s. May be had of all Medicine Vendors.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT and PILLS.—

Indisputable remedies for bad legs, old wounds, sores and ulcers. If used according to directions given with them, there is no wound, bad leg, ulcerous sore, or bad breasts, however obstinate or long standing, but will yield to their healing and curative properties. Numbers of persons who have been patients in several of the large hospitals, and under the care of eminent surgeons, without deriving the slightest benefit have been thoroughly cured by Holloway's Ointment and Pills. For glandular swellings, tumours, scurvy, and diseases of the skin, there is no medicine that can be used with so good an effect. In fact, in the worst forms of disease, dependent upon the condition of the blood, these medicines are irresistible.

THE POLISH CAPTIVITY:

An Account of the present Position and Prospects of the Poles in the Kingdom of Poland, and in the Polish Provinces of Austria, Prussia, and Russia.

By H. SUTHERLAND EDWARDS, Author of "Russians at Home."

"A portion of this book on Poland by Mr. Sutherland Edwards has already appeared in our columns, though apparently such a small portion that it is substantially a new as well as a highly opportune production."—The Times, April 9, 1863.

"Mr. Sutherland Edwards not only understands his subject, but what is far more important and uncommon, his readers. He tells his audience precisely the facts which they are desirous to know. The 'Polish Captivity' is full of light but suggestive sketches, pieces justificatives of historic value, national songs and stories, descriptions of Polish towns, Polish notabilities, and Polish women, and is, besides, a book an English lady might read with twice the ease of Mr. Trollope's latest novel."—Spectator, March 28, 1863.

"The book in which Mr. Sutherland Edwards has depicted the 'Polish Captivity' would have been valuable at any time, but the opportuneness of its arrival so enhances its merits, that it is certain to command a greater than ordinary success. It is a subject which few writers are competent to deal with, but Mr. Edwards possesses special qualifications for the task. Personal experience has made him well acquainted with Poland and the Poles; the interest he takes in their fortunes has led him to study the question of their wrongs with zeal and assiduity, and his acquaintance with Slavonic languages enables him to make use of stores of information which are unobtainable to the ordinary student. Consequently, he is entitled to speak with authority, and his opinions on the condition, feelings, and prospects of the various nations which he describes deserve a very different hearing from that which he should give to the crude theories formed by a careless traveller passing hastily through an unfamiliar land."—London Review, March 28, 1863.

"Mr. Sutherland Edwards visited Poland in the interval between the Warsaw massacre and the breaking out of the insurrection. What he saw he has described simply, but forcibly. Few English writers are so likely as he to form a correct judgment on any matter connected with Russia or Poland. His acquaintance with each of these countries, its people, its language, and its literature, gives him advantages which few other travellers possess. In wandering with him about the streets of Warsaw, we feel that we are in the hands of a trustworthy guide, one who can tell us what the people are trusting about, and who can explain the written mysteries which, under the veil of an unknown tongue, elude our baffled eyes. Mr. Edwards's book will be read with deep interest. It is well written, and the narratives are well constructed."—Athenaeum, March 21, 1863.

MAILS TO INDIA.

Mails to India and China, via Marseilles, are despatched from London as follows, viz.:—Those for Bombay packets, on the evening of the 3rd and 18th of each month; and those for Calcutta packets (including mails for Ceylon, Madras, and China), on the evenings of the 10th and 26th of each month. When any of these dates falls on a Sunday, the mails are made up on the following evening.

Letters and Newspapers can be forwarded to any part of India, via Bombay and Marseilles, and in most cases will reach their destination some days sooner than if despatched by the following Calcutta mail. The Bombay mails via Southampton, however, are no longer available for the transmission of Letters or Newspapers to the Madras Presidency.

Mails for the Mediterranean and all parts of India and China, except the Bombay Presidency, are despatched via Southampton on the mornings of the 4th and 20th, or, when either of these dates falls on Sunday, upon the previous evening.

Mails for the Mediterranean, the Presidency of Bombay, and Upper or North-West Provinces of Bengal and China, are despatched via Southampton, on the 12th and 27th of the month, except when these dates fall on Sunday, in which case they are forwarded on the previous evening.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

THE Viceroy reached Simla on the 2nd of April, and the Commander-in-Chief six days later. They will thus at last enjoy a little rest and refreshment after the heat, and dust, and fatigue, and worry attendant upon Indian travel. The Viceroy must have had enough of state ceremonies under canvas and interviews with sable princes. A correspondent of a Calcutta paper states that the Governor-general and the Commander are apparently on the best terms of personal friendship, and that the latter seems inclined to inoculate the former with a love of social gaiety, and even the old proverb is hinted at that "evil communications corrupt good morals."

Lady Frere left Bombay by the present mail for England. Her ladyship gave a farewell "at home" on the 8th of April, at Government-house, which was very numerously attended.

Sir Charles Trevelyan is still hard at work, and, though communicative enough on some points, is peculiarly reserved on the subject of the Income tax. It is suspected that he is waiting for authority from home before he ventures on his own responsibility to attempt so important a measure as the abolition of the Income-tax in India. His experience at Madras has taught him to move with some caution over dangerous ground.

Lord Cranworth is nominated president of the commission appointed to examine into the supposed grievances of the officers of the Indian army, vice Lord Dalhousie, resigned.

The question whether it is expedient to despatch the troops to India by the overland route, instead of, as heretofore, round the Cape, is still under the consideration of the authorities at the India Office. It is important that this question should be decided on an early day, for if the troops are to go by the long sea route, preparations should now be made for their departure. It is understood that about twelve thousand troops will be sent out this season. Such of our readers as have rounded the Cape of Good Hope will understand the great sanitary advantage to the men of the long voyage. Of course, in all emergencies the overland route must still have the preference.

The Friend of India tried hard to persuade Lord Elgin to nominate Dr. Duff Vice Chancellor of the University of Calcutta, but his lordship, it seems, preferred offering the appointment to the Hon. Mr. Maine. The Governor-General may have thought that the natives would have objected to a Christian missionary being raised to so important and influential a post in the Educational Department. The old regulations of the education service, from a respect for native fears and prejudices, excluded all clerical persons, even from the humblest appointments in that department.

A photographic portrait of the man arrested in the Bombay Presidency as Feroze Shah, when forwarded to Delhi, was there pronounced to have no resemblance to the real Feroze Shah, grandson of the late King.

We learn that the Commander-in-chief has granted furlough to the Bengal Native Army, with the exception of those regiments which are employed on the eastern frontier. When practicable, ten per cent. of the effective strength of each corps will be allowed this indulgence, to commence from the 1st April, and terminating at the end of October.

A despatch from Sir C. Wood has been received in India which revises the whole of the rules relating to furloughs and leave of absence for Judges of the High Court of Judicature for Bengal. A copy of the revised rules will be found in our Bengal Official Gazette.

The establishment for a heavy field battery of artillery to be organised at Mhow has been arranged. The command allowance is Rs. 250 per mensem; each officer to have horse allowance, as in light field batteries.

The Hon. William Grey has returned to India, and on the 30th or 1st March was re-appointed to his seat in the Council of the Governor-general of India. He took the oaths as ordinary member of the Council under the usual salute from the ramparts of Fort William.

The proposition for a new building for the telegraph and post-offices of Calcutta, at a cost of nine lakhs, has been abandoned by the Government as too costly an affair.

The Government have determined to afford every facility for coffee and cotton cultivation at Sedashegur, and agriculturists are invited to settle in the district. Five plots of waste lands within an easy distance of Sedashegur have been already surveyed, and are about to be offered for sale.

Major Chesney's draft rules for the introduction of the banking system by the Public Works Department into the Punjab have been adopted with slight modifications.

A company called the Indian Tea Company of Cachar has been raised in London, founded on, and purposing to extend, the operations of the Equitable Tea Company, established in 1857, in the district of Cachar, in Eastern Bengal, one of the most successful of the companies existing in India. The conditions will be found in our advertising columns. The capital will be £100,000, raised by shares of £10 each. The directors state that they will not require more than £80,000 for carrying out their present plan of operations, the period of the issue of the reserved shares to be limited to eighteen months. A dividend of 8 per cent. on the paid up capital for two years from the time of allotment is guaranteed.

India is said to be at this time in a state of profound tranquillity, even the disturbances on the extreme frontiers, to the north-west and north-east, having at last died out.

The Bengal Hurkaru is of opinion that tea-plantations are, for the present, the most popular investments in the Indian market for superfluous capital.

The same paper states that there is a steady influx of Europeans into Assam, Sylhet, and Cachar, and says that it will soon be necessary to amalgamate those provinces into a chief commissionership, with its capital at Shillong, recently selected as a sanitarium for European troops.

The Committee of the British Indian Association object to the new Municipal Bill for Calcutta, on the ground that the natives are unwilling to be taxed for the drainage of the town and the supply of more water. The natives say they are willing to leave the proposed advantages and expenses exclusively to the European inhabitants. They wish the native quarter of the town to remain as it is. Every one who has visited Calcutta will admit that he has never before met with such an accumulation of horrid filth, such a variety of strong perfumes from stagnant drains as are found in the Chitpore Road, the greatest native thoroughfare of the City of Palaces. The "Oriental scrupulosity," in respect to the bath to which Dr. Johnson alludes in his Life of Collins, does not seem inconsistent in the eyes of natives with the most abominable amount of dirt in their streets and houses. Under the very windows of vast mansions, tenanted by Hindu millionaires, are collections of liquid filth which a European might go a mile out of his way to avoid the sight and smell of. We suppose that the local Government will now insist upon the removal of such abominations as these, even though obliged to make the native residents pay their share of the expense.

About three hundred mud huts and sixty brick houses have been destroyed by fire at Bowanipore, or Kallyghat, the village which is supposed to have given the name to the capital of British India. Thirteen lives were lost in the fire.

It has been ruled by the Horse Guards, with regard to claims for unattached promotion without purchase, that no officer of the newly-constituted regiments of the line shall be eligible for such promotion until after the decease of three officers of those regiments who shall have been placed on half pay.

There is about to be established at Paris a sort of international commercial association, to be called the "Société Générale" for the promotion of definite undertakings of a public and commercial character. Amongst the parties connected with it in France are Mr. Schneider, Vice-President of the Legislative Assembly, and Mr. Talabot. Mr. Laing, the late Indian Finance Minister, is to be at the head of the association in London.

His Excellency the Governor of Bombay in Council has ordered the immediate issue of a first distribution of the Dhar prize money at the rate of Rs. 400 each share. The Government order states that instructions for the preparation and submission of claims for Delhi prize money, published in Government General Order No. 8, dated the 6th of January, 1862, will apply equally well to claims on account of Dhar prize money.

Certain officers of the Bengal army en route to England, who served at the siege and capture of Delhi, intend to lay before the Home Government the claim of the Delhi army to a year's service to count as service, as was accorded to those who so gallantly defended themselves in Lucknow during the mutinies.

The Government of India is confident of the pacification of the north-eastern districts. Captain Morton has been ordered to realise all arrears of revenue due by the rebels.

News have been received from Cabul, to the 12th of March, to the effect that the Herat business would probably be settled about the Persian Nouroze (new year). All sorts of supplies were abundant in the Ameer's camp, but money was scarce. The Heratees were badly off for supplies of all kinds.

The troops of the Rajahs of Puttiala and Jheend, who joined the British Army before Delhi in 1857, and took part in the siege and capture of the city; and also the men of the Nubha Contingent, who were engaged with the Jullundhur mutineers at Lodiana, have, through their chiefs, petitioned the Government to grant them the Indian medal. The Government has decided that they are entitled to the decoration, and has ordered the requisite medal rolls to be sent in.

OUTWARD CALCUTTA AND CHINA MAILS OF 20TH AND 26TH APRIL.

The Poonah arrived at Malta on the 30th April, and continued her voyage to Alexandria the same day. All well. The Massilia left Malta for Alexandria at noon on the 2nd inst.

OUTWARD BOMBAY MAIL OF 27TH APRIL.

The new steamship Carnatic arrived at Gibraltar at four P.M. on the 1st inst., ninety-seven hours from Southampton. She continued her voyage at eight P.M.

PENSIONS.—Some of our readers may not be aware that the allowances to the Kandyan State prisoners take their date from 24th January, 1816, the day when the ex-King of Kandy and his family embarked in the ship Cornwallis for Madras. The King died at Vellore on the 30th January, 1832, sixteen years after his exile. The King had four Queens and several other relatives when he died; those now on the list form quite a different generation, receiving the same allowance as their predecessors. If the Royal family continue to multiply at this rate, the pensions will, doubtless, increase in proportion, without any prospect of diminution or cessation.—Colombo Observer.

BENGAL.

THE NATIVE ARMY.

The present position of the officers of the native army is a fine illustration of the vanity of human wishes. Not ten years ago they were hourly importuning Heaven that they might be amalgamated with the Royal army. They prayed to be delivered from all the exclusive privileges they enjoyed, and were only anxious that their brothers-in-arms should have a fair share of the good things pertaining to service in India. They asked for the abolition of all invidious distinctions, and were willing to resign all substantial advantages if only they might be admitted into the military clubs at home. Their prayers were heard in part, and part was "whistled down the wind." As if in compliance with their request, the dii faciles upset the whole system, and now they have full leisure to repent of their too successful exertions, and the too easy accomplishment of their vows. All are now alike in India. The Royal officers are not only eligible for the "fattest" appointments open to military men, but have no reason to complain of too much favour being shown to their comrades of the native army. A general staff corps receives the ambitious of both services into its capacious maw, and may be added to the four things which, according to Solomon, say not; "It is enough." Of what, then, do the Indian officers complain, now that they have obtained all they asked for? True, the military clubs are as hermetically sealed as ever, but that can scarcely be one of the grievances that are ranking in their manly bosoms. That such an entire revolution could be effected without some loss and disappointment, in individual cases, was not to be expected; but private interests must always give way to the public weal, and we imagine that few will contest the ultimately beneficial result of having only one imperial army with its bead-roll of officers anxious to undertake other than mere regimental duties. The recent debate in the House of Lords clearly showed that the Home Government was sincerely anxious to deal fairly and even liberally with the officers of the defunct Service. And considering the manifold difficulties in the way of an universally equitable adjustment of diverse and even antagonistic claims, it must be conceded, that there is comparatively little fault to be found with its general settlement of the different questions that arose. It was unfortunate, perhaps, that a task which required so much tact and courtesy should have devolved upon Sir Charles Wood, a Minister so totally deficient in those two essential qualities. A soft answer, we all know, turneth away wrath, while no gentleman possessed of a spark of self-respect will submit to be snubbed, or put off with a rude and curt reply. Instead of soothing the natural susceptibilities of brave and chivalrous men, galled to the quick by the peculiar circumstances attending the Bengal mutiny, Sir Charles Wood seemed almost to take an impish delight in protracting their period of anxiety, in tantalising them with delusive hopes, in goading them on to throw up the service, and in making them feel their helpless and dependent position. By exhibiting a little more suavity, and by a semblance of that sympathy which every generous heart felt, and above all, by pushing forward without a moment's delay the final organization of the new system, Sir Charles would have escaped much of the ill feeling entertained towards him by officers of the distinct service, while they would have escaped much of the seeming injustice and positive hardship by which their lives have been so long and so unnecessarily embittered. A sense of slight is ever more keenly felt than a sense of wrong. A wrong may be both forgiven and forgotten, but the memory of a slight can never be quite effaced. It is thus Sir Charles Wood has contrived to array against himself a large majority of the officers of the late Indian army, and has acquired the character of being false, unjust and tyrannical, whereas he is in truth only a slave to forms, and in his excessive anxiety to do everything en règle loses sight of the pain, the misery, the sinking at the heart, caused by hope deferred, and the disappointment of an honourable ambition. Lord Ellenborough may be supposed to have done all that lay in his power on behalf of his unfortunate clients. He is not the man to observe any reticence where he thinks a wrong has been done, neither would he spare any trouble in making his case as complete as possible. And yet it must in candour be admitted that he entirely failed to bring any very serious charges against the Government, and in fact did little more than adduce a few exceptional instances in which the new system worked unfavourably for the pecuniary interests of the late Company's officers. It was therefore an easy matter for the Duke of Argyll to cap every case he quoted with one in which the advantage was all on the side of those officers, and the House of Lords, though ever ready to listen to a tale of genuine woe, declined to condemn the Government for not being superhuman, and satisfying all alike.—Bengal Hurkaru, March 25.

THE BRITISH SOLDIER.

Of all the subjects which press themselves upon the attention of the military authorities, both here and at home, that of the condition of the British soldier in India is paramount in importance, and has, we believe, more consideration than any other. Sir Hugh Rose's efforts to ameliorate the evils to which the British soldier is exposed in this country, form one of the brightest features in his career, and will serve, in a great measure, to cast into the shade those indiscretions which we trust will now be suffered to pass into oblivion. Sir Robert Napier is known and appreciated as the friend of the soldier; and it is equally patent that Sir Hope Grant in Madras, and Sir William Mansfield in Bombay, have been ever ready to give the fullest consideration to every measure calculated to promote the real welfare of the ranks. In ventilating the subject of soldiers' clubs, therefore, we are satisfied that we are discussing a subject which will be taken up with interest by almost any man who has ever given a thought to the status of the British soldier under an Indian sun.

The cantonment at Secunderabad is perhaps one of the largest in India, and three or four thousand British soldiers, more or less, are always posted there. Accordingly, some of the officers, amongst whom Colonel John Adaye, of the Royal Artillery, seems to have taken the most active part, started the idea of a soldiers' club. The idea was not a new one; but upon this point we cannot do better than make the following extracts from a little pamphlet on the subject recently circulated by Colonel Adaye:—

"Within the last few years institutions have arisen at various stations of the British army, both at home and abroad, intended for the benefit and amusement of soldiers. They are indifferently entitled 'Homes,' 'Institutes,' or 'Clubs,' but their object and general arrangements appear to be essentially the same.

"At Chatham an 'Institute' has lately been opened, at a cost of £4,000, the half of which was subscribed by Government. At Parkhurst, in the Isle of Wight, there is another. At Gibraltar several 'Homes' have been established, which are much frequented by the men, and which have received considerable support, both from Government and from private subscriptions. At Dum-Dum, near Calcutta, the Indian Government in 1860 purchased the mess-house of the late Bengal artillery, and it is now called 'The Outram Institute,' after that distinguished soldier, Sir James Outram, and is a club for soldiers. There are various other establishments of the same kind either lately opened or in progress.

"The general object of these clubs, as already stated, is the same. In all garrisons, but more especially, perhaps, in India, there are many hours in the day when a soldier is off duty, and when he may therefore spend his time much as he chooses; but the means of healthy amusement, or places for quiet reading, &c., often do not exist. Consequently the soldier is sometimes led to drinking and to crime, more, perhaps, for want of accommodation than from deliberate intention.

"In India, owing to the heat of the climate, the soldiers are unable to enjoy themselves much in out-door exercises and games; the native bazaars possess no attractions, and the barracks being ill-lighted, the men, more especially of an evening, are reduced to wandering about listlessly, without occupation or amusement. It is the intention of these clubs partially to meet these wants and to provide recreation and an agreeable place of meeting for the soldiers, and the idea of a club at Secunderabad was started with these views in March, 1862.

"The European garrison consists of rather more than 3,000 men, as follows:—

4 Batteries Royal Artillery	575
The Royal Regiment	946
18th Royal Irish	930
Total	3,031 men.

"The barracks in the cantonment are so scattered that it was not possible to establish a club at any spot sufficiently central to allow of all the men of the different regiments participating in its advantages, but the Government building, which the brigadier commanding the Hyderabad Sub-idiary Force allowed to be appropriated for the purpose, is as centrally placed as the above-named circumstances would admit, and is within easy reach of about two-thirds of the soldiers at the station.

"The first step taken by the committee was to invite subscriptions from officers towards the preliminary expenses, and their appeal was liberally responded to, the total amount of donations amounting to about 2,660 Hailie sicca rupees—about £233 sterling. With such liberal encouragement, the committee lost no time by painting, decorating, and furnishing, to prepare the club for the reception of the members. The building is well adapted for the purpose, and will hold about 500 men comfortably. It consists principally of three large and lofty rooms. Of these the principal one was plainly but comfortably furnished as a reading-room. The second was fitted up as a coffee-room, the contract for which was given to a respectable Parsee merchant, who undertook to supply articles such as tea, coffee, ginger-beer, cigars, tobacco, cold meat, biscuits, fruit, &c., all at very reasonable rates; and who also engaged to keep a certain number of native servants, so that the men could be supplied with what they required without leaving the occupation or amusement in which they might be engaged. Members of the club and their wives can also purchase other articles out of the coffee-room at cheap rates, such as knives, forks, spoons, paper, pens, envelopes, thread, needles, &c., and oilman's stores. It is necessary to state that no beer or spirits of any kind are allowed in the club, but smoking is permitted at all times. The third room is intended as a library, and books are gradually being collected from various sources, and many officers have contributed in this way; but many more works of an amusing kind are required, so as to form a lending library, the soldiers constantly applying for them to take to their barrack-rooms.

"In the various corridors, and in the verandah which extends quite round the club, a great number of small detached tables and forms have been placed, and each table is supplied with a game, such as dominoes, draughts, solitaire, backgammon, &c., so that the men can associate in small groups for any amusement to which they may feel disposed. The whole of the rooms, the corridors, and verandahs have been hung with lamps (about 115 in number), and every evening at sunset the club is well lighted up until roll call.

"In order to add to the attractions, a platform was built at the end of the largest room, and about once a week concerts given by a corps of the garrison take place of an evening, and are largely attended. The rooms are also decorated with a portrait of her Majesty the Queen, with a few other pictures, shields showing the battles, mottoes, and badges of the regiments in garrison, prints from the Illustrated London News, clocks, &c.

"In front of the club a small garden has been laid out, surrounded by an ornamental wall, and as many ladies and others interested have contributed flowers and seeds, it will shortly prove a great ornament to the institution.

"A skittle alley has been built close to the club, and quoits are provided for those who wish to play. When funds will allow a bagatelle table and a piano will be purchased.

"The above description will probably afford a general idea of the arrangements of the institution, and of the attractions which it offers to the soldiers of the garrison.

"The number of subscribers has somewhat fluctuated, but has always been large, and in the month of June stood as follows:—

Non-commissioned officers	117
Private soldiers	804
			921

"The monthly subscriptions of members is as follows:—

Sergeants	8 annas—1 shilling.
Corporals	6 annas—9 pence.
Privates	4 annas—6 pence.

"As regards attendance of members on ordinary nights the numbers average from 250 to 350; and on concert nights it varies from 700 to nearly 1,000.

"The Club opens daily at 6 A.M., and shuts at roll call. Books are given out each morning to men applying for them.

"Except that the members are invited by notice to come in clean dress to the Club (which is attended to), and also to take care of the property, it has not been found necessary to issue any rules or regulations. The men at all times behave in a perfectly orderly soldier-like manner, and no dispute or irregularity of any kind has occurred since the opening."

Such, then, is the Soldiers' Club which has been established with signal success at Secunderabad.—Englishman.

BURMAH AND THE CAMBODIA.

There are questions involved in the recent Treaty of Commerce with Burmah Proper which do not appear on the surface, but which, nevertheless, exist. They are questions, moreover, which England should be prepared to answer when the time arrives for a prompt response—questions, indeed, which bid fair once more to bring the Tricolour of France and the Ensign of England into antagonism in the East. When the two were last unfurled they were given to the fiery winds of the Carnatic, where Duplex and Clive met to contest the supremacy of the East, and where the latter proved to the soldiers of the first Napoleon that there was no dominion for them on the vast continent of India, and that the British would admit of no rivalry in the land. Since then the subjects of France have dwelt in India either by sufferance of the British or under their flag. Until recently the Gaul has been content to accept the alternative given him by Clive—either to live under British protection in India, or to abandon its soil altogether. The East has, in fact, from the days of Duplex and of Raymond, been a blank in the history of France. It has afforded no field for the acquisition even of la gloire, that chimera which beckons on the armies of France to achievements which to more soberly constituted temperaments are void of any material object; and for the advancement of French commerce it has done no more than for every other nation at peace with England and in the pursuit of commercial enterprise.

The continent of India has, then, afforded no field on which even the present astute ruler of France could perceive a chance of successful rivalry with England. Determined, however, to be no longer without colonial possessions in the East, Louis Napoleon turned his attention to China; there, also, he found the presence of the English a bar to the fulfilment of his ambition. In Cochin China, however, the field was clear; there the Saxon had not thought it worth while to plant his foot, and there Louis Napoleon, failing to recognise the cause of the Anglo-Saxon's absence, determined to plant his peculiar species of the tree of liberty. At much cost of men and money, he has succeeded, but not in the way in which success would have been a triumph to the less imaginative, more practical Briton. Louis Napoleon has created a military colony, not a commercial one. It is a drain upon the revenues of France rather than an addition to them, but it serves the purpose of the French Emperor: it gives him an opportunity of eulogising the French army and dwelling upon the advancement of French civilisation and French commercial progress in the Far East. Again, then, has France placed her foot upon eastern soil—in this latter instance, to all appearance, in a quarter in which rivalry with England must be out of the question. Any clashing with the interests of England until now certainly did appear remote; but the treaty of commerce entered into between the British Government and the King of Burmah brings this contingency much nearer to us than we are at all prepared for.

Of course England can have no wish whatever to dispute with France her possession of Saigon, Hue, or Touran, with their vast area of rich cultivation, malaria, fever, and ague. But ere many years are past, free navigation of the Cambodia will be essential to the commerce, which will arise in the states bordering on the British possessions in Burmah. It is true that though the King has signed this treaty, the war party in his capital are opposed to it, and will not fail to put every obstacle in the way of its fulfilment. But such opposition but makes the more certain the eventual progress of commerce and civilisation, not alone in Burmah Proper, but in Yunnan and thence to the southern boundary of China itself. Opposition to the will of the British when that will is supported by the Burmese ruler will but cause, first, the downfall of the "war party" through British instrumentality; next, the adoption of measures to insure a strict observance of every provision of the treaty. That this will lead to the eventual absorption of the whole of Burmah into the British possessions, no sane man conversant with Indian history will question. This brings us at once into direct communication, not through an independent and neutral State, but on our own borders, with Yunnan, and Quang-tse, and through Jaos and the old empire of Annam to the lower waters of the Cambodia river. The trade that cannot fail to spring up from our commercial connection with these provinces will need some other and more immediate highway than the Irrawaddy, and that the Cambodia will supply. It has, moreover, a great advantage over the Irrawaddy, inasmuch as its navigation is much easier, offering far fewer impediments. At the town of Kiammung, over a thousand miles from the sea, this magnificent stream has a width of five hundred feet, and a depth of sixteen feet. The possession of this river, the command of its navigation, will become essential to the progress of our commercial relations with these provinces, rich as they are in agricultural, vegetable, and mineral products, and with the Southern States of China. We cannot submit to any curtailment of our commercial enterprises through the denial to us of a route offering so many advantages; nor can we permit its free navigation to remain dependent on the will of a foreign, albeit a friendly, power. Hence, then, will complications arise, which should command our earnest attention while they are yet undeveloped. In a case such as here presents itself, it is not sufficient to argue that "sufficient for the day is the evil thereof;" for it is not so. It cannot be so when neglect of wise, because preventive, precautions to-day can but entail disaster and loss on our posterity.

It may not be in our time, but that, without such pre-vision, the bayonets of the British and French will cross on the banks of the Cambodia, as they formerly did on those of the Cannery, is nevertheless certain. The navigation of the Cambodia may yet be rendered free to all the world. It is not yet in the undisputed possession of France, and it is within our power to prevent its ever becoming so. If we do not do so, and do not enter into arrangements at once for effecting this wise consummation, we shall undoubtedly, when too late, rue the supineness now shown. There is a vast field of enterprise opening out to the British through Burmah, and if we fail to secure it to ourselves, we may chance to see it glide from our grasp and fall into the lap of our rival, who already has the advantage of us in the position he occupies on the Cambodia.—Englishman, March 10.

THE REVERSE AT TAITSAN.

It has invariably been a subject of remark that the current of success seldom attains its hoped-for destination, without falling in with some unforeseen check or obstacle to the smoothness of its passage. In fact, a long course of uninterrupted success would almost appear to be a sure precursor of some bitter disappointment, and a series of victories not unfrequently culminates in a humiliating and disastrous defeat. Take the case of a couple of chess-players of unequal skill. Many games take place with unvarying results in favour of the more skillful player; but after a time, the disparity commences to grow less and less in proportion, as the inferior player improves, till at last his antagonist is astonished to find himself one day beaten by means of the very knowledge which he has himself imparted. As with individuals, so it is with nations. They require reverses to enable them to eventually rise superior to them, and defeats are a sort of moral seasoning, which only tend to sweeten the fruits of victory.

We have been induced to indulge in the preceding remarks by a consideration of the causes which gave rise to the severe repulse lately sustained by the combined troops of Ward's force, under English officers and the Imperialists, from the walls of Taitan. No doubt the long course of easy successes and cheap victories over the rebels in the neighbourhood of Shanghai and other places had engendered a feeling of contempt for the Taiping soldiery, which could only be dispelled from some such rough handling from them as occurred the other day. Twenty casualties among the Europeans, including four captains killed and twelve officers wounded, is an unusual exhibition of Taiping valour. Doubtless this heavy loss in officers has been in consequence of the unwillingness of the Chinese troops to advance, and the necessity of the officers exposing themselves, in order to stir up the latent courage of their men. It is not the first time that such a course has been necessitated by the backwardness of the native troops to expose their precious persons to the guns of the Taipings. The practice of acting in concert with the Imperialists appears to us to be a most pernicious practice. They are doubtless dead hands at looting, skilful in the mysteries of throat-cutting, and committing all kinds of atrocities upon a defeated enemy and defenceless townspeople; but as regards actual fighting, they would appear from all accounts to be the most arrant cowards in existence. The co-operation of such an ill-organised and worse disciplined rabble as form the greater part of the Imperialist troops is worse than useless, and their presence cannot fail to have a most injurious effect upon the morale of any disciplined native troops who may be serving in conjunction with them. It has been over and over again urged by writers on the subject, that the miserably effete Government of China is utterly unable to cope with, much less subdue, the power of the Taipings, without very material foreign assistance. The Imperialists are almost greater cowards than the rebels themselves; and a Bombay officer, in a letter published in the Times of India, sarcastically describes the battles between them as consisting in waiting to see which side will take the lead in running away. Such a state of things might continue for ever, and yet neither party gain any considerable advantage. Much, however, is to be hoped for, from the operations of the naval force which has been organised by Captain Osborne, which will, doubtless, succeed in clearing the rivers, though it cannot be expected to effect very much towards the pacification of the interior. This can only be accomplished by the co-operation of a well-organised force, under skilled European officers. The late Proclamation by her Majesty, permitting military officers to enter the Chinese service, caused, we believe, some excitement in the breasts of the "great unemployed" of the staff corps. It appears, however, that the Proclamation was only made with a view of legalising the employment by the Chinese Government of certain officers now attached to Ward's force, so visions of Taiping loot and Imperial decorations have alike faded away before the mind's eye of Indian officers. We trust, however, that the time may yet come when the Chinese Government will see the necessity of the entire substitution of skilled English officers, in the place of the motley crew who now form the greater portion of the officers of Ward's force. The idea has been suggested, of raising a contingent in this country for service against the Taipings, but it does not appear that there is any intention of carrying it into effect. In the Mantchoos an excellent material is to be found for the production of good soldiers, when not spoiled by the inefficiency and incompetency of the Mandarins. Officers who have been employed with Ward's force, speak in very good terms of its discipline and efficiency. The expediency, however, of forming a large Chinese force of artillery would appear to us to be somewhat doubtful. It is scarcely to be hoped for that our present peaceful relations with the Chinese empire will last for ever, and consequently it is not improbable that the troops which we are now so busily employed in training and disciplining may at some future period be employed against ourselves. In the case of the infantry, who, when deprived of their leaders, would probably soon lose their organisation, this would be a matter of comparatively small importance. As regards artillery, however, the case would be far different. The mutinies in this country have proved to us the folly of admitting natives into that branch of the service, and with a wise policy, the total abolition of native artillery, and the substitution of Europeans in their place, has been determined upon. Any army, however formidable in other respects, ceases to be adapted for the purposes of modern warfare when deprived of its artillery. The artillery is to an army as the right arm is to the individual man. Lop off the limb, and the body remains shorn of half its strength. From these considerations we feel strongly inclined to deprecate a too free extension among the Chinese soldiery of our scientific knowledge of that branch of warfare. In case of another Chinese war, we shall probably have bitter reason to regret our inconsiderate precipitancy in lending our officers to instruct the Imperial troops in the duties of gunnery. It would, we think, be far better for us in the end were we to assist them with our own men. Several batteries of ci-devant Golundauzes of the old Company's service might without difficulty be raised in India. There are still four companies of Golundauze in this presidency undergoing Sir Charles Wood's pet process of dying out. Why should not these be induced to volunteer temporarily for the service of the Emperor of China? With a proper regard paid to their rights in the matter of pay and pension they would doubtless be glad of any opportunity which could be afforded them of preventing their total extinction. At present they are perfectly useless, and are merely an incubus to Government, while they themselves are disgusted with the stoppage of their promotion, and discontented with the policy which has condemned their corps to extinction, through no fault of their own. Such a body of men would be invaluable in China, where not a few of them have seen service before. Two companies served not without distinction during the campaign of 1860, and there are many old sepoys still serving in the corps who took part in the war of 1842. Such a force of well-trained and veteran gunners could not fail to take an important part in any operations in conjunction with the drilled Chinese against the Taiping strongholds.—Madras Athenaeum.

EGYPT THE SOLE MILITARY HIGHWAY TO INDIA.

The near approach to the completion of our system of trunk railways next cold season renders it necessary at once to come to a decision on many important military questions. The most patent results of that completion will be, economy of military expenditure, increase of the health of the army, and the consequent greater stability of our rule. We shall be able to hold India with a smaller number of men than 73,000, and the smaller number will be in a higher state of health from the facilities for visiting sanatoria. But a question more immediately pressing than these is, the best mode of transport for our reliefs and invalids to and from India. The present system of transport in sailing ships by the Cape of Good Hope is barbarous on every ground, political, financial and military. If nothing else could convince us of this, the example of our French allies ought to be sufficient to do so. They use Egypt and the Overland Route alone as their great highway to India, Anam, and China. They have organised a system of transports by which, in a few weeks, a force of many thousand men could be landed on our eastern coasts from Aden to Shanghai. We are within the truth when we say that at any moment a force of from three to six thousand men will be found at or near to Alexandria. On the outbreak of a European war they, united with the large staff of the Suez Canal, and supported by the defensive works of the late Pacha, such as the Barrage Fort, could shut the English out of Egypt, and could cut India off from Europe. We do not blame our allies, but we cannot but condemn our own folly, which sees a system so evidently valuable in itself and so powerful for purposes of aggression without attempting to check or imitate it. We have reason to believe that the eyes of both the Indian and English authorities are open to the fact. Years ago Dr. Gordon, c.s., urged it. The friendliness of the new Pacha, so much of whose revenue is derived from the transit through Egypt, and his known dislike to French intrigue, render the present time especially favourable for coming to a decision on this all-important point—how India shall cease to be threatened with being cut off from the base of its operations and the source of its supplies. We might well liken our empire to the human body. England is the brain, India the great trunk, and the overland route the thin silver cord of spinal marrow which it is so easy to destroy, so impossible to restore.

Let us state the case. Taking our Indian army at 73,000 men, the number who must pass to and from India every year is 20,000. Annually at least five corps of infantry, 950 strong, and one of cavalry, 450 strong, with ten per cent. of women and children, must be sent to India. Adding to these the recruits to fill up gaps in the corps in the country, the best authorities reckon on the total annual supply of English soldiers to India at 12,000. At present it costs £19 to send each of these out by the Cape. Returning from India to England, there is an annual number of 8,000, each one of whom costs for passage £25. As a rule, these men, going and coming, spend 120 days, which to the young recruit and new corps is a time of military, and sometimes moral, degeneracy. The men are idle and get into difficulties, while the less that is said of the few families the better. Moreover, these 20,000 men for four months every year are lost to the empire. They are away on a tedious and distant voyage, beyond the power of recall by letter or telegraph should their services be required in such an emergency as 1857. Their pay is lost to the nation; adding that military financiers estimate the total cost of sending men to India at £25. 15s., and of those returning at £31. 15s. On the other hand, if these 20,000 men were sent by the overland route from Malta to Bombay or Kurrachee the distance is reduced from 14,000 to 4,000 miles, the time from one hundred and twenty to twenty days, and the political advantage of such large bodies of men passing through Egypt and down the Red Sea is not to be estimated. They could do so all the year round, certainly for nine out of the twelve months, and as to cost a special steam service would take them at £25 per head from England to Bombay, in addition to the £1. 10s. charged for the Egyptian transit. The same service would take officers at half the Peninsular and Oriental Company's rates. Or our naval transport ships, such as the Himalaya, might be employed advantageously in the duty. The advantages, military, sanitary, political, and economical, do not admit of a moment's discussion. At Kurrachee, Bombay, and Beyrout troops could be landed for all the Presidencies, those for Bengal being sent by railway to Jubbulpore, and three years hence to any station from Calcutta to Delhi and Multan, if the railway break from Kotree to Multan were an objection. At Ceylon, or elsewhere, all the invalids of our force in the East might be periodically collected, and despatched to the Mediterranean from time to time, a course which would save many valuable lives, representing so much money, to the army.

Our Eastern Empire will always be subject to the risk of great emergencies like that of 1857, as well as to the chances of a European war which threatens more and more to gather round the Porte and the Eastern question. In 1857 the court of directors implored the cabinet, but in vain, till it was too late, to send out troops by Egypt. When finally the 57th regiment did sail from Malta to Alexandria the men passed through Egypt in plain clothes, with all their arms, accoutrements and kits packed in cases. The Pacha laughed at our scrupulousness, and told us they might march through with their arms, as the French have always done. India was familiar with the overland route as a pathway for troops to Europe before 1857. When, in the summer of 1854, the 10th and 12th Dragoons, consisting of 1,400 horses and 1,600 men, went from India to the Crimea, they passed through Egypt in the hottest months, and were so healthy and efficient in the campaign that Lord Dalhousie directed this route to be strictly adhered to in the event of any further transit. And who has forgotten Sir David Baird's expedition in 1801? Landing at Kosseir in May and June, he crossed the desert to Kherie on the Nile in nine days, sailed down the river and garrisoned Alexandria. Next year, in the month of June, several regiments returned to India through Egypt. No less than 5,000 men, with cavalry, artillery, and treasure marched across the desert, from the Lake of Pilgrims, near Cairo, to Suez, in four days with the greatest ease.

Whether internal troubles lead us to ask help from England; or whether, as is more probable, England will draw upon India to help her against the third as she did against the first Bonaparte in a European war, or to take part in the troubles that will attend on the expulsion of the Turk from Europe, Egypt must be our great, our sole, military highway. It must never be said of India as it was of England in her war with the United States, that she failed because of the distance over which reinforcements had to be sent. Yet that distance was only three thousand miles; at present ours is fourteen thousand, measured by four long demoralising months.—Friend of India, April 2.

MISCELLANEOUS.

MR. KERR AND THE BENGAL COMMISSARIAT.—If Mr. C. H. Kerr was the writer, as is alleged, of the scandalous letters concerning the officers of the Bengal Commissariat, printed in London and widely-circulated in India, Government has done quite right in dismissing him summarily from his appointment of assistant to the commissary-general on Rs. 700 per mensem.—Mofussilite.

THE RAJAH OF KUPPOORTHALLA.—It is with great pleasure that we learn that the Viceroy has acceded to a request of the Rajah of Kuppoorthalla, and has conferred upon him the title of "Dowl-i-Inglesia." The modest request in itself on the part of the Rajah, who rendered such enormous service to the British Government, in its direst difficulty, must have been very gratifying to Lord Elgin. The Rajah never asked for the order of the Star of India, though few can deny he had a valid claim to the distinction. He risked for us not only all that he possessed and possesses, but his own life, and the lives of the members of his family. Lord Canning very imprudently slighted the Rajah of Kuppoorthalla. Lord Elgin has very prudently and graciously exercised his prerogative, and has honoured him. The request, which the Viceroy has graciously granted, is simply this (when properly translated):—"Consider me always at the service of the Crown;" and a man of Lord Elgin's capacity must have been touched by the delicate manner in which the act of true homage was paid to the sovereign (whom his lordship represents in his country), by the sturdy and powerful Sikh chieftain. The Englishman very aptly remarks, when noticing Lord Elgin's concessions, that "the Rajah of Kuppoorthalla must, in future, be looked upon as the special property of the Crown."—Mofussilite, March 24.

FINANCIAL.—The old question of sending out the junior assistants to the financial secretary to inspect the accounts of the several presidencies subordinate to the Government of India has lately been raised, but Sir Charles Trevelyan is said to be of opinion that as those assistants have been employed in the financial department but for a short period, a further time should be given to them to initiate themselves in the business of the department, and to learn more of accounts before they are allowed to proceed on their inspectional tours.

ESTATE ALAN DEFFELL AND Co.—The fifth dividend at 3 per cent. is now payable at the office of the official assignee, Calcutta.

MR. T. H. COWIE.—We are informed that Mr. T. H. Cowie, advocate-general, has obtained six months' leave of absence, and proceeds to England by the next steamer. Mr. Joseph Graham, standing counsel, will act as his locum tenens.—Hurkaru, April 3.

ANNUAL AGRICULTURAL SHOWS.—The announcement that the Committee of the Agricultural and Horticultural Society of India have welcomed the Lieutenant-Governor's very excellent suggestion, that an Agricultural Show should be held in January next on the grounds of Belvidere, though it cannot surprise any one, will gratify very many. Perhaps the greatest benefit likely to arise from periodical exhibitions of this kind will be in the improvement of implements, especially if the committee will take the trouble to show, by actual experiments on the grounds, the superiority of European tools and machinery. It is generally admitted that the original native stocks of sheep and cattle require nothing but proper management in rearing calves and lambs, to render them equal to any in the world. The cruel and short-sighted system, however, of giving the smallest possible amount of nutriment to the young animal cannot fail to stunt its growth and prevent its full development. But with regard to the tools employed in the culture of the soil and in the various kinds of manufacture, nothing can be more awkward, wasteful, and barbarous than those now in use. At the International Exhibition of last year, the specimens that were displayed in the Indian Court were the subject of unmitigated contempt and merriment to the thousands of British labourers and mechanics, who could hardly be induced to believe that any sort of remunerative result could be obtained with such rude contrivances. The comparative perfection to which manufactures and agriculture have attained in England is largely attributable to the excellence and superior finish of the mechanical instruments now in general use. The first step, indeed, towards progress in the economical arts implies the improvement of the means by which that progress has to be made, and now that the fallacy of the popular delusion as to the superabundant population of India is exploded, the necessity of having recourse to mechanical aid is becoming daily more apparent. But no sensible or permanent good can be expected from these shows, unless the native zemindars will set the example of taking an enlightened interest in their success. Nor will they hesitate to extend their hearty patronage to whatever tends to facilitate the labour of their tenants, if they rightly understand what is to their own true advantage. Instead of squandering their time, health, wealth, and reputation in extravagant and unnecessary ostentation or debauchery, they will derive a far higher gratification from imitating the late Prince Consort, and the most illustrious landowners in Great Britain, in their efforts to increase the produce of their estates and ameliorate the condition of their tenants. It is a very true, if trite, remark that whoso causes two blades of corn to grow on the spot that only produced one before, deserves to be enrolled among the benefactors of the human race. The native gentry are not supposed to be deficient in that laudable vanity which impels men to strive after the good opinion of their fellows, and assuredly future generations, as well as the present one, will gratefully acknowledge the true and beneficent labours of those among them who shall strive, each according to his opportunities, to raise the moral, social, and material status of the lower and industrious classes. Their dignity will suffer nothing by following the example of the highest noblemen of England, or by furthering the movement so liberally started by the Lieut.-governor of Bengal.—Bengal Hurkaru, March 23.

THE CALCUTTA UNIVERSITY (Extract from the Vice Chancellor's late speech).—Our past as a University is indeed but of yesterday. We are still in our infancy; a season rather of quiet growth than of any great achievements. But growth there certainly has been; as indicated not merely by the admission of students to-day to the highest degrees which we have to confer; but also in other ways. No one for instance now doubts—as some but a year or two ago appeared to doubt—that universities have established themselves as a permanent part of our system in this country; or that there is a growing approximation of views as to the conditions under which they must progress; and, which is of greater importance still, the idea of a university, of its office and houses, has become familiar to the minds of many of the natives of this country, especially of those who reside in the neighbourhood of the greater cities. This is no inconsiderable gain. For, after all, only nine years have elapsed since the system was elaborated under the administration of Lord Dalhousie; only six years since the universities came into being under the administration of Lord Canning. They arose, as has been often noted, in that year of convulsion, which did much to unsettle men's minds, and to consume resources that might have been devoted to progress and learning. With the return of better times we may look for a further expansion especially of these institutions, which were in their origin a legacy of that great corporation the history of which is such a remarkable feature in the recent history of England; which in their early guardianship have been among the first-fruits of an Imperial rule in this country, and which will yet, let us hope, as they tend to maturity, do much to encourage a freer development of public spirit and literary life in India. The six years which have just passed prove that the establishment of this University was not premature, by proving that agencies were at work capable of training a considerable number of candidates, of whom a fair proportion would be successful according to the standards adopted by the University. This is clear from facts already before us, of which a precis has been kindly furnished to me. It appears that since the opening of the University 2,225 young men have been admitted as undergraduates; of whom, during the last two years, nearly 200 have passed their first Examination in Arts; while, from the first, 89 have taken the degree of Bachelor of Arts; and, during the present year, thanks to the energy and industry of those who have been admitted to this honour to-day, 6 have graduated as Masters of Arts. Turning to the Professional Faculties,—20 have passed as Licentiates in Engineering, 21 have passed as Licentiates in Medicine, 4 have taken Honours in Medicine, and one has just been admitted to the Degree of Doctor of Medicine; in Law, 27 have passed (at the last three examinations) as Licentiates, and from the first 54 have passed as Bachelors. Meanwhile, the number of affiliated Institutions has risen to 25; of which, 6—including St. Xavier's College in Calcutta, Joy Narain's College in Benares, and St. John's College in Agra—were affiliated during the past year. If we inquire who are chiefly entering on University careers, we find that the Mussulmans are the most backward, and that the Hindoos are pressing on most of all. Only 4 Christian candidates have as yet graduated as Bachelors of Arts; only 3 have passed as Bachelors of Law; only 2 as Licentiates of Medicine; only 1 as Licentiate of Engineering. One Mussulman candidate only has graduated as a Bachelor of Arts, and not one has passed even as Licentiate, in any of the Professional Faculties. If—viewing it in another light—we confine our attention to the Entrance Examinations in the Faculty of Arts during the present year, we find that 1,114 were admitted to the Entrance Examination, of whom 1,043 were from Bengal, 43 were from the North Western Provinces, 19 from the Punjab, and 9 from Ceylon. Of 477 who passed the Entrance Examination, 445 were from Bengal, 16 were from the North-Western Provinces, 9 were from the Punjab, and 7 from Ceylon. Only 62, therefore, out of 1,114 who were admitted to that Examination, and only 32 out of 477 who passed that Examination, were from territories beyond Bengal. As the Entrance Examinations are not held in Bengal alone, these results seem to suggest some interesting inquiries. While, however, the schools send up in one year more than 1,100 candidates for Entrance, of whom more than three-sevenths succeed; and 220 candidates for the first Examination in Arts, of whom nearly 100 succeed; and 35 candidates for the Degree of Bachelor of Arts, of whom 25 succeed; and 7 candidates for the Degree of Master of Arts, of whom 6 succeed, it must be admitted that there is important work for the University to do, in all its various grades.

THE DINAPORE SCANDAL.—We hear from Dinapore that Colonel and Mrs. Willis and Drs. Wall and Wright have been summoned to Calcutta as witnesses in the Burney case, and that the two former have arrived in Calcutta. We are also given to understand that overtures of a compromise have been made by the defendant, but which have been peremptorily rejected by Colonel Burney, who, now that matters have come to such a pass, is determined that the truth shall come out, and the real delinquent punished. Justice is his cry, and, at whatever cost, he has resolutely made up his mind to have it.—Oudh Gazette, March 21.

ABOLITION OF THE EUROPEAN DEPOT AT CAWNPORE.—His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief has, in anticipation of the approval of Government, directed the immediate abolition of the European depot at Cawnpore. In future parties of European soldiers passing through, and having to remain any time at Cawnpore, will, under local arrangements, be attached temporarily to the regiment or battery located at the station, according to the arm of the service to which they may respectively belong.—Hurkaru.

THE CINCHONA PLANT.—A supplement of the Gazette is devoted to Mr. McIvor's Report on the number, distribution, and condition of the Cinchona Plants on the Neilgherries, during the month of February. There were in all 135,730 plants, of which 61,012 were of the species C. Condaminea,—the "Select Crown Bark" of commerce—and 48,989 of C. Succirubra, or "Red Bark." The number of plants permanently planted out is 35,000, all of which are doing well. The increase by propagation during the month was only 8,068, or 3,500 under the average of the preceding six months—the falling off being attributed to want of space. The tallest plant is now "7 feet 2 inches, with branches from 3 to 5½ feet in length. The stem, measured half a foot from the ground, is 5 and 4-5ths. of an inch in circumference."

THE AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY.—There is no public society in India so successful, and few are so useful as the agricultural society, founded more than half a century ago by Dr. Carey. During the past year it numbered 882 members, of whom 104 joined it during the year. The society distributed Rs. 1,125 as prizes to native gardeners at their various shows, and the result of this, coupled with an ever increasing demand, is that the suburbs of Calcutta are almost one vast kitchen garden. The value of seeds distributed among the members was Rs. 10,055. Those obtained from America were successful, but not so those sent by a London house. No less than 8,523 plants were distributed from the society's nursery garden. In co-operation with the Manchester Cotton Supply Association, the society have done no little good by their distribution of seed and information. We want this or a similar society, with the assistance of the State, to devote some attention to stock, and especially cows and bullocks.

THE LATE MR. HARRIS—HIS DEATH FROM A TIGER.—We very much regret to learn that Mr. Harris, whose adventure with a tiger was mentioned in our issue of Saturday last, died at Roorkee, from the effects of the encounter, on Sunday, the 29th ult. We have been favoured with the following letter, furnishing particulars:—"I am sorry to say it was Charley Harris, and no other, who came to such an untimely end. On Thursday, the 26th, he went out with Mr. Williams, the Commissioner of Meerut, and Captain Ross, after a tiger that was said to be in the neighbourhood of Kheree. They were all on an elephant; but when they came to the place near which the natives said the tigress was lurking, Harris got impatient, slipped off the elephant, and proceeded on foot among the brushwood. The tigress being disturbed, broke cover, and was coming in the very direction H— was going. He fired and struck, but she still came on; he fired and again struck her, when they came to close quarters, Harris tried to force the barrel of his gun down her throat; but she made light of this, and pawed him. When down she commenced crunching his ankle and leg, and, it is said, actually chewed it into mince-meat. She finally endeavoured to carry him off, but her wounds began to take effect, and, dying, she pawed, and did as much mischief as she could. Search being made for Harris the track of blood brought the searchers to him who found him insensible; after a time he was conveyed to Roorkee, and on the 28th his leg was amputated, and he seemed to bear up well for twenty-four hours (and he himself is the author of the story). After this he began to fail, and finally died on Sunday morning last. Everybody is at a loss to know what his comrades were doing all this time, as no mention is made of assistance from them, and I believe Harris never alluded to them, poor fellow. Next to being victorious he would rather die fighting with a tiger than any other death; he had seen this very tigress some days before, but under circumstances that he durst not molest her. I sincerely hope Mr. Williams will do something for his family by getting up a subscription, for we all know that Harris was not provident, everybody who knew him will regret his untimely end." Mr. Harris was a keen sportsman, and a courageous man. He had many friends to whom his untimely death will be a source of great regret. He was during the mutiny attached to the Agra Volunteer Horse, and did good service; we are afraid to say how many rebels were made to bite the dust by his unerring aim—at least a score.—Delhi Gazette, April 7.

THE COTTON SCREW PRESS INTRODUCED INTO THE PUNJAB.—By invitation of his Honour the Lieut.-Governor, a very large company of European and native gentlemen interested in the cotton trade assembled near the Lahore Gate of the city, to witness the first working of a screw-press recently imported from Surat on behalf of Government, with the object of showing the native merchants the great utility of the machine, and also, we presume, that it might serve as a namoona, or sample, after which they may easily construct others on the spot. The total cost of the instrument was, we understand, only Rs. 600. It consists of three sets of sides of boxes (i.e., without tops or bottoms) on hinges, each about 4 feet by 2.6. These are set one above the other, and filled with about five maunds of loose cotton. Two screws (made of Sissoo wood, we believe) about 10 feet long, and 6 feet apart, are then made to revolve by half a dozen coolies with hand-bars (which, however, have to be withdrawn after each two-thirds revolution of the screws) and this action has the effect of forcing a wooden block downwards on the top of the cotton, ultimately compressing it into the lower box, which is then (as the others had been previously) removed, when the cotton is sewn in gunny, and lashed with ropes. The screw is now lifted, the bale removed, and the operation concluded. The period occupied from first to last was forty-five minutes, while the dimensions of the cotton were reduced in the proportion of one to three, the size of the bale being the same as that of the lower case or box. "The spectators (several of whom were from Umritsur) were much interested in the operation, and, we doubt not, an imitation of the screw will be generally adopted. The simplicity of its construction, the ease with which it can be repaired if it gets out of order—an unlikely contingency—and, above all, its cheapness, are great recommendations in its favour, rendering it preferable for practical purposes to the more perfect, powerful, and expensive instruments used in Bombay and Calcutta, although these latter can compress cotton into one-fifth instead of one-third of the original bulk."—Delhi Gazette.

THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF has appointed Brevet Major the Hon. Robert Baillie, of H.M.'s 44th Foot, to be an aide-de-camp on his Excellency's personal staff, with effect from the 15th of February last.

AUDIT OFFICE.—It is rumoured that Mr. Taylor, of the Audit Office, is likely to be appointed first assistant to the Deputy Auditor and Accountant General of Bengal, in the place of Mr. T. W. Biss, proceeding to the Central Provinces.—Hurkaru, April 2.

THE RAILWAY BETWEEN CALCUTTA AND BENARES.—A good many years ago, in the consulship of Plancus, the inimitable John Leach sketched a pleasant road-side episode in "Ould Ireland," which the Delhi Punch subsequently plagiarised without so much as a "By y'r leave," or a "Thank ye." Two boys, two ponies, and two leather bags, constituted the drumatis persone and the making up, while a wide-spreading beech tree did duty for scenery. "Who are you?" demand the uglier and cleverer of the two. "I'm the 'spress," replies the other, with proud sheepishness. "So am I," quoth the former, "let's play at pitch and toss." The story, though old, is ever applicable in India, where nothing is ever done as it would be done elsewhere—except, perhaps, in Spain. It so happens, notwithstanding a thousand reasons for the contrary, that railway communication is actually open between Calcutta and Benares, and that, consequently, the distance from one city to the other may be performed in six and twenty hours. This is certainly a great improvement on the old state of things, and is especially beneficial as accelerating the arrival in Calcutta of news from England by way of Bombay. At least it would be so if the mail bags would always contrive to reach Benares before the despatch of the train to the Presidency Town, which starts at six A.M., with tolerable punctuality, or of the one which is to start at three P.M. But let these same bags be detained only one hour on the road, they will have to remain lying perdu at the Benares post-office until the following morning. The thing is incredible, but it is nevertheless a fact. True, the detention is only for nine hours, and of what use are nine hours, either to merchants or rulers? Who could write a letter in nine hours? Or if one could do so, what good end could be achieved? At the worst, if an outgoing mail be missed there will be another one in a fortnight, and in so short a space of time it is impossible for any material change to have taken place in the markets either here or at home. Besides, one cannot always be thinking of money-making. The French railway authorities, indeed, have become so corrupted by their constant intercourse with the nation of shopkeepers, that they actually give themselves the trouble to start a special train from Marseilles to convey the Overland mail to Lyons, and even further, in order to overtake the ordinary train. And then if the mail arrives at St. Martin's-le-Grand so late as five or six in the afternoon, extra hands are put on and the bulk of the letters delivered that same night. We are, of course, fully aware that news from India is of far greater importance to London, than news from Europe can be to Calcutta. We can also understand that the Viceroy is never in any particular haste to receive his snubbings from Sir Charles Wood. We can likewise appreciate the sense of shame exhibited by Government in not publishing the telegram which reported the departure of the last mail from Mirzapore, or its arrival and twenty-two hours detention at Benares. But we are not aware that it was to produce such negative results that such a grand net work of railways has been devised and partly constructed. Nor are we quite certain that the Viceroy is the best judge of the requirements of Calcutta commerce. And we certainly do not feel disposed to submit without remonstrance—here and at home—to the blunderings of the telegraph department, or to the still greater slowness and stupidity of the Post-office.—Bengal Hurkaru, March 27.

TIGER HUNT.—SAHARUNPORE, 18th March.—I have seen no notice in your paper of an accident that occurred here some days ago, and which may afford a warning and example to sportsmen. Three officers being in camp near Kulsia (close to the head of the Eastern Jumna Canal, in the north of this district), heard of a tiger being in their neighbourhood. They sallied forth on foot to attack him (mistake No. 1), and on hearing his roar separated to approach it by different paths (mistake No. 2). He was driven from or left the jungle in which he had been concealed, and was fired at (four barrels) by two of the officers within a few minutes. At last he charged one of them, his gun being empty; when the tiger rose to clutch him (he made a spring) he struck at the mouth of the brute with his fist. The tiger seized the hand and chewed it as if it had been the end of a cheerot, but finding it did not give him a satisfactory hold of his assailant, dropped it, and seizing the right knee of the latter, shook him as a cat does a rat. Meantime the third officer had fired at the tiger, but without effect; and now the second, finding his companion in such danger, rushed in at the tiger and gave him a buffet on the side of the head with the butt of his rifle. The brute dropped his intended victim and went off. The wounded man was brought in here and is doing pretty well, although the injuries are severe. He unquestionably owes his life to the pluck of his companion. A reward of Rs. 25 offered to the villagers discovered the tiger, whose body was brought in some days afterwards. He was not very large—I think about nine feet from tip to tip, and had his lower incisors and right upper canine carried away by one bullet, which accounts for the comparatively slight injuries he inflicted, as well as part of the right side of his skull smashed by a second, which accounts for the blow he got from the rifle having such good effect.—Delhi Gazette, March 24.

TEA IN LOWER ASSAM.—There is no news from Assam of any political import. It has for a long while been a disputed point as to whether Lower Assam might be made as profitable in the tea-producing way as the upper section of the Assam valley. The problem would appear now to have been satisfactorily settled. An English gentleman, who has long been resident in the province, undertook the establishment of a tea-garden in the neighbourhood of Gowhatti. This garden, which has had three or four years of moderate tending, is now a valuable concern, and is owned by a Calcutta firm. Its success demonstrates the fact that the soil of the southern valley, though not exposed to such a degree to the fogs of the Berhampooter as the upper section, is, nevertheless, quite equal to the production of tea of the first quality. We have no doubt that the settlement of this question will bring numerous speculators to the country round about Gowhatti.—Hurkaru.

THE LAST BREAKDOWN OF THE FRENCH STEAMERS.—That misfortunes come in troops must be a truth with which the French Marine, both Imperial and mercantile, is tolerably familiar by this time. The last breakdown is that of the Imperial screw steamer Japon, while conveying about a thousand French soldiers from Suez to Saigon. Luckily she was at no great distance from Galle when the accident occurred, so that no time was lost in telegraphing news of the disaster to the French Consul at this port. That gentleman at once chartered the P. and O. Company's steamer Nubia on behalf of the French Government, paying Rs. 65,000 for the trip, in addition to the sum of Rs. 14,000 as compensation for the removal of the cabin partitions and other necessary alterations. Clearly it is not to our "lively allies" that Fortune has assigned the empire of the ocean, sævumque tridentem.—Hurkaru.

FURLOUGH RULES.—The following rules, based on the Furlough Rules of 1854, have been laid down by the authorities. An officer must have served ten years in India to entitle him to return to England on private affairs for six months, retaining his appointment and drawing furlough pay. An officer who has taken the furlough to Europe for two years, after ten years' service, must show a service in India from date of return of ten years to entitle him to return to Europe on private affairs for six months, retaining his appointment and drawing furlough pay. An officer having taken shorter leaves of absence as a staff officer (six months on private affairs, fifteen or twenty months on sick certificate), with retention of appointment, may take a second leave of absence, retaining his appointment on sick certificate after he has been three years, or on private affairs after he has been six years, in the discharge of the duties of his appointment, from the date of last return to it. This decision does not interfere with the practice which has been followed under the Regulations of 1864, and those in force previously, for permitting officers in certain cases of emergency to return to this country on private affairs for short periods without pay. A Staff Corps officer permitted to return to Europe under such circumstances will be allowed to hold his appointment for a period not exceeding six months. Staff officers not members of the Staff Corps will be allowed a similar indulgence under like circumstances.—Friend of India.

COTTON IN ABUNDANCE.—The Raja of Joput, under the Bheel Agency, and the Rajas of Nursingurh and Muxoodnugur, and the Nawabs of Mahomedghur and Barowda under the Bhopal Agency, have abolished all transit duties on cotton within their estates. We hear from Central India that the quantity of cotton which is to be seen wending its way westward is astonishing, and that by routes, and from places where in former years no one even saw the material. The excitement in the cotton trade seems to have had the effect of sending it in all possible directions. We heard the other day of its being transported in large quantities to Nepal, and we have been surprised ourselves at seeing it going along roads which certainly could by no possibility lead to any sea port. A friend of ours met an immense quantity the other day en route to Lucknow. Will India ever start manufactures and work up her own material? Why not?—Delhi Gazette.

THE ARMY IN INDIA.—The whole British army, exclusive of native troops in India, amounts to 221,000 men, or 7,000 less than last year. Of these India pays for 72,676, and 9,349 in the depots, or 3,223 less in India and 1,725 more in the depots than last year. That is, India assists Mr. Gladstone's Budget to the extent of paying for 1,725 men, for there is no reason why the depots should be larger than last year. Or, as the ministerial paper honestly puts it, though there is a reduction in the English army out of India of 7,000 men, the net reduction, thanks to the Indian depots, is only 5,275 men. In these days we should be thankful to Lord Palmerston's Ministry for its moderation, and should not forget to be grateful to Colonel Balfour and Mr. Laing, to whose dogged pugnacity it is owing. Taking the militia at 124,000, the yeomanry at 14,000, and the volunteers at 150,000, England guards herself and holds her vast empire with half-a-million of soldiers and 73,000 sailors, at a cost to herself of less than twenty millions and to India of about eight millions sterling. The total naval and military expenditure of England and India, including a sepoy army of 150,000 men and a local Marine, is hardly thirty eight millions sterling, or less than the revenue of India alone. The United Kingdom, India, and our forty colonies could hardly be defended more cheaply, while our influence in Europe remains unequalled, if the offer of the Manchester party were accepted—to do it by contract.—Friend of India.

NO MORE SWEARING ON THE KORAN.—The Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab has introduced into his province Act V. of 1840. This Act provides for the consciences of our sable brethren by substituting a solemn affirmation in place of the old oath on the Koran for Mahometans and the Ganges Water for the Hindoos, and, we suppose, the Grunth for Sikhs. The preamble states that "whereas obstructions to justice and other inconveniences have arisen in consequence of persons of the Hindoo and Mahomedan persuasion being compelled to swear by the water of the Ganges, or upon the Koran, or according to other forms which are repugnant to their consciences or feelings," &c. We never understood this. Why should an oath, administered in accordance with the rites of a certain religion, be repugnant to a man's conscience? A lie may be repugnant to conscience, but not an oath sworn to the truth. The introduction of the Act into the Punjab has attracted attention to a regulation so long in practice in these provinces as to escape observation.—Delhi Gazette.

THE BENGAL CLUB.—At the annual general meeting of the Bengal Club, held on Saturday, April 28, Sir Mordaunt Lawson Wells was chosen President, and Mr. C. Steer, B.C.S., Vice-President of the Club.

FRENCH COTTON SPINNERS.—The French cotton spinners are proposing to establish agencies for purchasing cotton in India by making contracts with the growers in the coming season. French manufacturers, as a body, are disposed to look hopefully towards India, as they have not that prejudice against working its cotton which is entertained in Manchester. It remains to be seen if their experience will be better than that of the Bombay houses which have failed for want of a just contract law. During the past year the Spanish spinners have taken a much larger proportion of East Indian cotton than usual, and are importing improved machinery for the purpose of working it. Russia has not imported more than 25,000 bales via Europe, against 200,000 bales in previous years; but she has received about 80,000 bales from Khiva and Bokhara, a small portion of which was re-exported to England. "It is a good-looking cotton," says Messrs. Stollerfoht, "something like that from Smyrna, but with rather more fibre and substance." Messrs. Barber, Nephew, and Co. placed the value of Bokhara cotton at 15d. per lb. on the 3rd January 1863, or about the same as middling Comptah and Western Madras.

DACOITY.—We have of late received many complaints against the native station masters on the East India railways for insolence, incapacity, and neglect of their duties; and a little incident has occurred within the last day or two which may, in some measure, account for their neglect of their lawful duties. We are informed that a dacoity was committed on the night of the 23rd ultimo, in the garden-house of a Baboo situated in Boro-Boherra Thannah Chundutolla, within the jurisdiction of the assistant magistrate of Serampore, and the darogah of the above thannah, as well as the station-master of Connaghur, a "native gentleman" of the name of Keddarnauth Bannerjee, have been arrested as the chief instigators of the crime. To find a Mofussil darogah mixed up in a dacoity is not certainly a very uncommon occurrence, and it now seems that the profession has charms for station-masters, who, neglecting their duties on the "rail" take a turn on the road by way of a change.—Englishman.

INDIGO IN THE PUNJAB.—The cultivation of indigo in the Punjab increases. Though manufactured in a rude state, the staple finds a ready market with the Affghan and Bombay dealers, prices varying according to quality, from Rs. 45 to Rs. 65 per maund. The "Punjab Indigo Company," with a subscribed capital of Rs. 50,000, was established with the view of manufacturing indigo on the Bengal plan. A site for the factory has been secured, by the purchase of land within the Shoojabad Tehseeldaree of the Mooltan district, at a place called "Futhaypoor." The company having been able to make favourable arrangements with the zemindars for a supply of the plant, its operations will, for the present, be confined to the manufacture of indigo from Ryotee cultivation. Advances are being made to cultivators, without any charge for interest, and every support is given them, in order to free them from the hands of the "Kurrars," who have great power over them, and by this means to induce cultivators to look to the factory for a living. A large stock farm, for the English troops and community, is to be established at the factory. Mr. James Cosserat is manager.

JUDGES' FURLONGS.—Revised rules have been issued relative to furloughs and leave of absence for judges of the High Courts. A furlough for one year, with an allowance of £1,000, shall be allowed to the Chief Justice and to each Puisne Judge, after seven years' actual service. This furlough is not calculated as service. Judges belonging to the Civil Service taking this furlough will have the time and pay adjusted with reference to their own rules. Judges not of the Civil Service may take leave under medical certificate, once during the term of service, either for six months on half salary, or for fifteen months on £1,000 per annum. Absence for more than fifteen months will vacate the office. Six months of this leave will count as service. Short leave on private affairs may be granted as to Civil Servants.

LOCUSTS.—A private letter from the Punjab, read at the meeting of the Agricultural Society, says:—"We are busy destroying locusts. I really think our Deputy Commissioner has finished off a whole flight, and a reward is bringing in maunds of eggs, thanks to Dr. Cleghorn's suggestions." The Punjab Government are collecting the fullest details regarding the recent swarm of locusts, with a view to publication.

SILK IN THE PUNJAB.—At the last meeting of the Punjab Agricultural Society the efforts to restore to the Peshawur valley its former capacity for producing silk were described. The Sikhs largely destroyed the mulberry trees, which were thickly spread over portions of the valley; chiefly, because they afforded shelter to marauders. A native superintendent is to be appointed, and rewards to be offered to the Zemindars for the cultivation of the mulberry. In no other part of the Punjab is there at present so near a prospect of silk becoming an article of export as in this. Both Lieut. Powlett and Mr. Scarlett, Deputy Commissioners, have taken great interest in the question.

CAVALRY REGIMENTS.—It is not, as has been supposed, the three new Hussar regiments that are to be diminished by one troop per corps; but every regiment of H.M.'s British Cavalry in India has been ordered to undergo a similar diminution, the only difference being that in the three new corps the captain whose troop is absorbed will be retained as a supernumerary with the regiment till a vacancy shall occur; whilst in the older corps the vacancy will be a positive one by death, or removal, or going on half-pay. In connection with this diminution a curious occurrence has just taken place in one of the new Hussar regiments. These are not, as is known, what are called purchase regiments; but the officers have, in our opinion, very wisely revived the old bonus system of the Company's armies, and are prepared to purchase out their seniors. Some time ago Major J. H. Brooks, of the 19th Hussars, was offered, and accepted, a bonus to retire, and sent in his papers to do so. In the meantime out comes the diminution order, which, as will be understood, deprived the lieutenants of the regiment of any advantage whatever from Major Brooks' retirement, as no officer of that rank is promoted, the vacant captaincy lapsing in compliance with the said order. Under these circumstances, for which Major Brooks is in no way responsible, Major Brooks has, in the most honourable manner, written to the regiment to say, that if the lieutenants of the 19th, whose interests have been prejudiced by the diminution order, object to carry out their contract with him, he will cancel it, recal his papers, and return to his corps. We cannot see how he is in any way called upon to adopt this course; but we none the less admire, on that account, the sensitive feeling of honour that has impelled him to act as he has done.

AGRA BRIGADE COMMAND.—Brigadier P. Harris, commanding at Barrackpore, has, we understand, requested to be permitted by His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief to decline the Agra Brigade command, which was offered to him by telegraph. We suppose that Colonel Tombs will now succeed Brigadier Troup at Agra; and as Colonel Reid, who is, we think, fifteen years Colonel Troup's senior and in the same branch of the service, is at present stationed at Agra, we conclude it is intended to give that officer the appointment he has applied for in the Clothing Department to be vacated by Col. C. Mackenzie.

WELL MERITED PUNISHMENT.—We see in a Bombay paper that a Khatmutgar has been sentenced in Oudh to seven years' hard labour, for entering the bedroom of a lady when her husband, an officer, was absent. The scoundrel threatened to kill her if she made a noise, and attempted to stop her mouth with his hand. She shrieked the more, so as to rouse the inmates of the neighbouring rooms, and they secured the man before he could make his escape.

MR. J. H. ROSTAN, Head Assistant in the Accountant General's Office, is to be the Deputy Auditor and Accountant General in British Burmah.

GANGES CANAL.—We trust the Englishman's statement is correct, that several Manchester capitalists wish to buy the Ganges Canal, and that Mr. Purdon, the engineer of the Eastern Bengal Railway, has inspected the works on their behalf. The canal can be worked at a profit if the capital be less than that expended by the State. The difficulty of water rates with a permanent settlement can be got over as in the case of the East India Irrigation Company.

MR. T. MORAN.—Mr. Justice Morgan, presiding in the Calcutta High Court of original jurisdiction, has given a Mr. T. Moran Rs. 300 damages against Mr. J. B. Roberts, who, when Deputy Commissioner of Police, caused him to be illegally arrested. Moran annoyed a Miss Bartlett and her father by his attentions. He was so "deeply in love" with the lady that he always prowled about the house, and the father summoned the police to his aid. Moran, when selling bottles, as he asserts, for he conducted his own case, was arrested, taken before the Commissioner of Police after a night's imprisonment, told to give bail, but was unable to do so, was treated as a lunatic, and finally, after being sentenced to six months' imprisonment, was released. Certainly no evidence was adduced to justify such treatment. The lady's dislike to the would-be lover seems to have been sufficient for Messrs. Wauchope and Roberts, and Moran deserved his damages none the less that he did not get the lady too.

THE MEDICAL SERVICE.—We hear rumours from England to the effect that a new Royal Warrant is likely to be issued for the amalgamated medical services, and that so long as the local service of India exists there will be a local inspector-general. The want of Indian surgeons is now so great, no new appointments having been made for years, that of twelve Queen's Assistant-surgeons just appointed, nine are to be made over to the local service. In a recent despatch, Sir Charles Wood declares that the 12 new line regiments are not to be supplied from the Queen's service with surgeons, since the number of medical officers now borne on the Indian establishment is sufficient to meet their wants. "Whatever may be the arrangement determined upon in connection with the amalgamation of the medical service, a subject now under consideration, I am of opinion that so long as there are medical officers of the Indian service available for the number of brigades and regiments lately transferred to the British service, they should be employed to that extent with brigades of artillery and regiments of cavalry and infantry serving in that country."

DR. J. W. MOUNTJOY.—The 40th Regiment N.I., at present stationed at Alipore, have reason to congratulate themselves on their good fortune. Dr. J. W. Mountjoy, lately returned from England, has been appointed to that corps. As civil surgeon at Akyab Dr. Mountjoy won golden opinions from all classes of society, being presented on his departure with a handsome service of plate, and subsequently at Gwalior he "put down" cholera by "treating it with contempt."

LIEUT. R. S. ROBERTSON.—Our contemporary announces that Lieut. R. S. Robertson, of the late 6th European Regiment, adjutant of the 21st Regiment N.I., who was wounded in the attack on a rebel stockade at Sursiung, in the Jynteah country, has been appointed by the Commander-in-Chief to be second in command of the 31st Regiment N.I.

CAPTAIN PAGET JONES.—It is rumoured, says the Allahabad Gazette, that the more serious charges against Captain Paget Jones, of the Royal Artillery, will not be brought home to him.

MADRAS.

MISCELLANEOUS.

CHINCHONA.—The Madras Government intend to plant 150 acres annually with the chinchona for at least ten years, so that there may be an ample supply of bark at the end of that period when bark ought to be ready. The cultivation is to be introduced into Coorg, Mysore, and Madura, and all the hill ranges of the south. One of the two companies lately established to cultivate the plants in the Neilgherries and Wynnad has already bespoken 10,000 out of the 20,000 plants Government intend to sell this year. Several cases of plants have already been supplied to private capitalists in Northern India. Meanwhile, the experiment at Darjeeling goes on favourably, and if the Cossyah war would only end, the plants would be introduced there. No planter in the Himalayas should be without a few as an experiment.

MR. YULE.—The Hyderabad correspondent of the Delhi Gazette mentions the regret of the natives and the English community at the rumour of the appointment of Mr. Yule, the new Resident, to Council. There is no foundation for the rumour, and the day that sees Mr. Yule in Council will deprive the provinces of one who is far better fitted to be an administrator than a political resident or adviser. Only Mr. Harington's ill-health may cause a vacancy in Council, and Mr. Yule is not the provisional member. The writer says Mr. Yule's conciliatory manners and upright principles of action have gained for him the good opinion of all the native gentry. "I wish I could say as much in favour of his predecessor. It is to be sincerely hoped that no member of the old clique will be appointed to the important post of Resident, or even be permitted to continue here in any capacity."

BOMBAY.

LIVING AT BOMBAY.

A writer in the local Saturday Review has a number of good and pleasant, and even sentimental things to say, on this, apparently, most unpoetical of topics. He tells us:—"Let them (the bills) sleep in a pigeon-hole for a few years, and the cruel mathematical hardness of the figures will have softened down and faded away, while the halo of memory will grow bright about the dates and details of the items. That bill for the coffee and muffins of youth will bring back to its middle-aged possessor the evening to which they were a conventional accompaniment, spent in subtle and enthusiastic discussion of politics or philosophy, interchanged with sparkles of happy waggish wit, or bursts of light-hearted frolic, such as middle-life seldom effervesces in. This dirty stableman's paper recalls the last ride with our friend A., who won a Victoria Cross in the Crimea, and was killed in the Indian mutiny. That supper-bill calls up the night when X., who is now a decorous young bishop, acted that extempore charade, which nearly killed all his friends with laughing." And so on for a page or two more in the same style.

Far be it from us to dispute the reality of these interesting pictures, or to hint, even for an instant, that the imagination of our contemporary may possibly, in the opinion of some sober-minded persons, be just a little lively. But we must confess for ourselves, that, albeit we live in the gorgeous and romantic East, the contemplation of our "old bills" inspires us with thoughts and feelings of a far more prosaic character. Comparisons, odious comparisons, comparisons which make us, or would make us if we did not pride ourselves on our good temper, to tear our hair and gnash our teeth, fill our minds as we gaze at our "old bills," of ten or twelve, or even two or three years ago, and then turn to the accounts which our relentless butler now every month presents to us. We have heard it said, that there is nothing quite certain "but death and taxes." To these we venture to add bills,—monthly bills for bread and milk and meat and such necessities of life. The regularity with which these follow in the wake of pay day is a phenomenon, the explanation of which we leave to the discernment of Lord Dundreary.

Seriously, however, we think no one can look at the immense rise in the price of all the necessities of life within the last few years in this presidency, without some anxiety and alarm, especially if he is, as so many in India are, a Government servant, the pay of whose appointment, be it large or small, is not likely to be increased in these days of retrenchment and economy. There is not an article of daily consumption we can mention; gram, grass, milk, bread, rice, wood, which has not at least doubled its price within the last few years, as any one may prove by looking back at his "old bills." Take one instance, wood. A few years ago, our "old bills" tell us of wood at Rs. 2½ or Rs. 3 the cart-load. All last year, it was from 7 to 8 Rs. a cart-load, now it is 9 Rs. And when we ventured to remonstrate on the subject, our servant coolly informed us with a smile (meant we feel certain to provoke us), that it was the sircar's order to cut no wood, and that it would be Rs. 15 before long. House rent again, which though not exactly an article of daily consumption, may at least be classed as one of the necessities of life, has risen enormously all over the presidency and in Bombay itself. We all know what a pass things have come to in this respect, and how impossible it is for any but the very wealthy to get respectably lodged in any healthy locality.

We know that in the main these high prices are a good thing, that they show the prosperity of the country, and are a direct consequence of the influx of wealth into it. To the mass of the population, to all those, whether Europeans or natives, who derive an uncertain and fluctuating income from their various pursuits of trade and agriculture, high prices mean large profits, ease in the money market, and increasing prosperity. But there is one class in this country, upon whom high prices come only as an extra burden, without any kind of compensation. We speak of course of the very large number both of natives and Europeans, who are either the civil or military servants of Government. Of these, but very few have any real stake or interest in the prosperity of the country. By far the greater number of Europeans, at any rate, have nothing beyond their pay, which remains the same whatever prices may be; and upon this exceptional class the present high prices press severely. Low down in the scale indeed, among Peons and the lowest paid Karkoons, the evil has, to a certain extent, cured itself. Government has been obliged to raise its rate of wages, in order to compete with the railways and other great employers of labour; but there are many reasons why this equalising process should be very slow in reaching the higher classes of Government servants. Official employment has a certainty and stability, and also a respectability, about it, very charming to the native mind, while Englishmen come out in the various services very much influenced by the old traditions of former halcyon days, and it will be many years, perhaps, before these traditions quite cease to operate favourably for the popularity of Indian Government service.

Meanwhile, the fact is plain, that every year renders the recompense of Government service less valuable, and every increase of general riches and prosperity makes the purely official salaried class poorer. There must be a limit to this state of things somewhere, and as soon as that limit is reached the services will cease to attract servants; and Government must lower the standard of its requirements, or raise the pay. A friend of ours was once speaking to a wealthy and intelligent man on the subject of house property, and its constantly increasing value. "Yes," said the native, "and its value will increase and rents will rise in proportion. Europeans will not long be able to live in Bombay, their salaries will not pay their rents." "Well," said our friend, who was slightly nettled at the coolness of this assertion, "in that case Government will be obliged to interfere either to enforce lower rents by legislation, or to resume the land and build official residences." "No, no, no," said the other, "Government cannot interfere except to raise your pay; that is all that Government can do." Our friend thanked him for his suggestion, and quitted the subject, not exactly relishing this familiar allusion to his pay.

We are glad to know that the grievance of house rents, in Bombay at least, is in the way of being partially remedied. Other new bills we suppose must be endured and paid philosophically, until natural causes have time to operate in equalizing more fairly the relative positions of buyers and sellers. One thing we notice about present prices is, that though they constantly increase, and often from very temporary causes, they very rarely return to the old level. We cannot help thinking, however, that a partial remedy for our sorrows might be found in well-organised competition, if Europeans could only be induced to enter the field. Natives seldom compete; they combine and play into each other's hands, so that they are perfectly indifferent as to whether you give them your custom or not. If you do not get the article you require of one man, you must of some other of the same caste, with whom it is a point of honour that the first man shall not suffer for your dislike. We sometimes hear rumours of model farms and other excellent schemes, but nothing has ever yet come of them. We do not despair however of seeing some day a healthy competition established, which besides its more immediate effects in bringing down prices, will prove in some respects a more effective engine of practical native education, than all the colleges in India.

MISCELLANEOUS.

ADULTERATION OF COTTON.—An important case has just been decided in the Appellate branch of the High Court at Bombay, which possesses peculiar interest at this particular time, when efforts are being made to put down the systematic rascality so extensively practiced in the cotton trade. The facts may be very shortly stated. A cotton broker was charged before a magistrate at Broach with having sold in October last thirty-one bales of adulterated cotton, which is an offence made punishable under an Act dating as far back as 1829. The principal witness was the purchaser, who deposed that, previous to completing the purchase, he had taken samples from ten or fifteen of the thirty-one bales, and found seeds mixed with the cotton, "it being customary to mix the cotton and cotton seeds together, as a part of the trade." The price paid by the purchaser was Rs. 324 per candy,—the market price at that particular time for the best Broach cotton being

Rs. 420. In due course these bales found their way to Bombay, and by some unexplained means were brought under the notice of the commission then sitting to inquire into the cotton frauds, and by them handed over to the police, with a view to a prosecution being instituted. Avoiding unnecessary details, we may state the defence made by the prisoner was that he was merely an agent in the transaction. He denied having attempted to commit a fraud, and alleged that the condition of the cotton was well known prior to the purchase. He was convicted, however, and sentenced to nine months' imprisonment with hard labour. As usual, an appeal was lodged against this decision, but only to be rejected. On the 18th Feb. the case was brought before the high court by petition from the prisoner, and the legal gentleman, who on that occasion represented him, urged that "the charge, as framed, constituted no offence against the regulation, inasmuch as it did not allege that the sale was fraudulent;" and that the regulation "aimed against the suppression of fraud only, as was apparent from its title, preamble, and every section in it." It was further contended that the whole transaction was fair and above board. The cotton was known to be adulterated by the purchaser, and in consequence a lower price was paid for it. The Court, after perusing the papers, "found that the magistrate had made a clear error in law, quashed the conviction and sentence, and ordered the prisoner to be discharged." This case forcibly illustrates the inadequacy of any existing law to deal with this class of fraud, and shows the urgent necessity for the passing of the Bill lately introduced into the Bombay Legislature by Mr. Scott. The prisoner on his release, doubtless, hastened to resume his former trade, and felt doubly secure in prosecuting it, seeing that the law had been appealed to, but had proved a dead letter. The provisions of Mr. Scott's Bill will, it is anticipated, put an effectual check on the systematic frauds so long practised with impunity.—Hurkaru, April 2.

THE MISSING LINK.—We are glad to observe that the project for securing a complete railway and steamboat communication between the Mediterranean and India, by way of the Euphrates valley, the Persian Gulf, and Scinde, is now to be fully realised. A concession, as regards the Euphrates valley, has recently been conceded, and as that was the missing link in the route, we may now look for its completion at no distant date. The Scinde Railway may be said to be not only complete, but in successful working, as the traffic has increased fully 200 per cent. since March last. The traffic-manager of the line says, in his report:—"It will be interesting to know that we are now receiving machine-pressed bales of cotton and hemp from up-river. Yesterday a consignment of 400 bales of cotton, and 330 bales of hemp, was received here from Ferozepore for shipment to England. This is the first consignment of pressed bales that has ever come down the Indus, and I fancy is amongst the first exportations of the kind from the interior of India. It will be a great matter for Indian railway companies when the cotton and similar traffic they now convey is all pressed. At present, with every care and attention, we can only load from twelve to seventeen loose bales on a truck averaging, say two and a half to three tons, or about half the weight which the waggon is intended to carry; besides, there is a great obstruction which waggons, laden with loose cotton or wool, present to the progress of a train, the tear and wear of tarpaulins and ropes, and, above all, the great risk of fire; all of which, in the case of waggons laden with pressed bales, must necessarily be very much decreased." There has been a gradual increase in the quantity of cotton carried down the line from Kotree to Kurrachee during 1862.

A NEW SANITARIUM.—A correspondent of the Bombay Gazette says Panchgunny has been recognised as a Sanitarium, its climate being pronounced by Government to be "more congenial as a continued residence to Europeans who have been long in India, and to their children, than any other Bombay station." A station fund is to be formed for Panchgunny, to which an annual sum of Rs. 2,000 will be contributed by the State, for the construction of roads. A superintendent has also been appointed, vested with the authority of a subordinate magistrate, in the person of the founder and principal landholder of the station. The writer says:—"Panchgunny furnishes another notable instance of what Anglo-Saxon energy and resources can do for India when favoured by climate; a few short years ago it had scarcely a recognised name. Its hamlet has now expanded to a thriving village. Its various eminences are studded with comfortable English homesteads, surrounded by gardens, and the sights and sounds of peaceful industry gave life and animation to the scene. Panchgunny is 14 miles east of Mahabaleshwar, has an annual rainfall of 50 inches, is 4,000 feet high and well-watered."

CHANGES IN THE LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL.—There is a probability, says a Bombay contemporary, of several changes being made in the Legislative Council of that Presidency. Mr. W. B. Tristram is about to leave for England, and Mr. Scott intends to retire as soon as the Cotton Fraud Bill is carried. The cause of this secession is attributed to the fact that the power of the Council is now so very limited, that there is nothing in the position of a "non-official member to reward a merchant whose hands are full enough of his own business, for giving up all his leisure time to the business of legislation."

THE "VICTORIA."—We are informed that, though the Victoria left Bombay on the 18th March with a mail for Aden to meet the Calcutta steamer on the 9th, this was not the first of the new contract line of steamers intended to give Bombay a weekly mail. The contract has not yet been concluded. No company except the Peninsular and Oriental could tender for what is virtually a part of their route—from Bombay to Aden, and that company wanted so enormous a subsidy for the line, that they have been asked to reconsider their tender. The sum was not under £67,000, and that for two mails a month to Aden, to meet the Calcutta steamer—a distance of only 1,600 miles. If Government are forced to accept this tender, they threaten to double the rates of postage to Marseilles. There is no doubt that this is in contemplation, and we trust all the Chambers of Commerce in and out of India interested in the matter, as well as the whole English public, will protest. We pay enough to swell the profits of the great Peninsular and Oriental monopoly as it is.—Friend of India.

SEDASHEGUR.—HONORE, March 27.—Since writing my last letter to you, I have again visited Sedashegur, where I found that considerable progress has lately been made in the public works, especially as regards the road leading from Ankola, which joins the Arbye ghaut. It is already passable, though with some difficulty, in a few parts, but there is not the slightest doubt that it will be fully opened up to traffic before the setting in of the monsoon. A carriage might even now be driven with great comfort over the greater part of the road. The late commodore of the Indian station inspected the harbour works just before my arrival, and, I believe, expressed an opinion regarding the sea wall similar to that which I had already laid before you. It seems, however, that the present sea face is only intended to serve as a temporary one, and that a permanent wall, of dove-tailed masonry, with properly sloping face, and firmly secured, is to be built some ten feet more seaward, which in the fine weather will form, even in its most exposed parts, a fine wharf for the loading and unloading of cargo boats of large tonnage. Iron houses are, I hear, in course of construction in Bombay for the Government officials now residing at Beiteul and Sedashegur, and they are expected to be ready before the setting in of the monsoon. This is a wise measure, as it would be highly improbable that Government officers could keep their health and maintain their efficiency, during the heavy rains, in chuppar houses and tents which they at present occupy. Preparations are also being made for securely hutting in the prisoners and labourers during the monsoon. It might possibly be advantageous if all the public buildings at Sedashegur were, for the present, made of iron, as it would save the withdrawal of labour from the other works, and the materials might always be made use of afterwards, or might be sold for a good price, when there is leisure for erecting proper permanent buildings.

PROSPECTS OF CULTIVATORS AT SEDASHEGUR.—I had the pleasure of seeing, when at Sedashegur, a specimen of the cotton grown on the Kadara estate under the able management of Mr. Klein-knecht. The fibre was very beautiful and long in the staple, and has been valued, I believe, at three shillings per pound. This fully establishes the capability of the district as a cotton growing country. A gentleman has, I believe, started an indigo plantation about twenty-five miles up the Kala Nuddee. Although several species of indigofera grow wild in the district, and among them here and there specimens of the true indigofera tinctoria, I fear the cultivation of the plant for its dye will not be so remunerative as the cultivation of many other kinds of produce in the district, as the heavy rain-fall which promotes the luxuriant growth of the plant is apt, if great care be not taken, to wash out much of the valuable colouring matter. This disadvantage may, however, be overcome if care be taken to plant and reap at proper seasons. I pointed out some time ago the profitable nature of tobacco cultivation at the present crisis. A South-American planter, it is known, has obtained the grant of a very large tract of land close to Supah talook, from the Goanese authorities, for the purpose of cultivating tobacco, coffee, cotton, and other produce, I can certainly recommend tobacco cultivation as likely to be a most profitable undertaking for many years to come, and believe that no land is better adapted to it than parts of the Supah talook of North Canara. Although great present advantages have been offered to settlers by the Goanese Government, I question whether it will not be found much more profitable and satisfactory in the end to occupy land under our own Government. I am surprised that none of your wealthy native Bombay capitalists have yet set up building establishments in Sedashegur and Beiteul.

THE HIGH COURT OF BOMBAY is about to lose the services of the hon. Mr. Justice Hebbert who retires in May next. Mr. Warden, Sessions Judge of Surat, Mr. Chief Secretary Anderson, and Mr. Henry Tucker, are each named as his probable successor.

STEALING PLANTS.—The Bombay Saturday Review contains the narrative of a most disgraceful transaction, in which "a highly-connected and respectable Parsee, boasting of his position as a gentleman, and of his father having been one of the wealthiest of the wealthy merchants of Bombay, the equal of the late Sir Jamsetjee Jejeebhoy and a J. P.," to boot, was brought before a police-court, charged with having instigated a servant-boy to steal for him a valuable plant from the Victoria Gardens. He denied the charge, of course, but it was clearly brought home to him, and a fine of fifty rupees imposed; which punishment strikes us as singularly inadequate to the offence; and if, as the Bombay reviewer alleges, the magistrate who inflicted it accompanied his sentence "with the remark that but for his position the charge would have been so framed that he must have been condemned to imprisonment, or sent up to the High Court," we can only say that his worship took a mistaken view of the case and of his duty. The wealth and position of the culprit aggravated tenfold the cowardly dishonesty of which he had been guilty in employing a child to thief for him, and his punishment should have been both severe and degrading, as a warning to any others of his race and class disposed to imitate his example.

COTTON CROPS.—We are sorry to learn from the Times of India of the 13th March that the prospects of the ensuing cotton crops on the western coast are very far from satisfactory. That journal says:—"The Bombay cotton crop of the present season is, we fear, likely, after all, to disappoint home expectation. From the Oomrawuttee, Akote, and Hingun Ghaut districts [Berah] there are concurrent reports of a deficient outturn, and the crop has been estimated at not more than one-half its usual extent. Unseasonable rains are said to have done this mischief, and so consistent are the advices from parties variously interested in the result that we may reasonably fear the predictions upon the subject are but too well founded. At Bhowanuggur, again, (the head quarters of the Dholera districts), a falling off is now seriously apprehended, and it is difficult to contract for any cotton of this growth for forward delivery. From the Guzerat districts, and especially from Broach, we have similar complaints! and after duly allowing for the interested representations of dealers, we doubt if any excess upon last year's crop can be looked for, in spite of the increased breadth of land which was put under seed during last sowings. The heavy rains of November and December have not only destroyed the hope of a large outturn, but have seriously damaged the colour of the staple, which is likely, we are told, to come forward with a good deal of stain upon it. The report of injury to the crops by worm is doubtful, though possibly some slight damage has been sustained from this cause. From Verawul and Mangrore we have news very like the above. From Compta, however, no such disparaging advices have come to hand, and speaking generally, this variety will probably show the most satisfactory outturn. On the whole it is doubtful whether the supply of cotton from this side of India in the current year will not even fall short of that of 1862. We regret to learn that the dealers are systematically adulterating the Oomrawuttee, Akote, Vingoria and even Dollera cotton with the short-stapled growths of Scinde and also Bengal. It is stated that native dealers, experienced in the trade, have this season established agencies at Kurrachee and other places, for the express purpose of bringing cotton thence to mix with 'Surats.' A Calcutta circular notices the fact, that some 7,000 or 8,000 bales of Bengal cotton have been shipped for this port for a similar purpose. This is only partially the case, however, as a visit to the local screws would show Bengal cotton being screwed by itself, in a fair and legitimate manner. It is, we believe, impossible at present to tell what the extent of our crop will be, but we fear that too sanguine expectations are entertained of it at home. It is from Nagpore alone that we have any account that we can fully rely upon. A late official report from this province states, 'that notwithstanding the season having been partly unfavourable, the area under cotton cultivation has increased from 4,96,171 acres in 1861, to 5,86,650 acres in 1862, and the production from 34,523,558 lbs. in 1861 to 47,344,914 lbs. in 1862, showing an increase of 18 per cent. in area and of 37 per cent. in produce, which increase is attributable in part, but not entirely, to the enhanced rate of prices.' This increase however, is almost too unimportant to notice, consisting of only 32,000 bales."

SALE OF INDIAN NAVY VESSELS.—The Bombay Government are offering for sale the whole of their fleet of sea-going steamers. An advertisement announces that contracts will be received at the Indian navy storekeeper's office until the 20th of July next, for the purchase of the ship Ajdaha and steamers Semiramis and Berenice, as they at present lie in Bombay harbour. The Ajdaha is a vessel of 1,440 tons burthen, and was built in England 1846. The paddle-steamer Berenice is a teak ship, rebuilt in Bombay in 1849, of 664 tons burthen and 230 nominal horse-power. The paddle-steamer Semiramis is also teak-built, of 960 tons and 300 horse-power.

CEYLON.

Colombo, March 23.—The published Customs returns for February show an increase of £87,000 in the value of imports, as compared with the corresponding month of last year. Exports, also, have largely improved. The season at the Government Pearl Fisheries is progressing satisfactorily in regard to the returns. It is expected that the yield from this prolific but uncertain source of revenue will reach £50,000 for the season. A lengthy correspondence has taken place between the Government and the Planters' Association, respecting the condition of internal communication. The Association suggest that a Commission of Inquiry into the state of the roads throughout the island should be appointed. Six field-officers have been telegraphed for from Madras, to hold a court-martial on Colonel Haddon, B.C. Rumour speaks of the charge against this officer as being "a trifling one, but involving serious consequences." Captain Donnan has been appointed Master Attendant at Colombo. The Government has issued a circular to the judges of the Courts of Original Jurisdiction, referring to certain malpractices existing in these Courts. The income of interpreters and clerks is said to have exceeded for years past that of the magistrates. The weather, up to the middle of last month, had been very favourable for coffee cultivation, and a bumper crop was anticipated.

THE MIRAGE.—We observe from the Madras Times that a correspondent of the Phoenix at Cawnpore writes of the above phenomenon at that place as follows:—"This station is singularly subject to whirlwinds of all sizes and shapes, which are to be seen at all hours of the day floating and fleeing about. Also for the 'mirage'-like appearance that is observable on a large plain between the Echelon-barracks and the railway. It at times so nearly resembles a sheet of water, that it is hard to persuade strangers the contrary." We have often been struck with this "mirage-like appearance" in driving along Gallo Face; in dry, sunny weather, about ten A.M., the apparent sheet of water across the road by the sea-side, seen at five to six hundred yards distance, is quite enough to deceive any casual observer—more particularly when, as is often the case, the illusion is rendered perfect by the reflection of a human figure, or passing carriage, seen perfectly depicted in this curious scene. Our thoughts naturally recur to Egypt, the sandy plains of which may be termed the "home of the mirage." These plains are often interrupted by small eminences, upon which the inhabitants have built their villages to escape the inundations of the Nile; and we see it stated that in the morning and evening objects are seen in their natural form and position, but "when the surface of the sandy ground is heated by the sun," the land seems terminated at a particular distance by a general inundation! the interspersed villages seem like so many islands, and between each we have its inverted image appearing in the supposed water! The production of double images of objects is readily understood now by that power of refraction in optics, which enables us to see "round a corner," and to the same influence we must ascribe the appearances of sheets of water on plains or sandy deserts.—Colombo Observer.

REVISED RULES RELATING TO FURLONGS AND LEAVE OF ABSENCE FOR JUDGES OF THE HIGH COURT.

1. A furlough for the period of one year, with an allowance of £1,000, payable by quarterly payment, shall be allowed to the chief justice and to each puisne judge of the High Court after seven years' actual service as chief justice, or chief justice and judge, or judge of the said court.

2. The furlough granted under these rules to a judge selected from the covenanted civil service shall be exclusive of the furlough to which such judge is entitled under the rules applicable to furloughs allowed to members of such service.

3. If a judge of the high court, selected from the covenanted civil service, who has not taken his furlough under the rules applicable to his branch of the service, before his appointment to the high court, shall take such furlough within one year after the expiration of his furlough under these rules, the furlough taken by him as judge of the high court shall be reckoned as so much time of his furlough under the rules applicable to the covenanted service, and the amount drawn by him shall be adjusted, with reference to such rules, by deductions from the allowances payable to him as a civil servant on furlough.

4. A chief justice, or puisne judge, during his absence on furlough, shall retain his office, but such furlough shall not be reckoned as actual service in calculating the period of service entitling the chief justice, or puisne judge, to a pension.

5. Leave may be granted by the Gov. gen. in Council to the chief justice, or any puisne judge of the High Court who may not be a member of the covenanted C.S., under medical certificate, once during the term of his service, either for a period of six months on half salary, payable on return and resumption of his duties, or for a period of fifteen months on an allowance of £1,000 per annum. Such chief justice or puisne judge, during his absence, shall retain his office, but if his absence shall, under any circumstances, exceed fifteen months, his office shall be vacated.

6. If any judge of the High Court, who has taken leave of absence under the foregoing rule for a period of six months, shall desire to extend his absence beyond such period, he shall be permitted to do so, under due medical certificate, his allowance for the entire period of absence being calculated at the rate of £1,000 per annum.

7. Leave of absence, under medical certificate, to judges of the High Court who are members of the covenanted civil service, will be regulated by the rules "for sick leave" applicable to the civil service generally.

8. No more than six months of the leave granted under medical certificate shall be reckoned as actual service in calculating the period of service entitling the chief justice or puisne judge to a pension.

9. Short leave on private affairs may be granted to the judges of the High Court under the rules applicable to covenanted civil servants.

THE CALCUTTA MUNICIPAL BILL.

THE citizens of the metropolis of British India are sometimes strangely apathetic, and at other times as strangely excitable. At present they are in the apathetic mood, for though a measure of very great importance to the interests of Calcutta—Mr. Eden's Municipal Bill—is now under the consideration of the Legislative Council, and it is well understood that information and suggestions from without would be peculiarly acceptable, the members of the Council are obliged to issue a formal notification to that effect. Mr. Eden informed his brother councillors that no communication of any kind had been received from any of the ratepayers of the town, although every opportunity had been given for the expression of public opinion. Perhaps the intense heat of the weather had made the good citizens indolent and indifferent for the time. In this Municipal Bill a number of new and somewhat heavy taxes are proposed, and we have a strong illustration of the ill effects of tropical heat when we find our countrymen in Calcutta in a state of languid and drowsy quietude just as the hand of Government, after due warning, is about to be thrust into their pockets. Perhaps a change in the atmosphere—the refreshing influence of a few north-westerns—will cause the British inhabitants to pass from their present sooty (or sleepy) condition to a state of sudden excitement, as if roused up from a dream; and thus, perhaps, when the Bill has passed, the Council, as Mr. Eden seems to anticipate, "will be flooded with suggestions and objections." These alternations of apathy and excitement and excitement and apathy are very characteristic of British-Indian society; but we have observed that the apathetic condition is of much the longest continuance.

SIR MORDAUNT WELLS.

THIS gentleman is a little too impulsive and impetuous for the Bench of any Court of Justice. He is always making violent remarks and coming to sweeping conclusions affecting large classes of the community. He enraged the Natives of India not long ago by the utterance of such a severe and indiscriminating censure of their national character as we only expect to hear from an inexperienced, hot-headed young "griff," who regards all "black fellows" or "niggers" with contempt; and now the learned Judge, on taking his leave of the Insolvent Court, and making way for Mr. Justice Levinge, has enlisted amongst his numerous enemies all the tradespeople of Calcutta, by asserting from the Bench of the Insolvent Court that when they come to grief from over-trading and reckless speculation, they are much addicted to putting down fabulous assets in their schedules. "In other words," observes the Bengal Hurkaru, "they are charged with fraudulently cooking their accounts, and with knowingly submitting to their creditors a false statement of their affairs, with the express view to mislead and deceive them." Sir Mordaunt Wells stated from the Bench that during the first half-year 158 cases had been tried before the Insolvent Court, involving liabilities to the extent of thirty-six lakhs of rupees against only two lakhs of assets. This is a sad fact, it must be admitted; but before we consent to ground a general accusation of fraud against the tradesmen of Calcutta on this circumstance we ought to inquire into details a little, and see what proportion of insolvent traders have acted rashly or dishonestly. We are not to take for granted that all insolvents are like Mr. William Palmer, who, trading without a pice of capital, raised loans on I.O.U.'s to the amount of Rs. 28,000, and who continued his trading when his liabilities were a lakh, and his assets Rs. 800. Mr. Palmer had put down in his schedule Rs. 50,000 as the amount of his good debts, and not a pice of it was recoverable. Sir Mordaunt Wells should have stated how many of the 158 insolvents had acted with similar dishonesty. They could not all have been of the Palmer caste.

STATUES OF LORD DALHOUSIE AND MR. WILSON.

THE statue of the late Marquis of Dalhousie is now on its way to Calcutta. The statue of the late Mr. James Wilson, the financier, is also considerably advanced in marble. The latter is to be erected in the Dalhousie Institute of Calcutta, though the proposed grand new edifice for that institution is, we believe, not even yet begun. About two years ago the engineers of India were invited to send in designs for the building, but we have heard nothing of the result. The sculptor, Mr. John Steell, by these two admirable statues, will make himself as well known in the City of Palaces on the banks of the Ganges as he now is in the modern Athens, where his admired sitting statue of the Great Scottish Novelist first brought him into notice. The statue of Lord Dalhousie is the first piece of native sculpture of any magnitude that has been sent from Scotland to a foreign country. The Edinburgh Evening Courant thus speaks of the statue of the Governor-general:—

"The graceful elegance of the face and figure, so distinctly marking the perfect gentleman—the calm, yet resolute decision which is expressed in the countenance of the statesman, as he points with his finger on a half-opened plan to the names of 'Punjab,' 'Oude,' and a line of railway and canal, and seems to say, with the confidence of one who has well calculated every step, and in mind overcome every difficulty, 'it must be done'—the artistic advantage taken of the drapery of a military cloak, thrown back, and hanging lightly from the shoulders—all combine to render this work of Mr. Steell's, in our estimation, the finest that he has yet executed. The subject was a good one, and the artist had the great advantage of the personal sittings of the original, who, until a very short period before his death, took the deepest interest in the work, and the result is certainly most satisfactory. We almost grudge this beautiful specimen of art leaving our country. The late Marquis of Dalhousie was one of ourselves. Elmhurst's claimed him as one of her most distinguished sons; and though the ten-pound voters could at one time see nothing in him worthy of their suffrages because he was a consistent Conservative, yet we believe that there are none now who would not gladly see his statue adorning our city, and point it out to the rising generation as that of one who performed faithfully whatever duty he undertook."

Mr. Steell had been often invited by Chantrey to leave his native town for our great metropolis, but it appears that he wished to connect his fame as much as possible with his own country. He has lately been employed upon a colossal statue of Allan Ramsay, now nearly completed, and has commenced upon one of the late Professor Wilson, the poet, editor, and lecturer.

RURAL REFORMATION IN THE PUNJAB.

SIR ROBERT PEEL, when Prime Minister, said that Ireland was his difficulty. But it was not his difficulty alone. Many before and after him have had the same obstacles to encounter. There are no problems that are difficult of solution to one student only. The great question of—"What are we to do with our criminals?" has puzzled Prime Ministers far more than even the Irish question; and legislators, and moralists, and philanthropists have all been at loggerheads upon the subject, and have all set up unsound theories and made unsatisfactory experiments upon it. Our Ticket-of-leave system lately ended in terrible results in the heart and outskirts of the metropolis of the most civilised and humane of European nations. We wonder what Thomas Carlyle thinks and says of it—he whose blood boils so at all gentle consideration for the criminal—who deems it criminal to love the criminal—who has no remedy but the knout and the gallows for "the Devil's Regiments of the Line." "Beautiful Black Peasantry," he exclaims, "who have fallen idle and have got the devil at your elbow; interesting White Felonry, who are not idle, but have enlisted into the Devil's Regiments of the Line,—know that my benevolence for you is comparatively trifling! What I have of that divine feeling is due to others, not to you. A 'Universal Sluggard-and-Scoundrel-Protection-Society' is not one I mean to institute in these times, where so much wants protection, and is sinking to sad issues for want of it. The scoundrel needs no protection. The scoundrel that will hasten to the gallows, why not clear the way for him?" And again: "You, ye diabolic canaille, what has a Governor to do with you? Have we no work to do but to be drilling Devil's Regiments of the Line?"

This, in our opinion, is neither true Christianity nor true philosophy; and one of our British rulers in the East has lately acted very successfully in a very different spirit. He has not asked one of the Devil's Regiments, "What has a Governor to do with them?" He has drilled them into discipline and made them good subjects.

Probably Carlyle has never heard—indeed, very few people in England have yet heard—of the Rural Reformatories in the Punjab. That they are unheard of in London is not strange, for it was but the other day that some account of them was published for the first time in the British metropolis of India. The Punjab is one of our best governed provinces in the East. The administration of that province has been peculiarly careful, conscientious, and successful. Lord Dalhousie had the merit so much lauded in Queen Elizabeth. He knew how to choose wise councillors and able agents. Whatever diversity of opinion may exist on the question of Annexation, there can be but one opinion as to how the Punjab has been governed since we took possession of it.

The Government of India has done well and wisely, not only in encouraging the Reformatory system in the Punjab, but in letting the world know of the results. A very interesting statement on the subject is published amongst the Records of Government in the Calcutta Gazette, and but for its great length we should have transferred it in extenso to our own columns. We can afford to make room for only a few leading details.

In Sealkote and its neighbourhood there are several wild tribes whom Carlyle, in "his hearty hatred for scoundrels," had he been governor of the Punjab, would speedily have got rid of for ever. Death is the shortest and cheapest of punishments, and he would have thought it politic to exterminate every man of them—to hang them by scores at a time upon the boughs of forest trees, or to blow them from the cannon's mouth. Our British authorities in India took a different course. The most remarkable of these "scoundrel" tribes are the Sansees and the Puckewars. They were professed thieves. Roguery was their only mark of civilization. In every other respect they were mere jungle men—mere human wild beasts—Adamic gorillas. They have no history to interest them in the past, they recognise no God to guide and guard them in the present. They have no glimpses of a world beyond the grave! They eat theraw flesh of cats and jackals, and have no fixed habitat. They sometimes burn and sometimes bury their dead. These once homeless savages used to come suddenly upon a quiet and flourishing neighbourhood like a flight of locusts. They were a widely-dreaded scourge. They are now converted into harmless, quiet, and orderly subjects of Queen Victoria, Empress of Hindoostan.

Mr. Prinsep, Commissioner of Sealkote, has the merit of having first suggested to the Government a system of reformatories for the settlement and reclamation of these wild and wicked tribes. Mr. Macnabb, the Deputy Commissioner, has worked out the project. All penal plans had been tried in vain. Such slippery dogs were hunted by the police to no purpose, for they rapidly separated, and escaped, and as rapidly re-united, and appeared again suddenly in places where they were least expected. The villagers, dreading their revenge, very readily sheltered and concealed them until pursuit was over. It is true that some of them were occasionally apprehended and thrown into prison. Above one hundred of them were always to be found there, and these prisoners cost the Government annually about thirty-five rupees a head. There are now six reformatories for these people in the Punjab, well tenanted. Waste lands have been placed at their disposal, and for five years to come they are to reap all the advantages of their cultivation of them. At present they have no rent to pay for house or land. They have already cultivated 1,500 acres. These Indian Bedouins are now peaceful settlers and industrious agriculturists. Schools have been established for their children. The people are not, indeed, yet models of virtue, but all sorts of crime amongst them has marvellously diminished, and this amount of political and moral good has been effected at an incredibly low cost to the Government. Some four or five hundred pounds covered the expense, and even that amount will come back again into the Treasury by savings in jails and police establishments. What will our friend Thomas Carlyle say to all this? Will he still maintain that it is idle and foolish to drill Devil's Regiments of the Line, and that we ought to clear the way for such rogues to the gallows? "Peace hath her victories, no less renowned than war;" and we confess it is more pleasant to us to hear of this bloodless civil conquest of thousands of our fellow-creatures, now "annexed" to civilised life, than of some hard-won military triumph which has strewn the fields with thousands of the dead.

THE COTTON QUESTION AGAIN.

A Letter to Thomas Bazley, Esq., M.P. for Manchester, on the Cotton Question. By Major Charles L. Showers, of the Bengal Army, late Officiating Agent for the State of Meywar, Rajpootana, Central India. Calcutta Military Orphan Press, 1863.

Major Charles L. Showers is a man of intellect who can take a lively interest in a diversity of subjects. He is at once a soldier, a politician, and a theoretical agriculturist. He has found time amidst his heavy and various official duties in India to study not only the character of its people, but the nature of its soil and climate. Major Showers was a welcome contributor to the "Cotton Supply Reporter," a class periodical, under the editorship or control of Mr. Bazley, the gentleman to whom the present publication is very appropriately dedicated. The author fancies he has hit upon a discovery of no slight practical importance—namely, the identity in species between the indigenous cotton plant of India and the varieties cultivated in America. He thinks that by scientific culture the cotton of India may be made quite equal to the best cotton yet produced in any quarter of the world. He maintains that there is in reality but one species of cotton, though there are many varieties, and that the Indian cotton may be improved into a long stapled variety. When Sterne, in his "Sentimental Journey," told the French Minister that if the French people had a fault it was that they were too serious; the latter replied, "that if that were his opinion he must defend it with all his might, for he would have all the world against him." If Major Showers has not all the world against him, he has a whole army of botanists to contend with, and will have more than enough work, single-handed, to fortify and defend his cause. If scientific and careful cultivation can lengthen the staple of Indian cotton, and the new law to punish fraud in the packing of the bales be effective, our manufacturers will readily avail themselves of the Indian market, and soon make us thoroughly independent of the political vicissitudes of America—a consummation most devoutly to be wished. One thing in favour of the author's arguments and expectations is the fact that the native cotton-growers, in spite of the absurd supposition that old experience has made them sage, and that they have arrived as nearly at practical perfection in the cultivation of cotton as their soil and climate will permit, are quite as backward in all sorts of agriculture as in many of those arts and sciences which have made such vast progress in a few years amongst the energetic Anglo-Saxons. The natives of India hate innovation, and always prefer to go exactly in the track of their forefathers; and thus in two thousand years they have probably not introduced one single change or improvement in the cultivation of their cotton. No one can truly contradict the observation of Dr. Royle, that cultivated plants of all sorts afford numerous instances of the effects of soil, climate, and culture in modifying their habits and characters, and we see no reason therefore why the cotton plant of India, under the influence of European science, might not be so improved as to bear the aspect of a different and superior species, which would compete successfully with the cotton of any market in the world. Already Indian cotton exhibits, it is said, when properly picked, a strength and silkiness of fibre and rich creaminess of colour equal to any short-stapled cotton in the world, and can be converted into admirable cloth, though the process involves more cost and labour than the same process in respect to a long-stapled variety. In the spinning the short staple frequently breaks, and necessitates the delay and trouble of reuniting it; so that, according to Mr. Cheetham, as quoted by Major Showers, the spinners pray to be "delivered from the devil and Surats." We earnestly hope that Major Showers may find that he is right in his opinion that the short staples may be turned into long ones; and if by his eloquence and zeal he should entice British experimentalists into the cotton-fields of India and bring about this great and happy change, he will deserve to be honoured as a national benefactor.

CORRESPONDENCE.

INVALID ESTABLISHMENT.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—Although, ever since "Amalgamation" was broached, there has constantly been some imaginary bonus and retiring scheme afloat, yet at this present time there seems such a universal expectation, in all three Presidencies, of the near approach of a real scheme, that there must surely be some foundation for such a general feeling. Some of the Overland papers, too, have hinted at such a measure being in contemplation.

I do not purpose entering on the propriety of offering a bonus to sweep off the surplus unemployed officers of that clumsy, ill-digested scheme, the Staff Corps—a measure, perhaps, not unadvisable nevertheless—but I wish to say a few words regarding a scheme for the Invalid Establishment, about which there can be no doubt.

Every retirement from this body is a saving, as the vacancy is not filled up by the promotion of a junior, as in the effectives. Yet, although the annihilation or reduction of this establishment was recommended to the Home authorities by the Supreme Government three years ago, nothing has ever been done in the matter.

The case of these officers is plain enough; there is no complication of interests to be taken into consideration, as in the staff corps and line. By the terms of the Queen's proclamation their retirement could not be compulsory, but I am sure many would retire if a liberal inducement were held out to them.

It must be borne in mind that this body of officers, with one exception, consists entirely of lieutenants, captains, and majors, to the number of 120, whose reduced invalid pay does not admit of laying by much, or anything, and whose pensions, alone, would be insufficient to maintain them and their families in Britain.

I would propose, therefore, to offer a liberal bonus to those who have completed their period of service; and to those who have not served out their time, of whom there are several, to grant the full pension of their regimental rank, together with a certain amount to pay their passage home—say, to an officer alone, Rs. 1,500; with a family, Rs. 2,500. I think the addition of these sums for passage and outfit necessary, for many would otherwise not have the means of returning to England, and, consequently, would not accept the bonus or pension. This should be given to all alike, without reference to rank.

The following table shows the difference between Indian and English pay per annum. Major of invalids in India, £500; in England, £292:—

	In India.	In England.
Captain	£360	£191
Lieutenant	210	118

The bonus I propose is, to offer each officer the pension of the immediately superior grade, or the option of receiving, in lieu of increased pension, Rs. 20,000 in the cases of majors and captains, and Rs. 15,000 of lieutenant. Thus—

	Present Pension.	Increased Pension.	Rupees.
Major	£292	£360	... or £292 + 20,000
Captain	191	292	... or 191 + 20,000
Lieutenant	118	191	... or 118 + 15,000

It will be clear from the above figures that, even with the proposed additional pension or bonus, there would be a considerable saving by adopting this suggestion.

If there be no intention of interfering with the present state of the invalid establishment, at least let it be at once understood that such is the case. The state of suspense in which all are kept is a great loss to several of them; for, till they know definitely what is to be their fate, they are naturally reluctant to commence any undertaking to try and better their condition, and, at the same time, benefit the country by laying out what little means they have at their disposal.—I remain, Sir, your obedient servant,

ECONOMY AND JUSTICE.

Ootacamund, March, 1863.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—APRIL 28.

A petition was presented by Mr. MURRAY, from Mr. Charles Edward Beddome, lately a mate and acting lieutenant in her Majesty's Indian Navy, detailing his services for eight years in India, that he cannot get employment in her Majesty's Navy, or under the Act of Parliament transferring the Indian Naval Service to her Majesty, and that the compensation given him is wholly inadequate for his services.

MEDICAL OFFICERS IN THE INDIAN ARMY.

Mr. BAZLEY asked the Secretary of State for India when the medical officers of her Majesty's Indian army would be placed upon a perfect footing of equality with the medical officers of her Majesty's British army, and the reason why the important paragraphs in the Royal warrant of October, 1858, which regulated the substantive pay of British army surgeons, and ensured to them all the advantages and precedence attaching to their rank, and regulated quarters, rates of lodging money, forage, sick and retiring allowances, and many other substantial advantages, had been omitted in the Indian Army Medical Warrant.

Sir C. Wood said it was never contemplated by the warrant of 1860 to make the two services perfectly identical. The whole case of the medical service in India was under consideration at the present moment. A proposal with respect to it had been received from the Indian Government, and had received the approval of the Indian Council and the medical commission in this country; but the scheme was subject to the decision of the Secretary for War, and until that decision was arrived at no steps could be taken in the matter.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—MAY 5.

HER MAJESTY'S FORCES IN CHINA.

Colonel SYKES asked the Secretary to the Admiralty if any and what measures were to be adopted consequent upon Capt. R. Dew, of her Majesty's ship Encounter, employing part of the naval force under his command in an unsuccessful attack upon the city of Shon-hing, in which Lieutenant Tinling, of the Encounter, was killed, Shon-hing being many miles beyond the thirty-mile radius from a treaty port.

Lord C. PAGER replied that the Admiralty had received no official intelligence of the unfortunate event referred to, but that they had given orders that the naval force was not to be employed beyond the radius of thirty miles.

CHARGE OF FORGERY.

A well-dressed man of thirty-one, who gave the feigned name "Herbert Dawson Slade," and described himself as an officer in the army, and as residing in Norfolk-street, Strand, was placed at the bar in custody of Sergeant Padiman, a detective police-officer, before Mr. Alderman Abbiss, at the Mansion-house Police-court, on Monday, the 27th April, charged with forging and uttering the endorsement to a bill of exchange for 3,000 rupees, with intent to defraud the directors of the Bank of Hindostan.

Mr. Argles, solicitor, of Mincing-lane, conducted the examination; and the prisoner was defended by Mr. Wontner, of Bucklersbury.

Mr. John Ouseley, general manager of the Bank of Hindostan, China, and Japan, 16, Cornhill, said about the early part of the week before last, the prisoner, who was a stranger to him, called at the bank, and, representing himself to be Major Slade, of her Majesty's army, at home on leave, and that he had lately arrived in England, said he wanted to know whether witness would negotiate a bill of his on Pennington and Co., of Calcutta, who, he said, had, or would have before the bill became due, funds of his from the sale of horses, carriages, and other things which he had left there. He added that Mr. Rose, a member of that firm, was a friend of his. Witness explained that the bank could not negotiate his draft without the endorsement of some well-known parties, or without the deposit of some sort of security. The prisoner said he held Indian Government 8 per Cent. Paper to the amount of £5,000 or £6,000, and that he had no objection to deposit that as security. He asked witness to make inquiries as to its value in the market, or to send it out to the agents of the bank in India to be sold. He then left, and on Saturday, April 18, witness received a letter from him, applying for some official quotations, which the secretary of the bank answered. On Tuesday, April 21, he called again on witness at the bank, and said that he was the brother of Sir Frederick Slade, who had an interest in the Indian Government Paper to which he had referred on his first visit, and that his brother would not like the paper to be deposited with the bank, but would probably endorse his bill, if that would be sufficient. He said he wished to draw for 3,000 rupees, and he left some letters purporting to be addressed to him by Mr. Cowie, a barrister at Calcutta, and showing the satisfactory state of his affairs there, resulting from the sale of his carriages, horses, and furniture. On Thursday, April 23, he called a third time at the bank, and, telling witness that Sir Frederick Slade would endorse his draught, he took away some bills that had been drawn out for him for signature. Upon that witness agreed to advance the 3,000 rupees, equivalent to rather more than £290 according to the rate of exchange. The prisoner then wrote in the signature-book of the bank the name "H. D. Slade," describing himself as an officer in the 1st Dragoon Guards, and giving an address in Warwick-street, Pimlico. The bills produced were drawn out in triplicate, each being for 3,000 rupees, by direction of witness. The prisoner did not sign them in the bank. Witness explained how they should be signed and endorsed, and the prisoner took them away for that purpose. He was to sign them himself, and, having got the endorsement of Sir Frederick Slade, to bring them to the bank, when the money would be passed to his credit, and he would be furnished with a cheque-book to enable him to draw. On Saturday, April 25, witness received a letter from the prisoner, dated from St. James's-square, and enclosing a cheque for £30, and also the bills in question drawn on Messrs. Pennington of Calcutta, purporting to be signed by Major Slade and endorsed by Sir Frederick Slade. The letter was brought by a commissionaire, and witness instructed the cashier, in reply, to send three £10 notes to the prisoner, according to his request.

Sir Frederick Slade, Q.C., was called as a witness. On being shown the three bills in question, he said the signature to the endorsement purporting to be his was not written by him nor by his authority. The name "H. D. Slade," the supposed drawer, was not his brother's handwriting. Witness said he has a brother, Major Slade, who is now serving in India with his regiment, the 1st Dragoon Guards. The prisoner, he added, is not his brother; he never saw him before in his life.

At this point, on the application of the solicitor for the prosecution, Alderman Abbiss adjourned the examination until Saturday, May 2, and the prisoner was removed. The prisoner was again brought up on Saturday, when, after some further evidence had been adduced, he was again remanded.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE LATE LIEUTENANT TINLING, R.N.—This young officer, the intelligence of whose death at Ningpo, from a wound received at the second attack on Shaou-hing, was brought by the last China mail, and published by us on the 27th of April, was the son of the Rev. Edward Tinling, her Majesty's Inspector of Schools. For so young an officer he had very favourably distinguished himself by his services in China, more particularly at the capture of Ningpo, his gallant conduct being honourably mentioned in the official despatches. He was subsequently in command of the gunboat Flamer, and was present at the second attack of Fung-wha, when he volunteered and brought up a ladder, which he planted, and mounted the wall held by the Taipings. Some inquiry, it is presumed, will soon be made about our officers aiding the Imperialists beyond the thirty miles' radius. In the present instance it has cost the country the life of one whose past deeds gave every promise of a brave and meritorious career.

CHARTERED MERCANTILE BANK OF INDIA, LONDON AND CHINA.—The report of the Chartered Mercantile Bank of India, London, and China, which is to be presented at the annual meeting on the 19th inst., has been issued. The net profit for the year is stated to amount to £94,328. 1s. 1d., or, including a small previous balance, £94,269. 9s. 2d. Out of this sum £50,000 has been paid in two half-yearly dividends, making together 10 per cent. on the paid-up capital. A further sum of £40,000 has been added to the reserve fund, which now amounts to £100,000, of which £60,000 is invested in Indian Securities; and the court of directors propose to invest the balance, £40,000, in public securities, as opportunities offer.

ORIENTAL TEA COMPANY.—Another joint-stock association, bearing the title of the Oriental Tea Company, has been added to the list of those undertakings, the object of which is to conduct tea-planting in India. The capital of the company is limited to £250,000, which it is proposed to raise by shares of £20 each. 2,200 of these shares are reserved for part payment of the estates.

THE GREAT INDIAN PENINSULA RAILWAY.—The directors state in their report that the opened portion of the railway was increased to 495 miles on the 6th of October, 1862, by the opening for public traffic on that day of the section of 57½ miles from Chalesgaum to Julgaum, on the north-east division of the Deccan line. The average number of miles worked during the half-year was 464. In the half-year the company earned upon the opened railway £205,938, or about £144 per mile. They had, however, to pay out of this sum for carriage traffic at the gaps in the railway system, at the Bhoire and Thull Ghat, and at the Goolbum Ravine, £52,715, or £114 per railway mile, which left £153,223, or £330 per railway mile, as gross receipts. The working expenses of the half-year, exclusive of the £52,715, amounted to £95,030, or 61.99 per cent. of the receipts brought into the revenue account, leaving a balance of £58,263, or £125 per railway mile, carried to the credit of net revenue, in reduction of the Government advances on account of the interest. The number of passengers conveyed during the half-year was 1,379,081, of which 1,289,689 were of the third and fourth class, 76,378 second-class, and 13,014 first-class passengers. The total receipts for the half-year ending the 31st of December amounted, as stated, to £150,283, or 6s. 4½d. per train mile, against £112,115, or 5s. 10d. per train mile, showing an increase of £41,168, and of 6½d. per train mile, as compared with the corresponding half of 1861. The Bhoire Ghat incline, upon the south-east division of the line, was expected to be completed by the end of March, in which event it was contemplated to open it for goods traffic about the middle of April, but not to run passenger trains over it until after the close of the approaching rainy season, in order to give time for the consolidation of the works. The directors congratulated the proprietors upon the completion of this very heavy and important section of the railway. The Thull Ghat incline, upon the north-east division, was being pushed forward with all the expedition possible. The portion of the line which would be next ready for opening extended 46 miles from Julgaum, the present terminus of the north-east division via Bhoasawul to Mulkapoor, in Berar. The opening of this section, which was expected to take place about the end of the month, was chiefly important as bringing the railway within the circle of the important cotton districts of Berar, through which it would ultimately run as far as Nagpore. The capital account showed that £10,436,712 had been received to the 31st of December last, and £9,193,481 expended, leaving a balance of £1,241,231. The interest account with the Government of India showed that the sum of £2,039,565 was paid and payable to the 31st of December last, and that £471,465 was repaid and repayable out of the company's net revenue, leaving £1,568,100 chargeable against half the surplus profits over 5 per cent.

THE EAST INDIAN RAILWAY.—The report of the directors of this company states that the line from Jumalpoore to Dinapore-road, 113½ miles, was opened on the 19th of November last; and between that date and the 22nd of December the distance between Dinapore-road and the river Kurrunnassa, 74 miles, was completed; and by the 1st of January last the Singarron branch, 8½ miles in length, was also opened; so that the total length of new line on the Bengal division of the works opened during the half-year was 196 miles. In the North West Provinces the line from the river Kurrunnassa to Benares, 56½ miles, was opened on the 22nd of December, thus completing a continuous length of the main line from Calcutta to Benares of 539 miles. The company had to work on the 31st of December 609 miles in Bengal, and 279½ miles in the North-West Provinces, making together 888½ miles of railway. A further length from Shekoabad to Allyghur, 84½ miles, was opened on the 1st of March. With the exception of the Barrakur extension and some of the station works, the whole of the Bengal division may be said to be practically finished. The remainder of the works in the North-West Provinces are also in a forward condition. The great bridges over the Tonse and the Jumna at Allahabad are progressing as fast as the difficult nature of the works will permit. The capital account shows that £10,769,834 had been received, and £19,190,969 expended, leaving a balance of £578,865. The interest on capital paid and payable by the Government of India to the 31st of December last amounts to £4,552,638, and the sums repaid from revenue, being net earnings to the same date, amount to £1,122,426, leaving the balance, £3,430,212.

LOSS OF AN EAST INDIANMAN.—The ship Sarah Palmer, Captain Reid, which was stated to have been lost on Tuskar Rock, sailed from Calcutta on the 21st of January, bound to Liverpool, with a cargo valued at £120,000, and consisting of 1,770 maunds of saltpetre, 19,553 maunds of rice, 2,926 maunds of seeds, 2,036 bales of jute, 2,147 bales of cotton, a quantity of indigo, and other produce. The Vesta, which has arrived in Liverpool, reports that at eight p.m. on Tuesday, April 29, she saw the ill-fated ship on Tuskar Rock. A boat, in charge of the second officer, and containing eight men and the captain's wife, boarded the Vesta, and stated that they did not intend to leave the ship. The latter vessel then proceeded with the captain's wife only. The Sarah Palmer went on the rock shortly before the Vesta bore in sight. A boat, containing several of the crew, is missing, and there is no probability of any portion of her cargo being saved till the gale moderates. The Liverpool steam-tug Rattler was in attendance at the scene of the disaster in order to render assistance. The City of New York, which reached Liverpool on April 30, passed the wreck of the Sarah Palmer at 8.45 p.m. on the previous day, one mile west of Tuskar, with numerous bales of cotton floating about. The following telegram, received in Liverpool May 1, shows that this vessel had broken up: "Wexford, April 30. A heavy sea is breaking over the iron ship Sarah Palmer (bound from Calcutta to Liverpool), ashore about a mile south of the Tuskar Light-house. The vessel will be a total wreck, as she has parted in two amidships, and the cargo is washing out." Another telegram says that the coast in the vicinity of the wreck was strewn with large quantities of the cargo of the ill-fated Sarah Palmer.

THE CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION.—The eighth annual report of the Civil Service Commissioners was issued on Saturday, April 25. The nominations notified to them last year show a large increase, the number being 3,649. On the greater number of the occasions for making appointments to clerkships, &c., competition has not been employed. The standard of examinations in non-competitive examinations has necessarily become a low one, inasmuch as the examinations for clerkships of the higher class, such as those in metropolitan offices and in the provincial establishments of the Customs' department, are now competitive. In fact, for a great number of appointments the ability to read and write, and to add a few figures is sufficient, and for others still less is required. It will not, therefore, be matter of surprise that in non-competitive examinations the ratio of rejections to certificates is very much smaller than it originally was. The appointments last year in the Civil Service for India announced for competition were 80 in number, and the commissioners have been officially informed that 60 at least will be assigned in July next, if a sufficient number of competent candidates should present themselves. The number of candidates was in 1856 only 56, and gradually rose to 171 in 1861, at which it remained in 1862. Of the candidates of 1862, 24 came from the University of Oxford, 20 from Cambridge, 16 from Scottish Universities, 23 from Trinity College, Dublin, and 8 from the Queen's University in Ireland.

A STRANGE ELOPEMENT.—An Englishman, formerly holding a commission as captain in the English army, having lately returned from India, and lately residing with his wife at Ostend, made the acquaintance of a Belgian gentleman named Jayhere, residing at the same place, and carrying on the business of a shipbuilder, of whom he a short time back ordered a yacht to be built specially for him, and during the interval which was occupied in building the vessel the captain became a daily visitor at the house of the shipbuilder, where he was received on terms of intimacy. M. Jayhere had a daughter, an interesting brunette, sixteen years of age, and of prepossessing appearance, with whom the captain became acquainted in the course of his visits. The yacht being at last finished, it was subjected to the inspection of the captain, who professed to be highly pleased with it. He signified his intention of taking a trip in her to try her qualities, and shortly after he had started Miss Jayhere was found to be absent. Search was immediately made, and inquiries instituted, and it was ascertained that the captain had carried her off. The matter was placed in the hands of Mr. Pellaky, of 14, George-street, Mansion-house, who immediately set about making inquiries, and traced the yacht to Calais, where, having been identified, it was seized by the authorities. The young lady, however, up to the present time has not been traced beyond Calais.

APPOINTMENT.—India Office, May 4.—The Queen has been pleased to appoint the Right Hon. Robert Monsey, Baron Cranworth, to be one of her Majesty's Commissioners to inquire into and examine whether any departure from the assurances held out by Acts of Parliament has taken place by reason of measures lately adopted for the amalgamation of her Majesty's Indian forces with her Majesty's general army, in the room of the Right Hon. the Earl of Dalhousie, K.T.

DENTAL SURGERY, 9, GROSVENOR-STREET.

MR. EPHRAIM MOSELY'S IMPROVEMENT IN THE CONSTRUCTION OF ARTIFICIAL TEETH, GUMS, AND PALATES, on an INDIA-RUBBER BASE, are secured by Letters Patent, dated December, 1852, whereby the continual outlay of new teeth is avoided, alterations from the absorption of the gums, or any other cause, being easily remedied, and the first outlay no greater than for ordinary kinds. The extraordinary results of this application may be briefly noted as under:—It consists of one continuous piece of Prepared India-rubber. The Artificial Teeth present an uniformly even surface to the action of the tongue, preventing lodgment of food and all secretions, so much complained of in the present system. No gold or any other metal being required, all springs, wires, and fastenings are wholly unnecessary; sharp edges are avoided, a greatly increased freedom of action is supplied, a natural elasticity hitherto wholly unattainable, and a fit perfected with the most unerring accuracy, are secured; while, from the softness and flexibility of the agents employed, the greatest support is given to the adjoining teeth when loose or rendered tender by the absorption of the gums. The acids of the mouth exert no agency on the prepared india-rubber; and as it is a non-conductor, fluids of any temperature may be retained in the mouth, all unpleasantness of smell and taste being at the same time provided against by the peculiar nature of its preparation.

The Equitable Tea Company, established in India in the year 1857, in the district of Cachar, in Eastern Bengal, is one of the most successful of the companies existing in India for the cultivation and manufacture of tea. The province of Cachar (an appendage of the Bengal Presidency) lies immediately to the east of Sylhet, and has direct water communication with Calcutta; and the proposed terminus of the railway at Itacca will bring Cachar within an easy journey of Calcutta. The tea gardens of the Equitable Company consist of 480 acres of land, well filled in with plant yielding tea, of which 320 acres are of four, 80 of two, and 80 of one year's growth—200 acres of land cleared ready for planting; and about 5,700 acres of uncleared land in lay and character equal to any in Cachar.

The above lands are held under grants from Government, subject to the old rules in regard to the sale of waste lands in Bengal, and are duly registered in the superintendent's office of the province, and may be put into fee simple on a Government survey taking place.

The nurseries contain a large quantity of seedlings ready for planting out, and the bungalows, tea factories, offices, and Coolie lines are not surpassed by any other in Cachar, and about £1,500 have been recently spent to make the whole as complete as possible. There are 577 Coolies employed upon the said estates.

The Report of Messrs. W. J. and H. Thompson, of Mincing-lane, the brokers of the Equitable Tea Company, to the proprietors, dated 15th March, 1863, in reference to the teas, the produce of the above gardens, for the past year, viz., 1862, is as follows:—

1. These teas rank decidedly above the average of Indian teas.
2. Having from time to time ventured to give you suggestions in respect of manufacture, packing, &c., we have noted gradual improvement, in consequence, until now; the make is almost entirely satisfactory, and the teas arrive invariably in good and high condition. The leaf of some of the medium grades is still a little too "dull black," but this alteration is the only one we can at present suggest.

3. The prices lately obtained (as compared with others) fully bear out the above remarks, and we doubt not the invoice about to be sold at auction, on the 17th inst., will also confirm the fact of these teas being much appreciated by the dealers.

4. All that is now to be wished is that the same care and attention which has lately been paid to the cultivation and manufacture of these teas, may be continued unabated, and there will be no doubt, we think, of their finding a ready market at satisfactory prices.

The teas of the Company sold by Messrs. Thompson and Co., on the 17th instant, and referred to by them in their report, formed a portion of 600 chests, the produce of the season 1862, and consisted of 152 chests, which yielded on an average 27 per chest of 80 lbs. The average price of the season for the Company's teas has been upwards of 28 per chest; and some of the Company's teas of the present season have realised as high as £11 10s. per chest, and the present Company is formed for the purpose of purchasing the estates of the Equitable Tea Company, as above described, including all the teas of the present season, estimated to yield about 80,000 lbs., and to be of the value of £8,000, and the tea seed of the value of £1,500, and all the stock and implements on and about the estates. The price for the whole is £60,000, one-half in shares, and the remainder in cash payable by three equal instalments of £10,000 in shares, and £10,000 in cash, at 6, 12, and 18 months from the 1st of April, 1863.

480 acres of cleared land, filled in with plant as above described.
200 acres of cleared land, ready for planting.
5,700 acres of uncleared land of good lay and character.
The bungalows, tea factories, out-offices, Coolie lines, cattle, and other live stock, and implements.
Nurseries and seedling plants.
The teas of the present season, 1863, estimated to yield 80,000 lbs., or 1,000 chests.
The tea seed of the present season, 1863, estimated at 150 mounds.

The teas of 1864 to be produced from such parts of the estates as are already under cultivation are estimated at 1,250 chests of the value of £10,000, and the tea seed for the same year at £3,000; and the teas of 1865 at 1,500 chests, of the value of £12,000, and the tea seed at £4,000. The 200 acres cleared and ready for planting can be rapidly filled with young tea plants from the nurseries; and the tea-chals, or hills, for hundreds of acres upon the estates, are strung together, and, with capital at command, a thousand acres of unbroken garden can be easily opened out.

The Directors will not require more than £80,000 for the purpose of carrying out their present plan of operations, and in no event will the reserved shares be issued in less than eighteen months.

The vendors guarantee a minimum dividend of 8 per cent. per annum on the paid-up capital for two years from the time of allotment, but the profits from the estates during the present year will, it is fully expected, enable the Directors to declare a dividend of at least 10 per cent. per annum upon the first year's working of the Company, and a progressive increase of dividend up to 20 per cent. per annum may be confidently anticipated within the next six years.

The Company have made an arrangement for Mr. Julius Sandeman, the present superintendent of the estates, to continue in the management for two years from the 1st of April, 1863.

The prominent advantages to be enjoyed by the Company comprise—forward cultivation of the garden, excellent quality attained in manufacture and consequent high price, immediate productiveness, comparative proximity to port of shipment and water navigation within a few yards of tea factories, and compactness of estate, requiring only one responsible superintendent.

A large number of shares having been already applied for, an early day will be named for the allotment of the shares; and upon all applications in respect of which no allotments are made the deposits will be immediately returned.

Prospectuses may be obtained of the sharebrokers, and at the temporary offices of the Company, where every information will be given.

Application for shares must be made on the form annexed to the prospectus; but no application will be considered unless a deposit of £1 for each share applied for shall have been previously made with the bankers of the Company.

FIRE! THIEVES!! FIRE!!!

C. H. GRIFFITHS having purchased nearly all the best quality of Fire-proof Safes from the International Exhibition of 1862, including those made by Messrs. Perry, Chatwood, Rhodes, and other eminent makers, is enabled to offer them at half the original cost. The patented improvements of the latter maker render it an impossibility for fire to take any effect under any circumstances of time and place. In consequence of the increasing demand for these essential and valuable repositories, which no house of business, or, indeed, private house (where plate, books, and documents are kept) should be without, in these hazardous and dangerous times, C. H. G. has taken additional premises, 3, Pentonville-road, opposite the Angel, Islington, where he also intends to keep a variety of Second-hand Safes by those eminent large makers, Milner, Price, Morlan, &c., at half the price of new. Sketches, with prices, free by post.

Quintessence of Jamaica Ginger and Camomile.

GINGER has long been deservedly known as an excellent domestic medicine, and, combined with camomile, it is the most efficient stomachic tonic known, for while the ginger relieves the stomach from distension and flatulency, arising from impaired digestion, the camomile strengthens the coats of the stomach, and by that means gives it a healthy and invigorating tone. So highly concentrated is this preparation, it is unimpaired by age or climate, and well adapted for exportation. In Gout, Spasms, Dysentery, Cholera, or those complaints incidental to tropical climates, it is invaluable, 2s. in numerous cases a dose or two has checked and frequently cured most alarming attacks. No family should be without it. Sold in half-pints, quarter-pints, and one-eighth pints.

Agreeable Seidlitz Powder, in one bottle, protected by a case, with measure and spoon included. The advantage of this preparation is the perfect combination of the solid ingredients of the Seidlitz Spring in one compound powder.

It is very cooling and refreshing, well adapted for exportation, or travellers by land or sea.

Aromatic Tincture of Quinine.—For the prevention of Fever, Intermittent or Remittent Ague, and other effects of Malaria.

No person exposed to the influence or predisposing cause of Fevers should be without it, for if taken in small doses daily the system will become so thoroughly impregnated with its principles as to be rendered proof against all attacks of Contagion or Malaria.—Sold in pints, half-pints, and quarter-pints.

The above articles prepared only by THOS. WILKINSON (late Wilkinson, Bridge, & Co.), 270, Regent-street, London, W.

PRITCHARD'S DANDELION, CAMOMILE, RHUBARB, and GINGER PILLS.

This peculiar preparation of Dandelion acts particularly on the liver, thus avoiding the use of mercurials, and will be found invaluable to parties suffering from a sluggish state of that organ, or who have resided in India or other hot climates; whilst the well known stomachic efficacy of camomile, rhubarb, and ginger, renders these pills the most happy combination possible; and as many are at a loss for a safe remedy they will find this medicine a great convenience, which may be resorted to by all persons at any age, under any circumstances, and without the least inconvenience.

Prepared by W. Pritchard, Apothecary, 65, Charing-cross, London, in bottles, 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., and 11s. May be had of all Medicine Vendors.

DINNEFORD'S PURE FLUID MAGNE-SIA

has been, during twenty-five years, emphatically sanctioned by the Medical Profession, and universally accepted by the Public, as the Best Remedy for Acidity of the Stomach, Heartburn, Headache, Gout, and Indigestion, and as a Mild Aperient for delicate constitutions, more especially for Ladies and Children. When combined with the Acidulated Lemon Syrup, it forms an agreeable Effervescent Draught, in which its Astringent qualities are much increased. During Hot Seasons, and above all, in Hot Climates, the regular use of this simple and elegant remedy has been found highly beneficial.

It is prepared (in a state of perfect purity and of uniform strength) by DINNEFORD and Co., 172, New Bond-street, London; and sold by all respectable Chemists throughout the World.

NO MORE ERUPTIONS on the SKIN.

MOLLARD'S PERFUMED TOILET SULPHUR SOAP and CREAM, entirely free from any unpleasant smell, and are sovereign remedies against fever, local or chronic cutaneous eruptions, rheumatism, pains in the joints, &c. The Cream possesses all the properties of the renowned Haréque Waters for baths. Recommended by the most eminent physicians. Prospectus and testimonials sent on application.

Sold wholesale and retail by F. Newberry and Sons, 45, St. Paul's-churchyard; Dietrichsen and Hannay, 63, Oxford-street; G. Jozan, 49, Haymarket; T. Keating, 79, St. Paul's-churchyard; P. A. Gerard, 390, Strand; Bambridge and Pound, 60, Lenthall-lane, and at the Central Depot, 2, Rupert-street, Coventry-street, W.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—EVER USEFUL.

This fine purifying medicine has called forth the wonder and gratitude of thousands of invalids, who felt disease and debility pitilessly creeping upon them, till a course of these Pills checked their downward progress, and restored purity of blood, regularity of function, and vivacity of spirits. At the change of seasons in hot climates or insalubrious situations, Holloway's Pills will be found the best means of staying off or curing the maladies then or there prevailing. They repel impurities and accumulations, improve digestion, and fundamentally strengthen the system. No emigrant should depart for a future home without a provision of these Pills, with which they can correct the first faulty symptom before the constitution becomes permanently injured.

THE ANGLO-INDIAN COTTON COMPANY (Limited).

This Company is formed, 1st—For promoting the growth of superior qualities of Cotton, from New Orleans, Egyptian, and other acclimated seed, in Khandesh and similar eligible localities in India, where the great depth of rich, light, alluvial soil renders it peculiarly adapted for the cultivation of Cotton, and from which lines of railway now open up direct communication with Bombay. 2nd—For purchasing Cotton direct from the ryots by an arrangement which gives the security of a law of contract, guarantees the payment of the Government tax, provides the ryot with means for the cultivation of his land, and while freeing him from the extortionate exactions of the numerous class of middlemen, at the same time thoroughly secures the crop to the Company. 3rd—For erecting store-houses and factories, providing the ryots with seed of approved quality, establishing gins, churks, hydraulic presses, and the most approved machinery for cleaning Cotton expeditiously. With steam power in the interior of the country, in proximity to a railway, the expense of half-pressing and temporarily baling will be saved, and a good clean cotton forwarded without the risk of adulteration. The establishment of telegraphic communication will enable the Company to store Cotton when baled at the factory, until favourable opportunities for shipment are telegraphed from Bombay. Besides these advantages, the Company will effect a very large saving of the many intermediate charges between the grower and the English market.

There is no other country in the world that can with justice be said to offer such unquestionable advantages for the cultivation of Cotton as the western and central provinces of India. They contain most fertile land—possessing the qualities peculiarly adapted to the growth of the Cotton Plant, and afford tree, cheap, and abundant labour.

Press Companies in Bombay pay 15 per cent. per annum dividends on their Shares, besides having twice increased them by way of bonus.

The advantages of this undertaking are—

1. That from India, Cotton equaling New Orleans mid-lands, may be obtained to any amount.

2. That by purchasing direct from the Ryots, large profits may be obtained by the saving of all the intermediate charges of middlemen.

3. By cleaning, pressing, and baling in the interior of the country, the cost of temporary or half-pressing and baling is saved.

4. Profits on machinery for cleaning, baling, &c., as shown by extract in Prospectus.

5. By sending clean (instead of dirty and adulterated) Cotton to England there will be a saving of at least 30 per cent. in freight, &c., besides the additional profit on the Cotton.

This Company is the only one of a large number presented to the leading manufacturers which has met with their entire approval, and which, under any circumstances, they believe will return a large remunerative profit. The shares have been largely applied for in Manchester and the other cotton districts, where manufacturers of high position have promised their co-operation and support; the remainder of the Shares will be allotted pro rata to the applicants.

Prospectuses and forms of application for Shares may be obtained at the several Offices of the Company, and of the Managers, Bankers, and Brokers.

FIRE DEPARTMENT.

The Company now stands, in point of revenue, seventh on the list of fire offices in the United Kingdom.

Insurances granted against fire at home, in the colonies, and most foreign countries.

FOREIGN RISKS.—The Directors, having devoted great attention to this branch of insurance, are enabled to offer unusual advantages as regards rates of premium and conditions, and a discount is allowed to merchants and others effecting their own and correspondents' insurances.

LIFE DEPARTMENT.

(REDUCED RATES FOR THE EAST INDIES AND CHINA.)

The Directors have recently adopted a new system of Rates for the East Indies and China, by which the insured, instead of being subjected to a heavy extra premium during the years of his residence within the Tropics, has the option of throwing the same over the whole currency of his insurance, by paying an unchanging rate, which it will be seen is very little higher than that charged for residence in Europe.

The following are specimens of the new Rates for civilians:

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

THE Calcutta papers received by the present Mail furnish us with few materials for a Summary. This is a good sign for the public interests, though it is inconvenient for editors, when there is no story to tell. No news is good news, for it at least indicates public quietude and order.

The Viceroy and the Commander-in-chief are supposed to have reached Simla.

The frontier disturbances are subsiding fast. There is no intelligence of importance from Central India.

We are glad to find that the annual report of the Sudder Board of Revenue for the year 1861-62 is decidedly satisfactory. The sum of thirteen lakhs of rupees of "outstanding balances" was collected, as against ten lakhs in 1860-61. The chief source of increase was in the Meerut and Rohilkund divisions, on account of arrears suspended during the year of famine. The aggregate outstanding arrears have been reduced from sixty-three to fifty-six and a half lakhs. The Bareilly division remains still the heaviest in arrears, but the district officers are using every means to reduce the amount. The entire income derived from land for the year amounted to Rs. 4,01,41,43. The increase over the previous year in the number of cases instituted under Act X. of 1859 was 4,933.

The reduction of the establishment of Dragoon regiments in the Bengal Presidency has been resolved on, and the General Order appears in its place in our Official Gazette (Bengal).

We have frequently adverted to the increase in the European population of Calcutta, and the great rise of house-rent. European residents of limited income now find in the increased cost of living a very serious drawback from the advantages, real or supposed, of an Indian locality. But it is an ill wind that blows no one any good, and the increase of the European population and the rise of house-rent and servants' wages have contributed to advance the interest of hotels and lodging-houses. Many who once kept up expensive establishments of their own are now glad to sell off all their furniture, give up housekeeping and a long list of servants, and take a few apartments at an hotel, where they live very comfortably and respectably at less than half the cost of a separate and independent home. They are thus saved a great deal of trouble and expense, and the worry of a daily dispute with their consummation on the subject of "bills of charges," and they can calculate their current monthly expenditure to a rupee. All this, though it may affect the repute or character of Calcutta society with respect to its once unbounded hospitality to friends and strangers, and contribute to lessen the number of evening parties, and increase the general dulness, will make the fortunes of hotel-keepers. So great, for instance, has been the success of the Great Eastern Hotel Company of Calcutta, a limited liability company (founded on David Wilson's large and well-known Auckland Hotel), that the shares of £25 each have changed hands at £47, and there appears to be every reason for supposing that they will soon be quoted at even double their original cost.

The Commander-in-Chief of the Bombay army notifies that from the 1st of January, 1863, mess allowance at the rate of Rs. 20 per company will be granted to all regiments of British Infantry in India when divided into wings, each wing to keep up a separate mess. The Government of India have ruled that when the services of an interpreter are absolutely necessary with a regiment, and no qualified interpreter is available, an officer who has only passed the staff test may be appointed to act on half the staff salary appertaining to the situation.

Sir Charles Trevelyan still keeps his own secrets to the astonishment of everybody familiar with his character for frank communicativeness. It is now supposed that several millions of the cash balances will be appropriated by him to the paying off debentures shortly falling due. The native community, speculating in Government paper, have run up the Four per Centa. to par.

The Commander-in-Chief is doing his best to encourage the cultivation of soldiers' gardens. Annual prizes are to be awarded to soldiers for the best flowers and vegetables. The occasion of the distribution of prizes is to be regarded as a fete for the regiment.

In the absence of events of more importance, there has been a pretty little quarrel between the two leading papers of Calcutta, the Englishman and the Bengal Hurkaru, on the subject of the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal's selection of a trader or tradesman's clerk for a seat in Council. A Mr. Jennings has the honour to be the subject of this angry discussion. Two vacancies in the Bengal Council were created by the retirement of Messrs. Bullen and Moran. One of the seats fell to Mr. Claude Brown, of the firm of Jardine, Skinner, and Co., to whose appointment no one offers an objection. But the Bengal Hurkaru condemns the selection of Mr. Jennings, on the ground that Mr. Jennings is only the managing clerk in Osler and Co.'s glass and china shop. The Hurkaru is, thereupon, accused by the Englishman of a snobbish contempt for trade; but the point of this accusa-

MAILS TO INDIA.

Mails to India and China, via Marseilles, are despatched from London as follows, viz.:—Those for Bombay packets, on the evening of the 3rd and 13th of each month; and those for Calcutta packets (including mails for Ceylon, Madras, and China), on the evenings of the 10th and 26th of each month. When any of these dates falls on a Sunday, the mails are made up on the following evening.

Letters and Newspapers can be forwarded to any part of India, via Bombay and Marseilles, and in most cases will reach their destination some days sooner than if despatched by the following Calcutta mail. The Bombay mails via Southampton, however, are no longer available for the transmission of Letters or Newspapers to the Madras Presidency.

Mails for the Mediterranean and all parts of India and China, except the Bombay Presidency, are despatched via Southampton on the mornings of the 4th and 20th, or, when either of these dates falls on Sunday, upon the previous evening.

Mails for the Mediterranean, the Presidency of Bombay, and Upper or North-West Provinces of Bengal and China, are despatched via Southampton, on the 12th and 27th of the month, except when these dates fall on Sunday, in which case they are forwarded on the previous evening.

tion is blunted by an extremely well put explanation on the part of the Hurkaru, which repudiates indignantly anything like a want of respect for men who, by honesty, and industry, and talent, have raised themselves from obscurity, and have won the praise of having been the architects of their own fortune. The entire question is, whether Mr. Jennings has won or is now holding such a position as justifies his claim to be regarded as a representative man—as entitled to a preference to the distinction conferred on him by the Lieut.-governor over all other traders in Calcutta. The Englishman contends that Mr. Jennings is fairly entitled to that distinction. The Hurkaru contends that he is not. The former paper states that Mr. Jennings was for three years master of the Trade Association of Calcutta. The Hurkaru accuses Mr. Cecil Beadon of a "weak and womanish love of popularity," which led him into the "ludicrous blunder" of attempting to please the tradespeople of Calcutta by nominating to a seat in Council "a troublesome member" of that "intelligent and influential body." "Acting upon this ridiculous misconception," says the Hurkaru, "Mr. Beadon invited this individual to become a member of the Legislative Council of Bengal, and to-morrow's Gazette will announce to the world that an ill-educated clerk in a china shop is one of the councillors of the land, charged with framing laws for thirty-five millions of Bengalees, of whose customs, language, and peculiarities he knows very much less than does a Cheap-side shopman of the true history of Hungary and Poland." Mr. Beadon is a very acute and sagacious man—a more acute and sagacious man is, perhaps, not to be met with in all India. We shall be surprised, indeed, if he has really fallen, as the Hurkaru states, into a ridiculous blunder on this occasion. We do not, however, maintain that Mr. Beadon is infallible. No man, says the Latin proverb, is wise at all hours, and we are all made familiar with the "Fears of the brave and follies of the wise."

There is said to be a good deal of sickness amongst the native population, especially in the form of cholera.

Lord Elgin has offered Mr. Peterson, the barrister, the post of Advocate-General, about to be vacated by Mr. T. Cowie, who intends to return to England. Mr. Peterson has declined the honour, having resolved to retire from his profession, and the post has been conferred on Mr. Graham, Q.C.

On the 11th of April the Bengal Council were to meet again, to discuss the provisions of the Municipal Bill.

The Government of India intends to confer on Jummoo Maharajah a piece of land called the Talook Byenat, which runs on his territory, in lieu of the five lakhs of rupees lent by him to the British Government on their day of trial in 1857.

The Indian Government has at last given up the manufacture of salt, resigning the trade to individual speculators.

We learn from the Bombay Gazette of the 31st of March that the first train has passed over the Bore Ghat incline of the G. I. P. Railway.

There have been public meetings at Madras, at which addresses were drawn up to be presented to her Majesty the Queen of England and the Prince and Princess of Wales, on the late happy Royal marriage. Sir William and Lady Denison issued cards for a grand ball on the same occasion.

The Military Male Orphan Asylum is to be removed from Madras, and annexed to the Ootacamund Lawrence Asylum.

The Secretary of State for War has fixed the following rates of passage money for officers of the British army, returning to England, under circumstances rendering the Imperial Government liable to the expense of their conveyance. When returning by steamer, from Bombay, £90; from Madras, £94; from Calcutta, £98. When returning by sailing vessel, from Bombay, Madras, or Calcutta, £87.

We have before us the fifteenth report of the directors of the Bombay Baroda and Central Indian Railway, dated 22nd May, 1863. From this report we gather that the mileage of line open and producing traffic during the half-year ending the 31st December last was as follows:—From 1st July to 2nd September, Bulsar to Dolia, 132½ miles; from 3rd September to 31st December, Bulsar to Mehmoodabad, 167½ miles. On the 20th January last the line was opened to Ahmedabad (its present Northern Terminus), a further distance of 17½ miles, thus increasing the total length of railway open for traffic to 185½ miles. The net amount received from the working of the line to the 30th June, 1862, was £28,648. 18s. 4d. (calculated at 1s. 10d. to the rupee), being 41.77 per cent. of the gross receipts, and this sum has been paid over to the Government in India, in reduction of the guaranteed interest.

BENGAL.

RUNDELL v. THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA.

A very important case came before the High Court on the 1st inst., and one that concerns all European residents in this country. This was the cause set down as "Rundell v. the Secretary of State for India," but at its very opening the Advocate-general on behalf of the defendant objected to the jurisdiction of the Court in suits, the cause of action in which arose beyond the limits of the city of Calcutta. The point thus raised was argued, pro and con, on the following day before Sir Mordaunt Wells. The action arose out of an alleged breach of contract by the defendant through his subordinate, or agent, at Darjeeling. The plaintiff, it appeared, had purchased from Government a certain tract of waste land in that district, at a price fixed by Government under the rules promulgated by Lord Canning in conformity with a minute written by Lord Stanley, when her Majesty's Secretary of State for India. His lordship's successor, however, the present Secretary of State, as is too well known, set aside those rules and introduced others, which he directed should have retrospective effect. But in the meantime the plaintiff had taken possession of his grant and spent a considerable sum of money in converting the wilderness into a smiling garden. But possession is, after all, only nine points in the ten, and the tenth was fatal to the plaintiff. The Government, without even going through the ceremony of giving him fair warning, disposed of his land by auction to the highest bidder, and thus summarily set at naught the Resolutions of the late Viceroy in Council. The plaintiff, however, was not of a temper to submit without a struggle to an act that savoured so strongly of despotic caprice, and accordingly appealed to the High Court of Calcutta to redress his wrongs. Such are the simple facts; but the pleadings turned entirely upon a point of law. The Advocate-general in support of his objection to the suit being entertained in this court, argued that the civil jurisdiction of the court was confined by its Charter to the limits of the city of Calcutta. The only original jurisdictions of the late Supreme Court which were continued in the High Court, related to Admiralty and Criminal cases. Certain sections of Reg. III. of 1793 empowered the Mofussil Courts to hear and determine suits against the Government, and therefore the plaintiff must seek his remedy in the Court of the District where the alleged wrong was committed and endured. On the other side, Mr. Bell, the plaintiff's counsel, referred to the Charter of the High Court and pointed out that the Mofussil jurisdiction clauses in Reg. III. of 1793 have been formally repealed, and that consequently no action could lie in a Mofussil Court against the Government. He likewise insisted that by the latter clauses of the Charter the High Court was not deprived of all the original civil jurisdictions of the late Supreme Court, but only of such as are specially mentioned and defined in the Charter. There being no special clause by which its jurisdiction in suits like the present one is barred, the plaintiff had clearly a right to be heard in that court. Mr. Bell then threw out as a suggestion that the Mofussil jurisdiction clauses in the old regulations had been accidentally and erroneously expunged from the Indian Statute Book, though, fortunately for his client, the High Court Charter did not close the door upon him in the Presidency Court.

The question at issue is of the greatest moment to the public. If neither the High Court nor the Mofussil Court has the power to entertain suits against the Government, suitors will have to sue in the Courts of Westminster, which would be tantamount to refusal of justice to men of small means, while it would saddle the wealthy with untold expenses. We shall, therefore, look with much anxiety for the judgment of the Court.—Bengal Hurkaru, April 6.

THE BENGAL COUNCIL.

Two vacancies in the Bengal Council having been created by the departure for Europe of Mr. J. N. Bullen and Mr. W. Moran, the somewhat invidious duty of appointing successors to those gentlemen now devolves upon the Lieut.-Governor. It is very currently stated, indeed, that his honour had already made his choice, and that Mr. C. H. Brown has been offered a seat in his Council. Nothing is more probable, nothing more reasonable, than such a selection. But rumour goes yet further, and mentions as his colleague the name of a very worthy individual who will himself be rather amused at the idea of having such greatness thrust upon him. The report is so utterly ridiculous that we shall refrain from naming the very civil and obliging tradesman with whom the idle talk of the town has taken such an unbecoming liberty. Although a member of the Trades Association, he is not, we believe, engaged in any business on his own account, but is simply the paid clerk or manager of a manufacturing firm at Birmingham. It is obvious that however respectable such a person may be, he is not likely to possess any very peculiar qualifications for taking an active part in the government of thirty millions of human beings, with whose language he is as imperfectly acquainted as with his own, and of whose habits, customs, and requirements he knows nothing whatever. Assuming, moreover, that the time has arrived for associating the Trades Association with the Legislative Council of the Presidency, it is clear that the first offer of the vacant seat would be made ex officio to the Master for the current year. Then, in the event of any cause or just impediment interfering with that gentleman's acceptance of the proffered compliment, it may be taken for granted that his Honour would next turn his attention to some one of the well-educated, experienced, and moneyed men who are to be found among the members of the association, whose names will suggest themselves to every one, though we should scarcely be justified in dragging them before the public. Had rumour asserted that the very active and pushing individual in question was about to be appointed vice-chairman of the Municipal Corporation we should not have offered the slightest objection, nor do we know that a better choice could be made for the discharge of difficult and ungracious duties. But we protest against such an insult being offered to the other members of the Council—unless the object is to bring that Council into disrepute—to the native and European inhabitants of the Presidency, and to the Trades' Association itself, as the selection for a seat in Council of the managing clerk in a glass and china warehouse. Mr. Beadon may be a very good and wise magician, but we cannot accept even at his hands such a new lamp as this in exchange for our old one. He has mixed too much honey and too little of the soporific drug in the sop he has cast to the trading community, and has, consequently, created a feeling of disgust where he sought to stay both bark and bite. But, in truth, it is easy to trace in this appointment the Italian statecraft of his new Secretary. Fortunately, the idea was too clever by half, and men will henceforth look with most suspicion upon the Government when seemingly in the act of conferring a boon. But, after all, the rumour must be untrue, or the Council will be discredited for the next two years.—Bengal Hurkaru, April 6.

Two members of Council have gone home; both able and trustworthy men; their places must be filled up; and as the Council was not nominated by the present Lieut.-Governor, he may think it necessary to bring new blood into it by introducing men possessing practical good sense and unobtrusive habits—such as Mr. Jennings, the gentleman reported to have been nominated, has proved himself. The records of the Trades' Association, the Municipal Inquiry Commission, and the Committee on the Municipal Bill, will bear out his capacity for the transaction of public business. We cannot believe that the two European non-official gentlemen now in the Council will object to the gentleman named becoming their colleague. They are themselves men of the people, men who, to their honour and credit be it spoken, have raised themselves to their present position by their industry and perseverance. One, at least, is, as regards ourselves, his own biographer; and of the other, his advance in life has been too recent not to be familiar to the public. There are merchant princes in London and elsewhere who began life behind a shopkeeper's counter. There are manufacturing princes who began life as journeymen spinners; there are shipowning princes who began life as shipwrights; and we could name a dozen men now in Parliament who began life in the humblest occupations, and some who went there as genuine unadulterated tradesmen in their own persons. We could name men in Calcutta whose beginnings were humble enough, but are now among the "moneyed men" respected of the Hurkaru, and hold up their heads high enough, having gone far above the respectability of keeping a gig. There are also in Calcutta men whose fathers, from dusting counters and running errands, have become by lucky hits, made in sugar, indigo, and even guano, men of substance and influence, and have sent their sons into the ranks of the civil service, of the army, and commerce. Why, then, we would ask, should men of such antecedents swell and roar with indignation because a tradesman who has always borne a high character and evinces no small measure of ability has been asked to take a seat in the Council? Oh, but he is a tradesman! Yes, a tradesman: one of that class who have founded some of the noblest families in Europe. Ask Burke how many of our peerages have been founded by men who were proud to be considered traders. What was the origin of the Barings, the Rothschilds, of Bates, of Peabody, of Peel, of Stephenson, Cubitt, and a host of other worthies of the present century? How much above tradesmen and shopkeepers, or how much even below that social line of demarcation, were they when they commenced life?—Englishman.

The Anglo-Indian Press is, in many respects, what the Americans would call "a very remarkable institution." The other day, in the discharge of our ordinary editorial duties, we offered some remarks on Mr. Beadon's absurd selection of a colleague in his Council. Commenting on this, the Phoenix coolly assumes that the article in question was "from outside and not written by the editor himself." Are we to infer, then, that such is the custom of the Calcutta Press, or only of our slightly impertinent contemporary? Be this as it may, we wish to state once for all that so long as the present editor is answerable for the conduct of the Hurkaru, no articles whatever will be admitted "from outside." He, and he only, will be responsible for whatever may appear in these columns, whether in praise or dispraise of men or measures. No allusion whatever was intended to the gentleman named by the Phoenix, nor would such an idea have ever presented itself to any but a narrow and illiberal mind.—Hurkaru.

THE LATE SIR JAMES OUTRAM AND HIS MINUTE ON THE ARMY AMALGAMATION.

The tidings of the death of Sir James Outram have fallen upon the Indian public with all the force of a great calamity. All feel that we have lost—that India has lost—the truest of friends, the favourite hero of whom we loved to boast, and whom we fondly hoped, even against hope, to hail amongst us yet once again before he finally closed his earthly career; and it is known that, even to the last, he himself tenaciously clung in spirit to the land of his early adoption, and yearned to don his harness and to be "up and doing" yet once again before he died. But Heaven has ordained otherwise. The last and greatest of the old company's generals has not long survived the rule beneath whose fostering shade he was reared, and under which he lived to reap so rich a harvest of well-merited honours.

His voice, however, still speaks from the tomb. Wisdom is still to be gleaned from the Minute to the preparation of which he devoted the final efforts of his public life, and which may well be held sacred as his last bequest to his country. In that Minute he clearly forewarned the Home Government of the evil consequences he foresaw, and many of which have already come to pass with such calamitous results to hundreds of meritorious old officers, whose grievances, long borne with almost unexampled patience, have at length forced themselves on the notice of the British Parliament. The members of both Houses would do well to peruse, even at this late day, the remarkable document to which we refer. His vehement utterances on behalf of the army he loved so well failed to avert the blow which doomed it to extinction, but some of the arguments he used are still as applicable as they then were to the cases in point. We therefore venture on a quotation:—

"I have stated that the proposed amalgamation would inflict grievous and unmerited injuries on the six thousand gentlemen who now officer the local army, and a little consideration will prove that I am right. These men entered the service on the implied understanding that they would succeed in order of seniority to regimental 'off-reckonings,' in periods ranging, according to individual good or ill-luck, from thirty to forty-five years of service. Will faith be kept with them in this respect? Can faith be kept with them in this respect under the proposed amalgamation plan? They entered the service on an implied guarantee that they should never be superseded in regimental or line promotion, either by the introduction of the purchase system or by irregular promotion based on the principle of selection. Can faith possibly be kept with them in this respect under the proposed amalgamation plan? All in the service have been allowed, authoritatively, to make arrangements for purchasing out their seniors, and these arrangements, and the retiring funds which have been established in consequence, though not actually sanctioned by the law, cannot justly be interfered with. Relying on this understanding, they have regularly subscribed the funds, the object of which is to accelerate promotion by providing bonuses out of the common purse to officers willing to retire before they have earned their off-reckonings. And they have done so in the confident hope that, when ill-health or other considerations should lead to their own retirement, they would, as a matter of course, receive bonuses equal in amount to those paid to their predecessors. Will the regulations and whole machinery of the line be altered to meet the equitable claims of these men? or will their funds be broken up, and all the prospective advantage for which they have montally made pecuniary sacrifices, be absolutely denied them? If in none of these respects faith can be kept with them, who shall say that they will not be grievously wronged? I am told that where the interests of a mighty empire are at stake individuals must suffer for the general weal. I reply that the proposed change, the adoption of which would occasion such grievous individual wrong, far from being in the interests of the Indian empire, is totally opposed to them. And the object of my minute is earnestly to implore that this assertion be calmly and dispassionately argued before some competent tribunal ere a charge is made, which, I feel assured, will be as injurious to the State as it cannot but be to individuals."

Regimental officers are not the only parties who feel themselves aggrieved. Even many officers of the staff corps consider themselves victims. Having entered it in the expectation of being employed in some suitable way not a few of them have been for the last two years moving about the country doing duty, first with one regiment and then with another, until they have begun to lose all hope of attaining the goal of their modest ambition—and perhaps all the while, too, on half batta! This explains why so few line officers have mustered courage to join the staff corps. Nor must we forget the wrong so long endured in indignant silence by the Indian artillery, now become royal, and as such clearly entitled to all the benefits in the way of promotion appertaining to the Royal system. Yet we find their lists of effective regimental colonels still encumbered with sundry major-generals, who, had common justice been done, would long since have been removed to a separate list, their places in the regiment being filled up by the promotion of juniors. All this shows a deplorable absence of honesty in high places which, in the dealings of a great Government with its officers, cannot be too strongly commented upon. Lord Ellenborough did well to remind his fellow peers of the Duke of Wellington's saying that "in dealing with soldiers you must be not only just, but make them understand that you are just."—Friend of India.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE LITTLE WAR-DRAMA.—The news from Cherrapoonjee is that the stockades being found unable to withstand the impressive eloquence of our Mountain Train Battery have been condemned by the rebels themselves as untenable; and since these strongholds have belied their character, the Jyntias frankly acknowledge that they have no other card to play. The little war-drama has reached the last scene in which hollow-eyed men and shrivelled women leave the jungles to throw themselves on Government clemency. But nothing, apparently, is being done, nor have we the shadow of a hint that anything is to be done with a view to the re-organisation of the internal administration of these hills. The district has, it is true, been favoured with a new body of police, called the Cossya battalion; but this force, for aught we know to the contrary, is intended to be an additional burden on the starved and plundered peasantry. Already, we are informed, the tax-gatherers are out among the people, this time demanding arrears of revenue. The demand may be just from a legal point of view, for it may be argued that to exempt rebels from the payment of their revenue, because they have been engaged in rebellion, is tantamount to rewarding them from their misdeeds; but if all the circumstances of the present case be taken into account, considerations of equity ought, as it seems to us, to have been suffered to hold the legal claim in abeyance. We do not say to the authorities, "Forego your claim to the revenue due for the last two years," although, considering the extortion to which the poor people submitted for years previously, there would really have been nothing very magnanimous in such an abandonment of dues. But we surely are justified in putting the case to them thus:—You know how these wretches have, for the last two years, been skulking about in the jungles—homeless, fieldless, comfortless, and foodless. If they have acted wrongly, as they certainly have unwisely, they have suffered for their folly. They come back to you penitent, but starving. If, when they had their huts, their fields, and a morsel of wholesome food for themselves and their children, they were unable to pay the extortionate demands of your tax collectors, it is not likely that they can pay up arrears of rent and tax, when hungry and utterly destitute. To greet these unhappy people on their return from the jungles, to which our misgovernment drove them, with a bill for rent and taxes due for two years, is not conciliatory, but tyrannical. It looks as though the authorities desired to avenge themselves on the unlucky Jyntias for the anxiety and trouble they had cost them. Why, then, does not the Government look at the matter from a fair, liberal, right-spirited point of view? The people have no innate hostility towards British rule, as such. They revolted simply because the Government left them in the hands of an extortionate police and rapacious taxgatherers. They bore the misrule as long as they were able to do so, and when flesh and blood could bear it no longer, despair urged them into rebellion. Now that they have returned to their allegiance, the surest means of keeping them peaceful would be, not to punish them relentlessly for their former misdeeds, but to make them contented; and this, we submit, can only be accomplished by completely re-organising the administration, as in the case of the Sonthals.—Hurkaru, April 8.

THE TELEGRAPH line between Meerut and Mussooree was opened on the 1st April, and has since been successfully worked. Messages occupy, on an average, one hour in transmission.

STANDING COUNCIL.—It is rumoured that Mr. H. Eglinton will be appointed to officiate as Standing Council, vice Mr. Joseph Graham, appointed to officiate as Advocate General.

SICKNESS AT LAHORE.—An unusual amount of sickness prevails at present among the European residents of Lahore. It is chiefly confined to children, numbers of whom are suffering from bronchitis and whooping-cough. The weather continues unusually fine for the season of the year—the nights and mornings being still cold, and the temperature in the daytime all that can be desired.

TRIAL FOR LIBEL.—The surface of the stagnant pool of society at Rangoon has been rippled by a libel case. On the 6th March a letter, signed "A Passenger," appeared in the Rangoon Gazette, charging Captain Chester, of the ship Lochnagar, with treating his deck passengers more "like dogs than human beings," with "disgracing by his acts a vessel which carries the British flag," and with being "inhuman." As soon as he became cognisant of this libellous attack on his character, Captain Chester consulted Mr. Donald Macleod, the Government pleader, as to what course he should pursue to clear himself of these serious imputations. Acting upon Mr. Macleod's advice, and accompanied by his clerk, the captain proceeded to the office of the Gazette and demanded the name of his traducer. This the manager very properly refused to give up until he had obtained his correspondent's permission to do so. In the interval Mr. Macleod wrote a peremptory note to the manager, threatening legal proceedings unless the author's name were communicated that same evening. This note was received at 5-30 p.m., and forwarded to the writer of the letter, who seems to have lost no time in accepting the responsibility of his own acts. Through some unaccountable carelessness, however, neither did the manager communicate with Mr. Macleod that same day, nor did his attorney call at the office of the latter until 4 p.m. of the following day, by which time expenses had been incurred to the amount of Rs. 410. The repayment of this sum, and an ample apology for publishing the culminating letter, were then very naturally demanded by Mr. Macleod on behalf of his client, but were refused by the manager of the Gazette, apparently under the utterly erroneous impression that, after giving up the name of his correspondent, he had nothing more to do with the matter. Were this the law the editorial responsibility would be reduced within dangerously narrow limits, and every penniless ruffian would be free to blacken the reputation of any man against whom he happened to entertain a grudge. The manager's inexplicable conduct left Captain Chester no alternative but to lay an action for damages against the proprietors of the paper in which the libel appeared. And as no plea of justification was set up, the Judge could not do otherwise than give judgment in favour of the plaintiff, though in consideration of there being no premeditated malice on the part of the manager, he reduced the damages from Rs. 5,000, the amount claimed, to Rs. 500 and costs. What other result could have been anticipated, we are at a loss to understand, but the manager himself and at least three anonymous correspondents appear to think that gross injustice has been done, and the liberty of the press—"the palladium of all the civil, political, and religious rights of all Englishmen"—seriously imperilled. Now, it is because we entirely agree with "Junius" in regarding the liberty of the press as indispensable to the liberty of the subject, that we approve of the conduct of the judge in punishing a wicked and abominable libel. Should the press ever become the channel for the diffusion of personal venom, no man's character will be safe, and a cowardly "rowdism" will become the order of the day. To what a depth of degradation it is possible for the press to sink, we may judge by the example of America; but rather than that a similar disgrace should ever alight upon English journalism, we would cheerfully submit to the establishment of a censorship. Far better to express no ideas at all than to express those of a reckless and irresponsible "rowdy."—Hurkaru.

MAJOR PITCHER is likely to be the commandant of the Calcutta volunteer rifle corps, in the place of Major Herbert, who has proceeded to Europe on leave of absence.

PRESENTATION OF THE VICTORIA CROSS TO SOME MEN OF THE QUEEN'S BAYS.—BENARES, March 31.—The whole of the troops in this station were assembled this morning on the grand parade ground, to witness the presentation of the Victoria Cross, to the undermentioned men of the Queen's Bays. Trumpeter Thomas Monaghan, orderly trumpeter to Lieutenant Colonel W. H. Seymour, C.B., at the time (8th October, 1858) he was attacked by the mutineers [near Sundeela, and Private Charles Anderson, his mounted orderly. The troops were drawn up so as to form three sides of a square, facing inwards. The Queen's Bays, in close column of squadrons, formed the base, B 2 Royal Horse Brigade wheeling up formed the right flank, 1—20th Regiment and 30th Punjab Infantry, in contiguous close columns formed the left flank. On the arrival of the Major General Commanding the division, (Major General George Campbell) and his Staff, on the parade ground, the two men above mentioned were brought forward, when the following letter (an extract from the London Gazette, dated 11th November, 1862) was read:—"The Queen has been graciously pleased to signify her intention to confer the decoration of the Victoria Cross on Trumpeter Thomas Monaghan and Private Charles Anderson, 2nd Dragoon Guards, whose claims to the same have been submitted for her Majesty's approval, on account of acts of bravery performed by them during the mutiny; in saving the life of Lieutenant-Colonel Seymour, C.B., Commanding the Regiment, in an attack made on him on the 8th October, 1858, by mutinous sepoys, in a dense jungle of sugar-cane, from which an attempt was made to dislodge them. They suddenly opened fire on Lieutenant-Colonel Seymour and his party at a few yards distance, and immediately afterwards rushed in upon them with drawn swords. Lieutenant-Colonel Seymour, after emptying every barrel of his revolver, with deadly effect on the mutineers, was cut down by two sword cuts, when the two men above recommended rushed to his rescue, and the trumpeter shooting a man with his pistol in the act of cutting at him, and both trumpeter and dragoon driving at the enemy with their swords, enabled him to arise and assist in defending himself again, when the whole of the enemy were despatched. The occurrence took place soon after the action fought near Sundeela, Oude, on the 8th October, 1858." Major General Campbell then made a few complimentary remarks relative to the good conduct, discipline, and high state of efficiency of the Queen's Bays, which closed the presentation ceremony, and the troops after marching past in excellent style returned to their barracks.

LANCASHIRE FUND SUBSCRIPTIONS IN INDIA.—First among the dependencies, India has been foremost in the amount and readiness with which she has tendered her aid. It is, perhaps, not too much to say that the universality of the subscriptions, and the readiness of all classes to contribute, are a prouder monument of English power than the presence of many armies, and a surer sign of the supremacy of English influence than the suppression of many mutinies, or the pacification of many provinces. Chiefs and subjects, independent princes, and rajahs who are more directly under our own rule, have alike come forward to return the good deeds and the good will England showed for their countrymen in the time of famine. So universal a subscription has never been known over so vast a country, among so many different peoples. High and low, rich and poor, have done what they could, ungrudgingly, unstintedly. The gift has been the more precious that it was given quickly and successfully. Where all have exerted themselves it would be wrong to select individuals for praise. But it is a proud thing for Englishmen to feel that their thanks and that of their countrymen are due to men so widely differing as the tribes of Bengal, the septa of the Suleimans, and the clans of Central India. Rajpoot, Pathan, Wuzerees, Bengali, Mahratta, Mussulman, have all earned our gratitude by the response they have made to the call for help from men who own allegiance to the same sovereign. And if it be a proud thing for an Englishman to feel that thus has a distinct and loving band of fellow subjects been established between himself and the men of India, it is even a prouder thing for the natives to have deserved his thanks—to have helped England in her need, and to have so gloriously and so generously taken the first step in a national Indian life. The subscription which binds Englishmen to natives can surely not fail to bind natives to each other. And if it accomplish only partially these two objects, it is worth more than a century of victories and successful warfare.—Calcutta paper.

SHAMEFUL CONDUCT AT A DAX BUNGALOW.—LUCKNOW, April 1.—“I have to record an event of so heinous a nature as to require the public to be on the qui vive against the audacity of a class of ruffians addicted to the pastime of disturbing the equanimity of the more peaceable of her Majesty's subjects. The scene of their adventure was the Government staging bungalow, where any party, from the high-born and well-bred gentleman to the vulgar man of low degree, can claim shelter by the payment of the usual fee. It so happened that some respectable travellers were in occupation of the bungalow, when a couple of Europeans, one a well-known resident of Oude, the other a man of substance, happening also to be putting up there, after indulging in free potations of eau de vie, took the notion of behaving in a manner that would shock the delicate nerves of decent people to describe, to the great alarm and discomfort of some lady travellers. Upon a representation being made the postmaster took prompt measures in securing the aid of the police, but so far from a ready submission, those worthy disciples of Bacchus showed fight, were peremptorily introduced to the presence of the deputy commissioner, whose dealing with the offenders was summary, but not half so effectual as would have been a direct order for their incarceration. They were sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 500 each. The man of substance pays his quota and gets off scot-free, the other, a man of straw, of course, is doomed to brood over his misfortunes within the cheerless walls of a prison. This is not equal justice.”

CACHAR.—The planters of Cachar are complaining sadly of the want of rain. The young tea plants have succumbed in thousands to the scorching heat of the sun, and fires have been of frequent occurrence. But the rain has begun to come down, and matters will now mend. We have had three thunder-storms, and the rain has revived the fields and allayed sickness. The people of Sylhet, like ourselves in Dacca, have had their daily fires, which, by the way, ought to have kept both them and us cool, on the homeopathic principle of similia similibus curantur.

AN OLD MUTINEER AND MURDERER.—Some time since a man named Ahmed Ali was apprehended at Lucknow at the instigation of Mr. Lightle, who charged him with being one of three who murdered certain members of that gentleman's family during the mutiny. This man was, however, released by the city magistrate, on the ground that his identity was not clearly established. The attention of the Government was directed to the circumstance, and the man was re-arrested, but admitted to bail pending a search being made for his accomplices. We now learn that a second man named Bundoo Beg has been captured, and after being subjected to a close examination by the deputy-commissioner of Lucknow, has been fully committed with Ahmed Ali for trial at the Sessions on a charge of murder.

SALE OF WASTE LANDS IN INDIA.—Our readers will remember how severely Sir Charles Wood has been reflected upon for refusing to allow the waste lands of the country to be given away at five shillings an acre to all who might apply for them. Let them now note the result of the first public sale of these lands at the Neilgherries, as recorded by the Excelsior, an excellent little journal lately established at Ootacamund:—“The first sale of waste lands under the new rules took place on Monday last. We understand that the price realised by Government on some forty-five acres was Rs. 1,310, which sum, with the assessment on the description sold (sholah or forest) at Rs. 2 per acre, and the privilege of redeeming this tax at twenty-five years' purchase, gives a total of Rs. 80 per acre. But this price is, we are led to believe, exceedingly moderate, when it is borne in mind that, within an easy distance of Ootacamund, say seven or eight miles, the fuel alone, at the moderate average of twelve annas per load, would bring back the entire purchase-money. The cost of a bandy load of firewood in Ooty is from Rs. 2½ to 3. The late collector gave it as his opinion that every acre of forest land in the neighbourhood was worth from Rs. 700 to 800 for fuel and timber. The only fact that would defeat this calculation is the absence of a good road. The purchaser of the present lot is a Mr. Vincent, of Calcutta, who has already embarked in coffee planting, but now intends trying his hand at cinchona and tea. He has, we learn, secured 1,000 cinchona plants from the Government gardens.” We learn privately that the price fetched for the last waste lands sold in Ceylon, suitable for coffee, was close upon £8 per acre.—Times of India, April 13.

LOCUSTS AND SILKWORMS.—A PROBLEM IN ENTOMOLOGY.—Six silkworms, when full grown, weigh an ounce. They are calculated to consume each three ounces of food during their brief existence, or three times their weight. The locust is a more voracious insect, but assuming that it consumes the same quantity of food as the worm, given three hundred maunds of eggs as a fair estimate of the masses collected in only two districts of the Punjab, and, knowing that one million and a-half of these weigh a maund, what is the weight of green food the grubs of these 300 maunds would consume when they come to maturity? The answer will be something like 6,278 tons, equal to the food of 11,718 horned cattle for a whole month at twenty seers a-day. That amount of food has been saved to the country by the destruction of the above quantity of locusts' eggs. We shall, probably, be able to give some further estimates soon, showing that not 6,000, but 60,000 tons of green food have been saved by the measures taken in various parts of the Punjab.

CIVILIAN BARRISTERS.—Mr. George Campbell sat on the Crown side of her Majesty's High Court of Judicature on the 13th March, and disposed of two criminal cases, being the first instance in which a member of the Bengal Civil Service has been so employed in a court of this nature, an honour which he doubtless enjoys in consequence of being a barrister-at-law, and as such on a footing with the Chief Justice, Sir B. Peacock, and Justices Wells, Morgan, and Levinge, which the other judges of the court are not. We do not know whether the bar addressed Mr. Justice Campbell as:—“My Lud! May it please your Ludship,” but we see no reason to the contrary. There are four other civilian barristers in the Bengal Presidency, namely, the new Lieutenant-governor of the North-West Provinces, the Secretary of the Government of India in the Home Department, the Judicial Commissioner of the Punjab, and the Judge of Behar (Mr. Beaufort). Mr. Campbell's position is peculiar in another respect. Although “a gentleman of the long robe,” we doubt if he has held a brief in his life, and hence he has vaulted to the “Queen's Bench” without ever having practised at the bar, much less worn a silk gown, been a Q.C., or had a warrant of precedence, circumstances unprecedented since the time of his Eminence Cardinal Wolsey, his Grace the Archbishop of York (tempus 1555), and a few other clerks in holy orders.

A MURDER AT DELHI.—We are sorry to learn that a most diabolical murder has been perpetrated in our city. We can scarcely believe the story, but it is said that the father of a child has murdered the little innocent for the sake of its ornaments. We have not been favoured with all the particulars; in fact, these things are always kept secret from the press, and we must, therefore, tell the tale as it was told to us, as follows:—“The child was missed, and a search made for it, but without any result; at length the father of the child gave information that the body was in a certain well, situated in some out of the way place. The well was searched and the child found, but without its ornaments. An inquiry was instituted, and the suspicion falling on the father, he was taken into custody. A woman with whom he lived gave evidence to the effect that he had sold the ornaments and given her the proceeds of the sale. Of course, the father denies his guilt, and as there is really no trustworthy evidence against him, he will probably get off. The police are busy endeavouring to trace the perpetrator of the murder, and something may yet be brought to light concerning it.” We have heard also that the body of a new-born female child was found concealed in a “ghurra” (earthen pot) near a police-station, a few days ago. The noise of the little founding was heard proceeding from the “ghurra,” and some of the police took the trouble to examine it, when the occupant set up a loud roar, and was soon extricated. It is now in the possession of one of the constables, who has promised to take care of it.—Delhi Gazette.

SIR CHARLES TREVELYAN.—Previous to leaving England for this country Sir Charles Trevelyan is understood to have made himself thoroughly master of the system that prevails in the Home Treasury for framing the annual budgets. Several of the rules, practices, and formulæ there in force, have now for the first time been introduced into India, and a printed circular embodying the spirit of the English system has been circulated among the heads of departments for their information and guidance. It was to Mr. Anderson, first assistant in H.M.'s Treasury, that Sir Charles was chiefly indebted for his initiation into the mysteries of an English budget.

POST-OFFICE ROBBERIES IN INDIA.—A correspondent sends us the following “warning to the public.”—There has been a great commotion in a large station in the Central Provinces. The baboo of the post-office has been detected detaining letters for the sake of the stamps, which he tore off. He absconded somewhere about the 10th instant, but has been apprehended, and the proof being complete he will, it is hoped, be sentenced to transportation for life, “pour encourager les autres.” Numbers of letters were found in his house addressed to people in England, all with the stamps off. Hundreds are supposed to have been destroyed. Many persons have lost drafts, jewellery, &c., and everybody misses letters. We have heard of another case where the native postmaster destroyed two letters of complaint (one registered) against himself. We understand that several cases of fraud in the post-office here have recently been brought to light, and the offenders prosecuted in the Cantonment Magistrate's Court, and sentenced to various amounts of punishment. The cases were appealed to the Sessions Judge, and the decision of the court below confirmed. We have since heard that a special appeal will be preferred on some, or all, to the Sudder.—Delhi Gazette.

FEROZE SHAH.—A Cabul merchant just arrived in Nepaul is said to have reported to the Maharajah Sir Jung Bahadur that he saw the rebel leader Feroze Shah at Herat, and he further states he was the bearer of several letters to the families of Nana and Bala Rao, which he had lost on the way down.

APPOINTMENTS.—We have been informed that the following officers, who have hitherto been officiating in their respective offices, are to be permanently posted to their appointments, and will shortly appear in the official Gazette:—Mr. Wyatt, to be the first assistant to the Auditor and Accountant-general; Mr. Clarke, the second; Mr. Hudson, the third; and Baboo Khetter Mohun Chatterjee to be the fourth assistant. Mr. Tulloh, the officiating assistant civil paymaster, is also to be permanently appointed to that post. Messrs. Clarke and Hudson, however, will continue to officiate as Deputy-auditors and Accountants-general in the Punjab and the Mysore territories respectively, until the further orders of the Government.—Hurkaru, April 8.

THE OPIUM SALE.—The following are the particulars of the opium sale held at the Exchange-rooms on April 7th:—

THE VICEROYAL TOUR (UMBALLA, March 28).—The Viceroy made his public entree yesterday morning; the arrangements were all excellent. That fine regiment, the 7th Dragoon Guards, the 4th Bengal Cavalry, 98th Foot, and 22nd N.I., lined the road from the Governor-general's camp opposite the artillery barracks down to the Sudder bazaar; beyond that, the line was extended for about a mile by those very respectable looking troops of Puttialah, Jheend, and Nabah. For the first two miles his Excellency the Viceroy was received by a succession of salutes, each band, of which there were seven, taking up the National Anthem in succession. Of course, the Governor-general's escort joined in the pageant, Body Guard, 10th Bengal Cavalry, Light's Battery of Artillery, 3rd Battalion Rifle Brigade, and a Native Infantry regiment, &c., &c., who were drawn up at different parts of the line which had been appointed them. Half of Cook's Battery was drawn up opposite the centre street of the camp, and the other half was sent to salute his Excellency on reaching the boundary of the cantonment. The police arrangements were very good, and, with the additional aid of two or three European superintendents with long hunting-whips, they managed to keep the line pretty clear, although the concourse of people was enormous. Every shop in the place was shut to enable them to go out and welcome the Viceroy. The long line of elephants, with their silver and gold howdahs, looked very imposing, and added much to the grandeur of the scene. The Viceroy rode in, escorted by a large and brilliant staff, which was much increased when joined by his Excellency Sir Hugh Rose, and Lord George Paget, the Major-General commanding the division, with their respective staffs. In fact, everything was A. 1, including the dust. The Viceroy held a levee at 12 o'clock the same day, which was attended by all the civil and military officers in the station. The next morning the several chiefs were received in private durbars, and at 12.30, the public durbar was held, and although not on so grand a scale as the Agra one, it made a very respectable show. Puttialah, Jheend, Nabah, Nuwab of Muttowlee, or some such name, Dojbana, Loharoo, and another chief from your part of the world, Puttowdee, I think, were the principal chiefs; beyond them, extending the whole length of the tent, sat the different sirdars of the Sikh States. On the left of the Viceroy sat His Excellency Sir Hugh Rose, Lord George Paget, Sir Herbert Edwardes, and the military and civil officers, according to seniority. The Viceroy addressed the chiefs, pointing out to them their responsibilities as such, and the benefit they would derive by doing their utmost to develop the resources of their different districts, more particularly now that railways and canals were available to convey any surplus produce to other markets. He exhorted them to educate their sons and daughters, by which alone they could ever expect to become a great and happy people, and pointed to England as an example. Of course he said a great deal more, and at the end I was glad to see a Moonshiee step forward and read the translation, which the chiefs appeared to listen to with less of that vague stare they generally put on when listening to a viva voce translation from one of us. I defy the best interpreter in the country to do full justice to a speech such as that made by Lord Elgin to the Sikh chiefs and Sirdars viva voce. The chief has been keeping the troops here on the alert with parades, &c. There was a grand field-day on Monday last. His Excellency was much pleased with all he saw and did.

DELHI COLLEGE.—DELHI, March 29.—A very interesting ceremonial took place a few days ago in the public distribution of prizes to the students of the Delhi College by the Deputy Commissioner of the district. The temporary theatre was completely filled, excellent speeches were delivered, and all went off with great clat. To an observant eye it was manifest, from the keen, clean, active, joyous advance of most of the receivers of prizes, that education was not only a pleasure, but the rewards of successful competition an appreciated favour. The majority of the boys must have heard strange words, seen astounding sights, and led to reflect somewhat early and earnestly on the vicissitudes of empires. In 1857 they read a practical commentary on the fruits of social idleness, debauchery, and ignorance in the final extinction of the Mogul Empire. Mr. Holroyd gave an interesting resume of the history of the Delhi College, the students of which, including branch institutions, he reports as having nearly doubled the number attained before the mutinies. The speaker adverted to the cause of female education, which had at last taken strong root in Delhi, there being nearly two hundred little girls of all castes and religions in the various schools. The Director of Public Instruction may well congratulate himself on the exertions and influence of his subordinates on this, the most delicate of all branches of their labours. As the Deputy Commissioner remarked in his address, a silent revolution was working under the educational system—the effects of which would be felt to the remotest ages. As soon as the medals, prizes, and scholarships, a goodly number, had been distributed, the leading members of native society seemed to busy themselves in collecting subscriptions. This I learnt to be presentations of fees, by which the donor was enabled, according to the amount presented, to give youths of poor parents the advantages of education gratis. The system of adult instruction, which is being inaugurated, was intelligently explained by the inspector of schools to the natives, and it found favour inasmuch that to this end there were found sufficient adults willing to come forward and subscribe for a master. The objection that Government was reducing all the establishments, and that there were less openings than before for educated youths, was well met by the reply that there were plenty of establishments connected with private enterprise, commerce, and the railway system springing into existence which would give full employment to qualified Hindostani youths of good character. They should strive to emulate the Bengalee Baboo in qualifications; and gradually shut those effeminate invaders from their seats at the desk which they have usurped all over India. The Deputy Commissioner rendered a happy and telling allusion to the instance of the elevation of a native to the highest court in India—one of the weightiest appointments that majesty had to bestow in India.

LOSS OF SHIPS IN THE STRAITS.—The astounding number of ships that have been lost during the last few months has induced the authorities at Singapore to inquire into the matter, and, as the first fruits, additional light-houses in the Straits are recommended to be immediately constructed. The wreck of the ship India, bound from Singapore to Mecca with pilgrims, has attracted public attention to the class of vessels employed in this trade. The greater portion of the ships so engaged are, from their unseaworthiness, unfit for the transport of merchandise, and have long since been refused insurance. A class of men, generally native Hajis, make it their business to trade in the transport of pilgrims who flock to Singapore from Java and the different islands of the Archipelago. It seems that these men are constantly on the look-out for fresh arrivals of devotees, and obtain from them various sums of money for their passage. As soon, says the Straits Times, as four or five hundred pilgrims are secured, these traders look about them for a ship to charter, and invariably engage the cheapest one offering at the time. The case of the India is the most recent example of the evil alluded to. This ship embarked 1,000 souls, and a few days after leaving Singapore struck on a sand bank, and, to use the words of her captain, "she fairly fell asunder on the tide leaving her," her planking and timbers being too rotten to support her own weight. From a letter which appears in our correspondence columns it will be seen that this dreadful disregard of human life, in comparison with pelf, prevails also in the city of Calcutta. Our correspondent, who is only too competent to speak to the facts, distinctly accuses certain native speculators of chartering vessels which they know to be unseaworthy, and which they only charter because they are unseaworthy, with the premeditated design of allowing them to perish at sea with every soul on board, while these murderous wretches, sitting at home at ease, quietly pocket the money stained with human blood. The practice is so atrocious, so monstrous, that it almost passes belief; but that it prevails to a frightful extent is, we fear, beyond denial or doubt.—Bengal Hurkaru.

FLOWER SHOW.—The Flower Show held yesterday forenoon (April 6) in the Town Hall was, upon the whole, very creditable to the chief exhibitors. Some of the Orchids were marvels of quaint beauty. The most remarkable varieties were the Saccolobium, the Phalanopsis, the Dendrobium, and the Vanda-teres. Of the other plants and flowers there is little to be said; but the fruits and vegetables were worthy to grace an aldermanic banquet. The odour of the cabbage was, perhaps, a little too strong for sensitive organizations, but as those fragrant esculents were placed between the wind and the visitors' nobility, it may be assumed that it is a popular perfume in Calcutta, a city that rivals Cologne in the variety and intensity of its exhalations. The presence of a military band would have materially added to the attractions of the Floral Show, and, encouraged by the sonorous audacity of the drum, soft voices would have ventured to rise above a whisper, and "the good and the brave," albeit unused to public speaking, would have uttered their comments with no bated breath. As it was, the potatoes—that must have done an Irishman's heart good to behold—had reason to complain of a sad lack of enthusiasm.—Bengal Hurkaru.

NEW ABSENTEE RULES.—With reference to the New Absentee Rules, it is rumoured that an order has been received in the Financial Department from the State Secretary, and will be promulgated as soon after the closing of the official year as practicable, prohibiting the accumulation of the privilege leave. Agreeably to the above-mentioned rules, an officer has been hitherto entitled to three months' privilege leave after a continued service of three years, but according to the order recently received he must avail himself of a month's leave in the year, instead of the accumulated period of three months after the expiration of as many years' service.—Hurkaru.

CANNON OR GLASON.—A curious trial took place in the Court of Queen's Bench yesterday. A Mr. Cowan undertook to get up a company for the purchase of some lands in India known as General Cannon's property, and which are famous in the market for producing the best coffees in the peninsula. The defendant represented that he had authority to sell the lands, and in proof of it produced a letter addressed to his son authorising the sale, at the end of which was a scrawl of hieroglyphics, which plaintiff and defendant, with several other persons, read as "Cannon" but which afterwards turned out to be "Glason," and to refer to quite different estates. This put an end to the company, and the plaintiff sued the defendant for the expenses he had been put to in the abortive attempt to get up the association. It appeared, however, there were other difficulties, independent of the blunder in the handwriting, and the jury found for the defendant, but with reserve to the plaintiff to move the court above.—Hurkaru, April 8.

DACCA, April 3.—Colonel Dunsford's expeditionary force has done its work, and the troops are coming into Cherra for the rains. Major Thelwall has completed the work of pacification so successfully begun by Lieutenants Collett and Ommaney in the Nongphyllut district, and the dollois of the villages are strong enough to keep their villages from the attacks of the few straggling bands of rebels that still remain. U Bong, the most influential of the rebel leaders since the execution of U Kiang Nongba, has given himself up on condition that he shall not be made to suffer Nongba's fate. Colonel Dunsford will, we suppose, remain with his little army in Cherra, until he sees what the rainy season may bring forth.

BRIGADIER MACPHERSON, C.B., is to succeed to Brigadier Troup in command of the Agra brigade.

DEATH OF THE RAJAH OF MOURBHUNGE.—Letters from Pooree mention the death, a few days ago, of the Rajah of Mourbhunge, one of tributary mehals of Cuttack. The son of the deceased succeeds him in the gudee. The deceased rajah proved himself a loyal vassal of the British Government during the late mutiny, and rendered such meritorious services to the State that the title of maharajah was conferred on him by the Government of India.

Mr. R. Temple, Chief Commissioner of the Central Provinces, "is so seriously ill as to be obliged to leave his office for some little time."

ADDRESS TO COLONEL ABBOTT.—On the occasion of the departure for England of Colonel Abbott, the late Commissioner of Lucknow, the Talookdars of that Division presented him with an Address, together with a purse of Rs 2,250, as a donation to the Lucknow Girls' School, of which Colonel Abbott was the founder.—Hurkaru.

BANK IN THE PUNJAB.—The Lahore Chronicle is informed that a branch of the Chartered Bank of India, Australia, and China is to be established in the Punjab. It also hears that instead of a branch of the Bank of Bengal being introduced here to manage the monetary transactions of the Government a branch of the Bank of Bombay will be established. The same paper cannot complain of paucity of banks, but where their business is to come from is more than it can comprehend. The following banking associations will be soon working in opposition to each other in this province:—1, Agra and United Service Bank; 2, Delhi Bank; 3, Simla Bank; 4, Punjab Bank; 5, Bank of Bombay; 6, Bank of Sind, Punjab and Delhi; 7, Bank of India, Australia, and China; 8, People's Bank of India.

COURT MARTIAL ON CAPTAIN DRURY.—Orders have been received at Singapore for Colonel Bond and Captain Cameron, of the Royal Artillery, to proceed immediately to Penang to take part in a Court Martial to be held upon Captain Drury, who is charged with being drunk while upon duty. Colonel Warden, of the 34th N.I., will be President of the Court, and Captain Cameron is appointed to act as Deputy Judge Advocate General.

MADRAS.

THE MYSORE RAJAH.

The Province of Mysore has lately attracted more attention than usual from the rumours of its being about to be restored to the Rajah, and, although no panic or fear on that subject now exists, it is worth while to consider what inducements may have been held out to give rise to the belief in such a piece of State folly; and what reasons Sir Charles Wood and H.M.'s Ministers may have had to listen patiently to further proposals from the Rajah on a subject disposed of by the late Governor-general. Every argument based upon the treaty which could operate in favour of the Rajah's claim to regain the sovereignty and administration over Mysore, was placed before Lord Canning, who deliberately told his Highness that the British Government had never committed itself to such a restoration, and was not at all prepared now or hereafter to recognise any claim of the kind. Thus, the highest authority in India settled the question of whether this Indian Prince was entitled to reign supreme once more in his own country or not. The matter was then taken to England; but an additional basis of operations and additional reasons were put forth why the claim should obtain still further consideration from H.M.'s Government. The original claim was founded on the treaty, and it is founded on it still; but the Rajah also, from the first, intimated his wish to continue to administer his kingdom by means of the British Commission of Officers now ruling in Mysore. Although this would not be feasible by the existing law, yet the proposal carried with it a seeming desire to do well, and it ensured the claim a more favourable hearing. This part of the Rajah's proposals, we may be sure, was not left out when they went to England, but to it was added a still more important and tempting clause—viz., that if permitted to obtain the sovereignty during his lifetime, he would bequeath his country as a legacy to the Queen. This proposal, too, was plausible, and likely enough to meet with acceptance if any right at all had once been established; and, if the great autocrat in London could not be brought to think so great a political error possible, still it had the desired effect of drawing more attention to the claim. The Rajah's supporters and friends were most active, too. They canvassed here and they canvassed there, and after some little time got up enough hope to send out those rumours of a speedy restoration, which, no doubt, delighted the heart of the old Rajah, and frightened considerably the whole batch of local Mysore administrators. It is not to be wondered at that those rumours were accepted for a time, because India and its officials have learnt from painful experience that Sir Charles Wood is ever ready to sacrifice everything and everybody to his own opinion. And who could tell whether that opinion would not be the same in this case as in many others, contrary to the dictates of sound sense, justice, and policy? However, this dose, we believe, was a little too strong even for his invulnerable Maharajahship, and the difficulty and delay about settling the Mysore question have more likely arisen from the differences regarding an efficient compromise, which should at one and the same time appease the Rajah, and effectually close up the last chink of hope on the subject of independent sovereignty. It is not easy to say exactly what form the final resolutions is likely to take; but in consideration of his loyalty of late years, the Rajah of Mysore will, doubtless, be dealt liberally with. He has an income now of fifteen lacs per annum, but it is not enough for him. With an enormous establishment, an immense retinue, crowds of relatives, dependants, and courtiers, and hosts of pensioners on his bounty, his stipend is swallowed up; and his previous character and liberal disposition lead him not only to be profuse in his gifts, but to be swindled largely by all the native merchants and traders who reside at, or travel to Mysore for the purpose. The consequence is, he has a large amount of debt, and, if we consider the large revenue of Mysore, the annual surplus of accumulations, and the ninety odd lacs of rupees already lying in the Treasury, the Government may well take upon itself to pay all the Rajah owes. It may do more. It may make him a present of the accumulated capital, and allow him the felicity of squandering it in any way he likes best. The Government may also allow him to retain the nominal sovereignty for his lifetime, and to continue to receive royal honours on all occasions from the representatives of England. It is just possible that the compromise may even go a step further, and give the Rajah a voice in certain State matters in connection with the Chief Commissioner in Mysore; but beyond a merely nominal power, any further concession would be unwise and impolitic. Her Majesty's Government must see this fact quite as well as we do, and is not likely to be seduced by any wily propositions into establishing a dangerous right which does not at present exist. Moreover, it is curious and remarkable that, after the late Governor-general's decision, after the arrival of Lord Elgin, and after the latter had organised an entirely new system of administration for Mysore, in order to place it more on a footing with our other non-regulation provinces, the supporters of a restoration to native rule should have continued so long to consider such a course possible; and the only way to account for it is in the supposition that the new organisation would come under the supreme rule of the Rajah. British officers, in the first place, could not serve under a native Prince, except by a special Act to be provided for the purpose; and even if that difficulty could be got over, the anomaly of a large body of English officers serving in a foreign country under a resident with only nominal power, while the functions and absolute authority were in the hands of a native Prince, is such as must have resulted in a very short time in the most complete disorganisation of the whole administration. This Rajah, or any other Rajah, in such a position, would be surrounded with flatterers, courtiers, wily connections, smooth-tongued Brahmins, priests, and byrages, every one of whom would have interests separate and inimical to either his own or those of his country. Each of these would make his utmost endeavour to improve the occasion by enriching himself at the expense of his neighbours; and not one among them all that would not prove, in some round-about way, obstructive to the smooth course of honourable and faithful government. The contemplation of such a state of things for five minutes would produce from the Rajah himself a complete refutation of the possibility of any stability in a government of the kind; and we cannot believe that any such compromise as this could even be entertained by English statesmen. The business, however, we understand, is soon to be settled one way or another; and we look for the decision in the belief that Government, while dealing as liberally with the Rajah as he deserves, will not sacrifice true policy and sound judgment to any over-strained ideas of getting out of a difficulty. Meanwhile, Mr. Bowring and his officers are closing the first year of their labours under the new regime; courts and officials have settled down into the study and practice of the criminal and civil law for all India; the Punjab and Northern regulations have been introduced and put in force; and with the present year has commenced that new era in the history of Mysore which we hope is but the prelude to a long and successful administration, such as has been achieved by other non-regulation provinces before.—Englishman, March 20.

MISCELLANEOUS.

MR. DALRYMPLE.—We understand that Mr. Dalrymple is to act for Mr. Franklin as Superintendent of Marine, on a salary of Rs. 1,600 a month, and that Mr. Crowther is to receive an addition of Rs. 250 per mensem to his present pay, for performing the duties of Master Attendant.

THE 40TH MADRAS N.I. are under orders to proceed to Cannanore, the relieving corps being the 34th M.N.I. H.M.'s ship Scout, with a gunboat in tow, has left Singapore under sealed orders for the coast of Sumatra. It is conjectured that the object of this expedition is to "remind the various rajahs of the existence of certain treaties."

MILITARY COMPLAINTS.—We read in a late number of the Calcutta Englishman the following account of a somewhat novel but very instructive incident which occurred on the parade ground of a regiment well known at Madras:—"The other evening, when General Showers was carrying on the half-yearly inspection of H.M.'s 43rd L.I., garrisoning Fort William, he asked the men, as is usual at the end of the parade, if they had any complaints to make. Several soldiers stepped forward, and said that they had to complain of not having as yet received their Indian medals for service in the field during the mutinies. Notwithstanding the obvious folly and presumption of expecting that the British Government could decorate its officers and soldiers within so short a time as five years and a half after the services which the medal is to commemorate if it should ever be issued, the general did not reprimand these irrational men, but promised them that their complaint should be inquired into. If the general is going to entertain such complaints as this, he will have plenty of work on his hands, as there are hundreds, perhaps thousands, of officers and men, and in some cases whole regiments, by whom their medals for services performed in 1857 have not yet been received. Perhaps the best plan, as regards this matter, would be to publish an order directing that any officer or man making a complaint of not having received his medal so soon after earning it should be punished. This would stop the clamour."—Madras Athenaeum.

AMALGAMATION.—Amalgamation is still the order of the day. The Military Male Orphan Asylum is, we are sorry to say, to be amalgamated with the Lawrence Asylum. As we shall discuss the whole matter in a few days, we need not say much here. We think the amalgamation a mistake, and were it not that persons in high authority have striven their best to serve one or two parties, we should not have had to record the event. The children are not to be sent up to the hills at once, but are to be drafted off by degrees. An institution on a small scale is to be kept up in Madras, while a great portion of the funds of the Madras Asylum are to be spent in maintaining boys, at nearly double the cost incurred here, on the Hills. We are glad to know that Sir William Denison is altogether opposed to the scheme, and we trust he will exercise his influence to prevent its ever being carried out.

COLONEL SYKES AND THE EAST INDIANS AT MADRAS.—Colonel Sykes has returned the following answer to the letter which conveyed to him a copy of the proceedings of a public meeting of the Madras community, assembled to petition against the denial to her Majesty's East Indian subjects of those rights which belong to them equally with Europeans. We only wish that he had been able to add that Sir Charles Wood and Parliament would "always be found the advocates of the civil rights of British subjects, whatever the colour of their skin, or wherever born." But that seems hopeless:—"47, Albion-square, Hyde-park, 3rd March, 1863, Sir,—I have received your letter dated 13th January, with a printed copy of the proceedings of a public meeting of the Madras community, assembled to petition both Houses of Parliament with respect to the exclusion of her Majesty's Indian born subjects from an equal participation with her European subjects in civil rights, and embodying a vote of thanks from the Madras community to Lord Monteagle and myself, for the simple act of doing our duty. The vote is highly gratifying to me, and I beg you will let it be known to the public, that whether in or out of Parliament, I shall always be found the advocate of the civil rights of British subjects, whatever the colour of their skin, or wherever born.—Your obedient servant, (Signed) W. H. SYKES, Colonel, M.P. J. G. Coleman, Esq., Chairman of a public meeting at Madras. P.S.—I put the letter and paper addressed to Lord Monteagle into his hands."

CHILD MURDERS.—The Madras Times states that child murders are becoming common in Madras: "The temptation consists in the valuable jewels, with which the little creatures are loaded upon occasions of ceremony or festivity. The Trivatore feast is one blaze of nose rings, ear jewels, necklaces, anklets, bangles, and other native adornments. In the crowd it is almost inevitable that the younger members of a family get separated. Some wretch then entices them away under the plea of taking them to their parent, giving them sweetmeats, &c. They are then plundered, murdered, and cast into some tank, while the murderer mingles with the crowd to find opportunity for other crimes. When we consider that a child's jewellery will often be worth more than 500 Rs. we may imagine how great is the allurements to evil. We have reason to believe that not one half of the cases of murder are ever reported, and not one-tenth ever discovered."

BOMBAY.

RASCALITY RAMPANT—THE SEEDIE OF JINJEERA.

Few non-official Europeans in Bombay, probably, are aware of the existence of a little native state, a few miles below the harbour, known as the territory of the Hubshee, or Seedee of Jinjeera. Under ancient Mahomedan rule, the Hubshee was the hereditary grand admiral of the Mogul; and in the time of the monarchy of Beejapoor, Jinjeera, the capital of the Seedee, situated about forty miles down the coast, was the principal depot of the maritime force of that state. The title and territory were held on condition of the Seedee maintaining a fleet for the protection of commerce, and conveying pilgrims to the Red Sea. The overthrow of the Beejapoor monarchy by Aurungzebe, in 1686, followed, upon the death of that prince, by the subversion of the Mogul dominion and the rise of the Mahratta power, rendered our neighbour, the Seedee, an independent prince.

Our own early history on this part of the coast is but a record of wars and alliances between the Mahrattas, the Seedee—better known in those days than now—and ourselves. The little State now owes its existence to the forbearance of the great neighbour whom it used to terrify, as in 1689, when having taken possession of Mazagon, Parell, and Mahim, its troops laid siege to the fort of Bombay itself. The Seedees were little better, however, at any time than pirates, plundering all nations except ourselves, whose proximity in some strength taught them discretion. Although never conquered by the Mahrattas, the Hubshee professed allegiance to the Peishwa; and upon the overthrow of Bajee Rao in 1817, that allegiance became transferred to ourselves. The castle, says Duff, may fall, while the cottage stands. The little Mahomedan principality of Jinjeera has survived the empire of the Malvattas. The territory extends about forty miles along the coast, from Rehwadunda to the Bankote river. It is but a narrow strip of country, a very few miles wide. There is little intercourse between Bombay and this territory, the ruler being a bigoted Mahomedan, and extremely jealous of all European intercourse.

Now we have casually learned, within the last few days, that the Seedee of Jinjeera has very good reasons indeed for refusing to allow Europeans to settle in his territory. True to the traditions of his very respectable ancestors, he has no objection, it seems, to make a little money by patronising a rascality; and, while European merchants are sedulously excluded from his ports, the Comptah boats, laden with Dharwar Sawginned cotton for the Bombay market, are freely invited to enter them. It is the fact, we are informed, that the most daring of the frauds committed in the way of adulterating this staple are made neither in Comptah nor above the Kygh Ghat. They are made in the Hubshee's ports! The tindals of the cotton craft steer their vessels into Booria, and there unload, at discretion, as much of their cargo as they dare; making up the weight by adulterating the remainder with any rubbish that comes to hand, or watering the bales for the same end.

We learn, moreover, that the same respectable little State carries on a profitable intercourse with the rascality of our own port, by affording facilities to the native merchants of Bombay to swindle the underwriters of risks upon goods shipped from this port to the African coast or Arabian Gulf. The vessel takes out her port clearance at Bombay, say for Zanzibar, and steers a straight course for one of the Hubshee's ports, whence, having landed part of the cargo, the voyage is resumed for Africa. Upon arrival, the tindal and crew, of course, have "narrowly escaped shipwreck," and had to throw the cargo overboard. We are told, finally, that a lucrative, if not very extensive, trade is quietly carried on between this port and the Hubshees in slave girls! It is clear, therefore, that the Hubshee does not want Englishmen in his territories, for very good reasons; but the time has come when he must tolerate them there, whether he like it or not. We are assured that the resort of the Comptah boats to his ports, and the practice of the frauds we have described, do not admit of denial. The Bombay Chamber should represent the matter at once to Government, and the Customs Department be set upon a rigid inquiry into the Hubshee's conduct.

Upon reasonable proof of the practices we have described, a European agent should be fixed in each of the three ports of the territory, which should, moreover, be proclaimed open to all comers. We want neither the Seedee's land, nor his revenue: but it is our prerogative as the Supreme power to put down the rascality of a petty feudatory of his order, with a prompt hand. If delay take place in the investigation, the proof of what we have adduced will be difficult. It will be easily understood that a single successful "voyage" of that order we have described, whether from Comptah to Bombay, or from Bombay to Zanzibar, will make the fortune of a tindal and boat's crew. Dharwar cotton is to-day worth Rs. 530 per candy, and a moderate size craft would carry 150 to 200 candies. By landing only 10 per cent. of such a cargo, say 20 candies, the rascals would get the small sum of Rs. 10,000. The probability is, the tindal would not get Rs. 500; the "bigger rascals" in the transaction, from his Highness the Seedee downwards, carrying off the lion's share. So in the case of a shipment of piece goods for Zanzibar. A fraction of the cargo, successfully landed on the Hubshee's coast, would make a small fortune. The matter should be inquired into forthwith, and agents dispatched instantly to the Hubshee's ports, with instructions to investigate upon the spot, to take an account of all the shipping in his ports at this moment, and of all that may enter them.—Times of India, April 9.

MISCELLANEOUS.

KURRACHEE, March 22.—The robbery of the cash-book of the Bank of Kurrachee is still involved in mystery. Further disclosures, however, as to transactions connected with the institution are likely to be made this week, as the liquidator of the affairs of the bank has instituted a suit against Messrs. Giles, McGill, and Co., for the recovery of the amount of a note for Rs. 8,000, which Mr. Giles gave to Mr. Plunkett, the late manager, and which he now says in one of the local prints he had not authorised Mr. Plunkett to use for the purpose to which it has been put.

THE WANT OF A COTTON FRAUD BILL.—An important case has just been decided in the appellate branch of the High Court at Bombay, which possesses peculiar interest at this particular time, when efforts are being made to put down the systematic rascality so extensively practised in the cotton trade. The facts may be very shortly stated: a cotton broker was charged before a magistrate, at Broach, with having sold, in October last, thirty-one bales of adulterated cotton, which is an offence made punishable under an Act dated as far back as 1820. The principal witness was the purchaser, who deposed that, previous to completing the purchase, he had taken samples from ten or fifteen of the thirty-one bales, and found seeds mixed with the cotton, "it being customary to mix the cotton and cotton seeds together, as a part of the trade." The price paid by the purchaser was Rs. 324 per candy, the market price at that particular time for the best broach cotton being Rs. 420. In due course these bales found their way to Bombay, and by some unexplained means were brought under the notice of the Commission, then sitting to inquire into the cotton frauds, and by them handed over to the police with a view to a prosecution being instituted. Avoiding unnecessary details, we may state the defence made by the prisoner was, that he was merely an agent in the transaction. He denied having attempted to commit a fraud, and alleged that the condition of the cotton was well known prior to the purchase. He was convicted, however, and sentenced to nine months' imprisonment with hard labour. As usual an appeal was lodged against this decision, but only to be rejected. On the 18th February the case was brought before the High Court by petition from the prisoner, and the legal gentleman, who on that occasion represented him, urged that "the charge, as framed, constituted no offence against the regulation, inasmuch as it did not allege that the sale was fraudulent;" and that the regulation "aimed against the suppression of fraud only, as was apparent from its title, preamble, and every section in it." It was further contended that the whole transaction was fair and above board. The cotton was known to be adulterated by the purchaser, and in consequence a lower price was paid for it. The Court, after perusing the papers, "found that the magistrate had made a clear error in law, quashed the conviction and sentence and ordered the prisoner to be discharged." This case forcibly illustrates the inadequacy of any existing law to deal with this class of fraud, and shows the urgent necessity for the passing of the Bill lately introduced into the Bombay Legislature by Mr. Scott. The prisoner on his release doubtless hastened to resume his former trade, and felt doubly secure in prosecuting it, seeing that the law had been appealed to, but had proved a dead letter. The provisions of Mr. Scott's Bill will, it is anticipated, put an effectual check on the systematic frauds so long practised with impunity.—Bengal Hurkaru, April 2.

COTTON FRAUD BILL.—A very singular, and, to our thinking, illogical, memorial has been signed by twenty-six of the most eminent mercantile firms in Bombay to the Governor in Council, objecting to various amendments introduced by the Select Committee of the Legislative Council into Mr. Scott's Bill for the suppression of Cotton Frauds. Their first serious objection is to the prohibition to mix "cotton of good and bad quality," which they say, is susceptible of a greater degree of stringency or laxity than a prohibition to mix "cotton of good and unmerchantable quality." But cotton may be merchantable, and yet very inferior to the variety that is professed to be sold, and it must be to all intents a fraud to describe the cotton as being of a particular description when another kind has been mixed up with it. The memorialists shrink, however, from punishing as fraud "the mixture of different varieties in one bale, and it certainly would be rather hard to punish a man for mixing a superior with inferior quality which he had undertaken to deliver; but this irregularity is not, we think, very likely to occur. But with the same breath with which they declare it to be "oppressive and undesirable" to treat this offence as a fraudulent one, seeing that it is "practised legally in almost every trade," they pronounce the said practice to be pernicious and injurious to the interests of the empire generally." We cannot think that the memorialists are correct in speaking of the adulteration of goods as being lawful, though, no doubt, it is only too often effected with impunity. Neither do we approve of their suggestion that the Government inspectors should be instructed to affix a particular stamp or label upon all bales of unmixed cotton that may be voluntarily submitted to them for that purpose. Theoretically, the recommendation is an excellent one, but practically it would be found very unsafe to trust to such labels, as every device would be attempted to mislead the inspectors in the first instances; and to tamper with the stamped bales afterwards.—Hurkaru, April 7.

A NEW BANK is about to be opened at Bombay under the auspices of several European and native firms. The prime movers of the scheme are the Hon. Mr. Scott, Cowasjee Jehangir Readymoney, Esq., and Premchand Roychand, Esq. There are, it appears, already nine banks in Bombay, but the addition of the tenth is rendered necessary, according to a Bombay Gazette, "by the abundance of money and the consequent want of investment for it." No doubt the plethora of money will facilitate the disposal of shares, but we are not certain that it will be found equally beneficial when the time arrives for declaring a dividend. The proposed capital is Rs. 50,00,000, to be divided into twenty thousand shares of Rs. 250.—Hurkaru, April 8.

A CONSPIRACY TO DEFRAUD.—At the last Criminal Sessions of the High Court of Bombay, which terminated on the 9th April, a somewhat remarkable case of conspiracy was tried, in which five Parsees and two Europeans conspired, by means of forgery and perjury, to cheat another Parsee out of the sum of £50. The plot was very skillfully laid, and would have been entirely successful but for one of the conspirators having turned informer. The whole gang were in consequence convicted of the offences charged against them, and sentenced to the following punishments:—Three of the Parsee offenders were transported for seven years, the two Europeans (one of them a female, and both of the lowest class) were each sentenced to four years' penal servitude, and the other two Parsees to three years' penal servitude.

CEYLON.

HIGH LIFE BELOW STAIRS.

POLICE COURT, COLOMBO.—No. 67,834.

Inspector DE LA HARPE, Complainant, v. CHARLES HENRY MEDLEY, Defendant.

Few of our readers are aware, we believe, of the fact that the individual named Medley, who has been a source of no small annoyance to the public, has at last come to grief. He was charged by Inspector De La Harpe under the Vagrant Ordinance for "that the said defendant did, on February 21, 1863, and on previous occasions, go about as a gatherer of alms or endeavour to procure charitable contributions for himself under false pretences, in breach of the 4th Clause, 3rd Section, of the Ordinance No. 4 of the year 1841."

The accused pleaded not guilty.

The complainant, who was sworn, stated that he met Medley at Borella on the 21st of February last, coming out of a tavern, and thereupon took him into custody. He said he was going to the Rev. Mr. Jayesinhe's, at Wellicadde, to see what he could get. The inspector asked him why he was going about soliciting charitable contributions. Medley said he was induced to do so, as he had no employment, and had been living in the Royal Hotel in the fort for a few weeks. Papers found in his possession showed that he had been so living. He said he had also been living at the Club House, Kandy, and that he did so to live like a gentleman. [High life below stairs.]

[Two letters, marked A and B, sent down from Galle by the police to the office of the chief superintendent here, were put in evidence. The defendant admitted that these letters had been written and signed by him; and further, that the evidence of the complainant was true in every particular.]

John William Modder, proprietor of the Royal Hotel and Galle Face Boarding House, stated that Medley was a lodger in the Royal Hotel from the 18th to the 27th of October, 1862, and again from the 23rd of December, 1862, till the 13th of January, 1863. From the 18th to the 27th of October he was charged seven shillings and sixpence per diem, the same as any other person. From the 23rd of December to the 13th of January he was charged for what he had, which amounted to sometimes more than 7s. 6d. per day, and sometimes less. He spent from the 18th to the 27th of October on an average five shillings per day in wines and cheroots, and had a carriage occasionally. Captain Tyson, of the Magnum Bonum, offered defendant a passage to England for £20, provided he should assist the steward on board. The defendant said he would not assist the steward, and that he would rather pay £40 and go as a passenger. This witness told Medley he ought to look for a cheaper place than an hotel, and thought it very wrong on Medley's part to be living at so expensive a rate, to be drinking so much brandy, and smoking so many cheroots, and, moreover, to be hiring so many carriages, when he was endeavouring to raise money for a passage to England. Medley showed this witness the draft of a letter he was going to send to Mr. Johnstone, of the bank. It was a most offensive and insulting letter, and this witness asked Medley not to send it. It was the letter marked B, and was sent to the person addressed.

[Defendant admitted the correctness of Mr. Modder's statement.]

James Reid was next called, and stated that about September last the defendant went to his house at Colpetty and asked him to get him an employment, which this witness declined to do. Medley then asked for money. This witness said he could not give him any money, as he heard all about him from Captain Bayley at Galle. Defendant then became very violent, frightened Mrs. Reid, and left the house.

[The evidence for the prosecution was here closed, and the following letters marked A and B were put in evidence. We publish these letters in extenso, simply with a view to show our readers who Medley is, his real character, and the glorious life he led in Ceylon at others' expense. The letters in question contain the most abominable and insulting language we ever heard of, and as there are certain passages in them unfit for appearance in public print, it will be observed that in inserting them we have studiously omitted those passages, notwithstanding the wide circulation which Medley says he has given them.]

"I have been informed by two parties—one of the Mr. Worms (whom I saw in his office yesterday) and Mr. Brown, of Kandy—that one of these reports was, that I have been drinking champagne since my stay in Ceylon. I hereby call my ——— to witness that never on any occasion have I tasted champagne since I have been in this country, and moreover, that I have never partaken of a larger quantity of liquor than I felt necessary when considering the great fatigue I have been undergoing, when travelling great distances on foot, nor have I ever been seen in the least inebriated by any one in Ceylon.

"Under these circumstances, I unhesitatingly and fearlessly denounce the author or authors of the said report as the most dastardly, lying scoundrels on ——— earth, and may they be ———!

"A copy of this will be extensively circulated by me in Ceylon. (Signed) "C. H. MEDLEY."

[The defendant gave the following list when asked if he had any witnesses to call. He said they were to prove that they had given him money believing his own representation to be true; but he declined to have them examined.]

Messrs. Wilson, Ritchie, and Co., Fort; Messrs. D'Esterre, and Co., Colombo; Messrs. Armitage Brothers, Colombo; Messrs. Keir Dundas, and Co., Kandy; Mr. P. W. Braybrooke, Government Agent, Kandy; Mr. L. H. Daniell, Government Agent, Kandy.

JUDGMENT.

That defendant has endeavoured to procure, and has actually procured charitable contributions for himself is a matter of notoriety, and is fully admitted by himself. The point to be considered is, did the defendant do so on false or fraudulent pretences? for that is the gravamen of the charge. The professed object of the defendant was to raise money to pay for a passage to England. It is in evidence, which defendant admits to be true, that Captain Tyson, of the ship Magnum Bonum, offered him a passage for £20, on the condition that he, defendant, should assist the steward of the ship on the passage. This reasonable offer was rejected by defendant. He would not work, but would pay £40, and go as a passenger—that is he was ashamed to work, but not ashamed to beg!

In the meantime he was living expensively at hotels, expending about five shillings per day in wines—using many cheroots, and occasionally hiring carriages—and also behaving rudely to people when they refused to give him money. On defendant's own showing to Mr. Modder, his conduct at Kandy was such as to fully justify people in withholding such sums as they had consented to give him; also, his conduct at the Royal Hotel, Colombo, became known and raised a great prejudice against him. The two papers marked A and B, filed in this case, are in the handwriting of the defendant, and are most disgraceful to the writer, as well as grossly insulting to those alluded to by name, whom defendant states, "copy sent" of the abominable production dated "11th January, 1863." Defendant states that a copy of his note to Mr. Johnstone, of the Bank, "will be extensively circulated." The public have a right to whatever protection the law can give from such base and offensive conduct as that of defendant. The defendant refused a passage offered to him on easy and reasonable terms. Subsequently he went about begging for money to pay for a passage. He lived extravagantly at hotels, and obtained charitable contributions really to enable him to do so, but ostensibly to pay for a passage. It is, therefore, held that defendant endeavoured to procure, and did procure, charitable contributions on false or fraudulent pretences.

The said defendant, Charles Henry Medley, is adjudged to be guilty, and is sentenced to be imprisoned at hard labour for one month.

Distribution of the Burmah Prize Money.

Fort William, March 27.—With reference to G.G.O. No. 142, dated Feb. 22, 1861, the distribution of the proceeds of the booty captured in Pegu will be carried under the following rules:—

Under the Royal Warrant the sum allowed as prize is to be divided among H.M.'s naval force, the naval forces then in the service of the late East India Company, and the land forces in proportion to the numbers of the men belonging to each of the forces without reference to rank. Accordingly of the amount declared prize, after deducting agents' commission, viz.:

To the land forces, aggregating 19,629 men of all ranks, has been allotted Rs. 2,55,280 9 2
To the naval forces in the services of the late Hon. East India Company, aggregating 3,195 men of all ranks, has been allotted ... Rs. 41,551 13 8
And to the naval forces of H.M.'s service, aggregating 2,951 men of all ranks, has been allotted ... Rs. 38,378 9 2
	Rs. 3,85,211

The first distribution will now be made:—
To the land forces, comprising 1,09,301 1-3rd shares, at Rs. 2 per share.

To the naval forces in the service of the late East India Company, including Indian navy and Bengal marine, comprising 27,792 shares, at Rs. 1-6 per share.

The portion of prize allotted to H.M.'s navy will be paid in England in such manner and proportions as are usual in the royal navy.

All bills and abstracts of individuals, corps, &c., are to be prepared in the forms [Nos. 1 and 2] laid down and submitted to the examiner of prize accounts, Calcutta.

Claims on account of deceased officers and others are to be supported by copies of probates or letters of administration empowering the claimants to administer to estates.

In order to facilitate the payment in England of the prize money to officers and others who have left India, and to the representatives of such officers deceased separate abstracts containing the names of such parties are to be prepared in the Form No. 2, and submitted by corps still serving in India.

Claims by agents or others empowered to draw the shares of absent officers must be supported by powers of attorney.

The claims of the officers and men of the Bengal marine are to be drawn through the controller of marine affairs, or such naval officer as he may nominate for the duty.

The examination and payment of the claims of European and native soldiers invalided, discharged, or deceased, will be made by station prize committees.

Forms [Nos. 3 and 4] for the use of station committees will be forwarded to general officers commanding divisions by the examiners.

Station prize committees will submit monthly to the examiner of prize accounts an account current of sums received and paid, and they will also forward to the examiner receipts from regiments either singly or in the form of an acquittance roll.

The receipts of each individual for any sum of above rupees (20) twenty must bear a one anna stamp.

SALE OF WASTE LANDS AND REDEMPTION OF THE LAND-TAX IN INDIA.

ON Tuesday last, Mr. Seymour brought forward a motion in favour of the occupation of waste lands and the redemption of the land-tax in India. It led to a debate of high interest to all who are not accustomed to regard every Indian question as a bugbear—every Anglo-Indian orator as a dinner-bell. But the House rapidly thinned as the debate continued, and left only a fit audience, though few, to listen to the discussion of questions of vital importance to a vast country, of the possession of which the British nation is supposed to be peculiarly proud, while its best interests are regarded by the multitude at home with the most perfect indifference.

Sir Charles Wood explained that it was a great mistake to suppose that he was adverse to the settlement of Europeans in India, or that he willingly placed any obstacles in the way of the sale of land to them. He asserted also that the difference between his regulations and those of Lord Canning had been much exaggerated. Amongst the chief points of difference were his objection to lands of different value being sold at a uniform price per acre, and his desire that on all occasions each lot of land should be sold by public auction, and a sufficient time given to enable any unknown proprietor to put forth his claim to it.

Mr. Seymour withdrew his motion.

JAPAN.

OUR relations with Japan are rapidly approaching the crisis which every one acquainted with affairs there has long foreseen to be inevitable, and we shall soon be obliged to accept one of two definite courses. We shall be compelled either to maintain our position by force or to leave the country. Hitherto we have attempted by patience and forbearance to overcome the dislike entertained towards us by the dominant class, and have hoped that intercourse with the people, and the advantages they would derive from our trade, would remove their suspicions, and induce them to regard us with something like friendly feeling. But this is a policy that has never succeeded in the East. In India, from the days of Warren Hastings to those of Lord Canning; in China, from the time of the old Company to that in which Captain Elliott weakly took ransom for Canton, it has been tried and found wanting. If we were not the most obstinate of people, we should long ago have given up trying to persuade ourselves that it was of any use to extort treaties by force, and then to expect that they would be cheerfully observed. To the other nations of Europe our declarations of surprise, and professions of regret on this subject, are considered simply hypocritical, for they cannot believe us so stupid as to make them in good faith. As regards Japan, indeed, our usual pretext, in its full force, is wanting. It is now well known that the Tycoon, with whom Lord Elgin's treaty of '58 was made, is a subordinate power in the country. He is willing, and does his best, to carry out the obligations into which he entered; but the Mikado,—or real Emperor,—and the almost independent Princes of Japan, never gave their assent to the treaty; nor were even asked for it. They were always opposed to the admission of foreigners, and are now resolved to expel them at all hazards. Isolated attempts have from time to time been made to drive us away, and seeing that these have failed, extensive and well-organised preparations are now in progress for this end.

To continue to throw ourselves for protection upon the Tycoon is absurd, for he is the weaker party in the State, and could not support his own authority if the Mikado and Princes chose to attack him. We must then, if we would stay in Japan, take the matter into our own hands,—cast aside quibbles about "treaties," "justice," &c., which have ceased to gull even Exeter-hall or Parliament,—and frankly say, "We choose to be here,—and here we will remain."

But whether or not we should take this determination is a question which the taxpayers of this country may well think ought to be seriously considered. A war with Japan would not perhaps be very costly, but if it were, could we afford to let our excellent friends and customers, the Chinese, think that they might rid themselves of us by another attempt? Would our prestige in India be improved if it was believed there that we are not so strong as the Japanese? If we gave up our hold in Japan, would our self-love receive without a wound the rude taunts of Cousin Jonathan, or the polite condolence of Baron Brunow? These are questions which the people and Government of England will, as we have said, very soon have to answer. In the meanwhile, it is fortunate that Sir R. Alcock, our minister at Yeddo, is still here to give us the benefit of his advice. He came home, as we learn from his recent interesting book, with his nerves frightfully shaken by the constant alarm in which he had lived for two or three years, and if the rest of our officials in Japan are either assassinated, or forced to leave on account of their health, one solution of the difficulty will be arrived at—the merchants, left to themselves, will be obliged to imitate the Chinese, and to hire the services of some Colonel Ward and Admiral Osborn for their own protection. Should an "Anti-Mikado-and-to-Support-the-Government-of-the-Tycoon Company," under a very limited liability Act, be established at Kanagawa, we hereby beg (following the example of the gentlemen of that port in their demands for gold coin) to make application for several millions of shares.

CALCUTTA THEATRE COMPANY.

THERE is usually a lamentable deficiency of public amusement in Calcutta—once the gayest and most hospitable of cities. At present a convulsive effort is being made to raise a Theatre Company, with a capital of Rs. 1,00,000, in 1,000 shares of Rs. 100 each. This is a moderate enough proposal, and in times gone by the shares would have been all purchased in a single day. There is no occasion to build an entirely new theatre. There is one already called the St. James's Theatre, which may be purchased on very reasonable terms, and enlarged and improved at a comparatively small cost. It is desirable that the building should answer not only all theatrical purposes, but be made suitable for a ball-room or a concert-room, or for a flower show. Already two operatic companies from Australia have expressed a desire to engage the theatre for a season, and it is supposed that if its accommodation be widely advertised, all sorts of Servants of the Public who provide for its amusement will be ready to avail themselves of the use of the house.

REMOVAL OF A BRITISH AGENT AT MUSCAT.

THE British Agent at Muscat was removed from his post under rather peculiar circumstances. It is above all things necessary that those who represent the predominant Power in India should set an example of political honour. The Agent at Muscat was removed for an alleged breach of faith, and he well deserved the disgrace if the charge was proved. Syud Thowanee is the recognised Sovereign of Owan. But, like the Turk, he could not bear a brother near the throne. He looked on his younger brother, Syud Toorkee, as his rival and his enemy. There was no love lost between them. At last the enmity came to an open rupture, and a civil war was threatened. To avoid this evil the British Agent persuaded the reigning brother and the rebel brother to consent to an amicable interview in his (the Agent's) presence. The British Agent pledged his word as the local representative of his Government that no advantage should be taken of the rebel brother, Syud Toorkee, and the Sovereign of Muscat endorsed the pledge. On the day fixed for the interview, the Sovereign appeared with such a formidable force of cavalry and artillery, that Syud Toorkee took fright and absented himself on the plea of illness. Thereupon the British Agent at once withdrew his pledge of security, and permitted the Sovereign of Muscat to arrest his unhappy brother. The British Government on this removed the Agent, and appointed Major Malcolm Green to succeed him. The Sovereign was then compelled to restore his kidnapped brother.

HACKNEY COACH REGULATIONS IN INDIA.

WE noticed some time ago a proposed Act for the regulation of hackney carriages or ticks gharees, as they are called in India. That Act was for Calcutta. Another Act of the same character is now under consideration for Bombay. Amongst the provisions of the Bombay Bill are the following:—No one is to let out a carriage without a licence; all licences are to be renewed annually; fares are to be regulated by Government officers; a fine of twenty rupees is to be imposed on any driver who conceals the number of his vehicle; in default of payment the man is to undergo two months' rigorous confinement; for refusing a fare or loitering, or for overcharge, or for plying off the stands, the fine is twenty rupees, or two months' imprisonment. These are rather stringent terms; for twenty rupees is a very large sum to the class of men who drive ticks gharees. A Calcutta paper, though edited by a very able and well-practised writer, makes an odd addition to the rules. "Drivers," he says, "are enjoined to keep themselves clean and sober, as also their conveyances, under a heavy penalty." Are the drivers obliged not only to keep themselves sober, but to look after the sobriety of their carriages? The ticks gharees have by no means a sober aspect. They are apt to sway from side to side. They are generally rickety, rackety, and top-heavy. We do not mean to play the critic with our esteemed brother editor. Those who live in glass-houses should not throw stones. Editors of papers are exposed to be unfairly judged by slips of the pen and errors of the press, for which few readers make any allowance, and we know what it is to write in haste at the last moment when the printer's devil imperatively demands more copy. We have no time then to think of Lindley Murray. And, by the way, we may take this opportunity to hail the great and favourable change in the prospects of the Hurkaru, and to congratulate its new editor on what he has already so happily accomplished for the paper and for himself. He has our hearty good wishes for his continued success. He announces, we observe, a Sunday number of the Hurkaru, to be devoted partly to local and original articles, but chiefly to the best papers, literary and political, obtainable from the London periodicals. This will fill up a blank, and be a great boon to Mofussil subscribers to the daily paper, because to them the one blank newspaper day of the seven days of the week does not always fall upon the Sabbath. The Sunday paper will be received on different days of the week at different stations.

TEA AND COTTON CULTIVATION IN INDIA.

WE quoted in our last week's Summary a remark of the Bengal Hurkaru, to the effect that tea plantations were just now the most popular investments in the Indian market for superfluous capital. We rejoice at this news on many accounts; but we trust that we may fairly consider that cotton cultivation is also a popular investment, and that the two great sister interests, tea and cotton, will now advance together and be equally protected and encouraged. In the advertisement columns of our last number there were welcome signs of this harmonious progress in the form of two long and elaborate proclamations, one of a new Indian Tea Company and the other of a new Indian Cotton Company, both just started in London, under favourable auspices. If these companies should succeed to the extent that is anticipated, they will not only fill their own coffers satisfactorily, but indirectly contribute to the public treasury, and be national benefactors. We have just received an additional illustration of the fact that the two great commercial and agricultural interests under consideration are now duly appreciated, and are in no danger of languishing from neglect, in the form of a work of great importance and utility, by Dr. W. N. Lees, a well-known Oriental scholar, who, though he may not perhaps be a high authority as an agriculturist or a botanist, is at all events entitled as a man of great general intelligence and much local experience to be listened to with respect on any subject connected with the soil and climate of India, and the character of its population. Besides, let the author's own opinions be taken at their real worth, and be that either high or low, the book has still an intrinsic and independent value as a mere history of the introduction of the Chinese tea plant amongst the Himalaya mountains, and of the discovery of the genuine tea shrub as a wild indigenous plant in Assam, only requiring careful and scientific cultivation to rival or even to surpass the best tea plants of China, and, as embodying in addition, a vast amount of very useful information respecting the cultivation of cotton in different parts of India.*

Though Dr. Lees speaks his mind very freely and fearlessly on matters connected with the proceedings of the public authorities of India, we have certainly gathered from his "History of the Tea Plant" materials for forming a far more favourable opinion respecting what has been done for India by the local Government in the development of its resources—in one direction at least—than we had heretofore entertained. With respect to the tea experiments,—in the first instance, at the sole expense of the State, and under the superintendence of intelligent Government officers,—nothing could be more creditable than the zeal displayed by all the local authorities and the great liberality subsequently exhibited towards all private speculators, amongst whom seeds and plants were gratuitously distributed with a lavish hand.

Some slight experiments in Indian tea cultivation were made long before the time of Lord William Bentinck, but Dr. Lees is of opinion that these ought not to detract from the honour due to the master mind and patriotic zeal of that distinguished statesman, who, seeing the great advantage that would accrue to India from the introduction of the tea plant, and impressed with the firm conviction that the climate and soil were suitable to it, set on foot inquiries upon the subject, and sketched out a plan for carrying out the object in view. But Dr. Lees goes too far in favour of Lord William Bentinck when he awards him the merit of having made two great discoveries; first, that the tea plant would grow in many parts of India; and, secondly, that it was indigenous to Assam. These discoveries had been made by others, but he was the first of our local Governors who turned them to practical account. He appointed a Committee, called the "Tea Committee," whose duty it was to collect information on the subject. Amongst the members of it were Dr. N. Wallick, Mr. R. D. Mangles, and Sir Charles Trevelyan,

* The book bears on its title-page the names, as publishers, of W. H. Allen and Co., of 13, Waterloo-place, London, and Thacker, Spink, and Co., of Calcutta. It comes, we believe, from an Indian Press. Dr. Lees has also published a most useful compilation of the Resolutions, Regulations, Despatches, and Laws relating to the Sale of Waste Lands and the Immigration of Labour in India. It should be in the hands of every settler and intending settler.

the late Governor of Madras, and now our Financial Minister in Bengal. His lordship subsequently sent Mr. Gordon to China, to procure seeds and plants, and intelligent Chinamen experienced in all the operations of tea-planting and tea-making. Lord William Bentinck was one of the best of Anglo-Indian Governors, though, when it was first announced that he was to be Governor-general of India, Jeremy Bentham wrote out to a friend in Calcutta that India was to have a ruler that had not opened a book for many years. But he had read human nature pretty closely, and had made himself practically acquainted with all matters of great public interest. He had a clear, calm, sagacious intellect, and was a thoroughly honest and well-meaning statesman.

Most of the earlier experiments in tea-planting, both in the Himalayas and in Assam, were unsuccessful, but Anglo-Saxon energies and enterprise are not easily balked. The success in Assam has been most triumphant. Nearly 14,000 acres are now actually under cultivation, bearing last year an estimated crop of 1,788,737 lbs. of tea, and affording employment to 16,611 daily labourers. There are now in Assam one hundred and sixty plantations, owned by sixty companies and individuals. It was discovered in 1855 that the tea plant is indigenous, not to Assam only, but to Cachar also, and upwards of 6,000 acres have already been brought under culture there, and the produce has been pronounced quite equal to the tea of Assam. The plains of India are not well suited to the European constitution, but fortunately the tea plant flourishes most in those localities which are most congenial to the constitution of the British settler—on the tops or the slopes of hills that may be regarded as sanitarias. Some of the teas of the plantations in the Himalaya mountains have fetched high prices, even in India.

There has lately been an influx of small capitalists and settlers in the districts of Kumaon, Gurwahi, Simla, and Kangra. These chiefly consist of retired officers of her Majesty's Royal and Indian armies, and others still in the service. The teas of the Kousannie concern, in Kumaon, were awarded a medal at the Exhibition of 1862, and pronounced "excellent in manufacture, strength, and flavour." It is gratifying to find that even the natives are beginning to speculate in tea plantations, and that princes and nobles are setting the people a good example, for the Maharajah of Cashmere, Rajah Lall Sing, the Rajah of Noorpoor, and many others of equal rank, have established tea gardens, and exhibited the utmost zeal in their superintendence. Cotton is advancing almost as rapidly as tea. Mr. Bazley, of Manchester, lately reported of some cotton grown from Sea Island seed on the banks of the Mutla river, that it "was a most excellent and beautiful cotton."

We may fairly calculate that we shall not much longer be dependent on America or China for our teas or cottons, and that both India and England will be enriched by our Eastern plantations to an extent that will excite the envy and wonder of the whole world. The British in India have had enough of military glory in that quarter, and it is now time to develop the resources of the land; to turn our swords into ploughshares; to improve and elevate the native mind; and to cultivate all the arts of peace.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

SALE OF WASTE LANDS IN INDIA, AND REDEMPTION OF LAND TAX.

Mr. H. SEYMOUR moved a resolution, "That the occupation of waste lands in India by settlers, and the redemption of a portion of the Land-tax of India, are desirable objects, especially with a view to the present state of the cotton industry in this country; and that it is expedient that her Majesty's Government take further steps to carry them out." He argued that the Land-tax of India was a heavy charge upon the soil; that such a joint ownership between the State and the proprietor checked the accumulation of capital, restricted its flow, and interfered with improvement; that if the Land-tax were done away, the large expenditure upon public works, which was attended with evils, would be unnecessary, and that a larger amount would be expended by the owners of the soil. He fortified his argument by the testimony of Indian officers, who were of opinion that the measure would, moreover, have a tendency to ameliorate the condition of the agricultural classes, and be attended by indirect moral advantages to the native population. He referred to the despatch of Lord Stanley in 1853, recommending the measure; to the general concurrence it had met with in India, and to the proclamation of Lord Canning to the same effect. He then subjected to a severe criticism the despatch of Sir C. Wood of July, 1862, cancelling, he said, that of Lord Stanley—a despatch which, he thought, must have been written by an old East India director. He condemned the rules which Sir C. Wood had substituted for those prescribed by Lord Canning for the sale of waste lands, especially the auction system and the imperfection of the tenure; and inferred, from a case which he cited, that Sir Charles had infused an illiberal spirit into the employes of the Indian Government. He adverted to the vast quantities of waste land, of the most fertile character, in various parts of India, particularly in the Terai, a tract at the foot of the Himalayas, where are the remains of the cultivation of former periods; and he insisted, therefore, that there was enough of this land for any number of European settlers, whom the rules of Sir C. Wood were, he said, calculated to deter. In a great cotton-growing empire like India the supply of cotton, which had increased in other countries, had rather decreased, the Government having denied to this culture the encouragement given in one of our colonies. His object in this motion was, he said, not to prefer an indictment against Sir C. Wood; but he could not shut his eyes to a state of things in India which was not satisfactory.

Mr. SMOLLETT viewed the policy of Sir C. Wood in a different light from that in which it had been placed by Mr. Seymour. He thought the alterations of Lord Canning's proclamation made by Sir Charles were founded in a just and liberal spirit, not departing from, but confirming, the principle of the proclamation. The outcry raised against the amended rules for the sale of waste lands came, he said, from a set of land-jobbers; they had given the utmost satisfaction to the natives of India. On the subject of the sale of waste lands he thought the proposed measure was a faulty one; that in the plains, as regarded the settlement of Europeans, it would be inoperative; and with regard to the redemption of the Land-tax he believed it was utterly impossible, in the present state of India, to be carried out.

Mr. BUXTON defended the amended rules for the sale of waste lands, and gave credit to Sir C. Wood for having ratified the scheme, though he dissented from his views as to the redemption of the Land-tax.

Mr. VANSITTART made some remarks upon the state of the law of contract in India, approving the modifications of the rules for the sale of waste lands.

Lord STANLEY expressed his regret that the two subjects embraced in the resolution—namely, the redemption of the Land-tax and the sale of waste lands, were not separately presented for discussion.

With regard to the former he had been, and still remained, of opinion that a very considerable number would not avail themselves of the opportunity to redeem the tax, yet that it was most important to offer encouragement to that step. He compared his own plan with that of Sir C. Wood for dealing with the Land-tax, and stated his reasons for still preferring his own. As to the other subject, the sale of waste lands, he believed the quantity of these lands was practically unlimited, and the question was how best to open them to Europeans or natives, and whether it was best done by Lord Canning or Sir C. Wood. He did not blame the latter for expressing his opinion of the rules promulgated by Lord Canning; but he thought Sir C. Wood was wrong in delaying his revision of them. If a change was to be made the very earliest notice ought to have been given. He then explained wherein he agreed with, and in what respects he differed from, the modifications made by Sir C. Wood in the rules laid down by Lord Canning, and his reason for so doing.

Colonel SYKES said, though without certain boundaries there was much vacant land in India, within them the quantity was much more limited than was supposed.

Mr. J. B. SMITH suggested some modifications of the rules derived from the practice of the American Government.

Mr. AYRTON denied that the ownership of the land in India was in the Government; on the contrary, he asserted that the native occupiers of the land were the owners of the fee simple of the land they occupied. He was satisfied with the despatch which Sir C. Wood had sent out to India.

Sir C. WOOD began by vindicating himself and the Indian Government from the charge of neglecting to encourage the growth of cotton in India, appealing to documents before the House, to which Mr. Seymour had abstained from referring, which proved the contrary. With regard to the sale of waste lands, he had approved, he said, the whole of Lord Canning's resolutions, with only two exceptions, and he justified his overruling an act of the Indian Government in which they had been legally wrong, and had acted in excess of their authority. In dealing with waste lands it was to be remembered, he observed, that there were three descriptions of lands called waste, to which different incidents attached; and he defended the regulations he had directed to be observed in their disposal—surveys and sale by auction, entering into very full details respecting the description and quality of the lands sold, and the prices obtained for them. Large quantities of land, he observed, lay waste or uncultivated, which the Government had no power to sell, it being the property of a zemindar or a village community. The love of the people of India for their land was inconceivable. If there was any thing more than another that would alienate them it would be a feeling that we were trifling with their rights of property. With respect to the redemption of the Land-tax, he agreed with Lord Stanley that, up to a certain point, there was no difference between them. He certainly objected to the sacrifice of a large portion of the Land-tax—a tax which had existed in India from time immemorial, and was acquiesced in by the whole population. There was, he observed, at present, a mode of virtually redeeming the tax.

Mr. SEYMOUR withdrew his motion.

MADRAS RAILWAY COMPANY.

The half-yearly meeting of this company was held on Friday, May 7, at the London Tavern; Lieutenant-General D. Sim in the chair.

The Chairman, in moving the adoption of the report, said that in May, 1862, the main line from Madras on the east coast to Beypoor on the west coast had been completed for traffic, the length being 406 miles. Since that time the line had been worked with great regularity and without accident of any kind. The works on the Bangalore branch had made good progress during the past half-year. Large masses of rocks had to be blasted and removed, and heavy embankments constructed through the pass to the table land of Mysore. The difficulty of the work had been increased by the scarcity of labour, owing to sickness and the prevalence of fever and cholera, but those difficulties had to a great extent been overcome. It was expected by the chief engineer that the Bangalore line would be ready for traffic about this time next year. It passed through a very rich and fertile district to Bangalore, which was the principal military station of the south of India. The traffic on this branch was expected to be considerable, and would be beneficial to the existing line. The gross traffic on the main line showed an increase of £27,841 as compared with the corresponding half of the previous year, and it was quite as much as could be expected. The present traffic afforded no criterion of what the receipts would be when all the branches and extensions were completed and in operation. The cost of maintenance was rather more than one-third of the whole working expenses; this was caused by the rapid decay of the wooden sleepers on the eastern portion of the line, and the substitution of iron sleepers in their place. This heavy charge would gradually diminish as the decayed sleepers were removed, and the advantage of the iron sleepers came into operation. It was hoped that a more equitable arrangement would be made with respect to this heavy charge for renewals, which would in future afford some considerable relief to current revenue. They had on the North-West line a length of forty-one miles open for traffic, which was laid entirely with iron sleepers, and was maintained at a cost of not more than one-third of that incurred on the main line. There were heavy works on the pass leading to Cuddapa, the difficulties of which had been increased by scarcity of labour arising at certain seasons from the prevalence of cholera and fever. The line, it was expected, would be finished to Cuddapa in about twelve months. The works beyond Cuddapa had been suspended for some time at the request of the Government, in order to determine as to whether the line should form a junction with the Great Indian Peninsular Railway at Moodgul, as originally proposed, or at Hyderabad, as now proposed. The works had since been resumed between Cuddapa and Gooty, from which point the line could be continued either to Moodgul or Hyderabad, as might be determined.

Mr. Arbuthnot, in seconding the motion for the adoption of the report, congratulated the shareholders on the improved prospects of the undertaking. The traffic was increasing satisfactorily, and the improved condition of the finances of India was a very gratifying matter. The great trunk lines of railway in India would soon be completed, and it would be necessary still further to accommodate the country right and left by making roads and light railways from the large towns and important districts to the trunk lines.

Some discussion ensued as to the policy of charging higher fares for third-class passengers than those originally insisted on by the Government, in the course of which it was explained that where the higher rate had been charged for third-class passengers the number travelling had been reduced, but the receipts had been considerably increased. The number of second-class passengers had increased, and also the receipts.

Resolutions were passed adopting the report, and re-electing General Sim, Mr. Walker, and Mr. G. Norton, the retiring directors, and also Colonel Smith, the retiring auditor.

A vote of thanks to the chairman and directors concluded the proceedings.

MISCELLANEOUS.

DRAFTS ON INDIA.—The bidding for Rs. 40,00,000 (£400,000) in bills on India took place on Wednesday, May 6, at the Bank of England. The proportions allotted were—to Calcutta, Rs. 24,00,000; to Bombay, Rs. 16,00,000; to Madras, nil. The declared minimum price was, as on the last occasion, 1s. 11½d. per rupee on Calcutta, and 1s. 11½d. on Bombay and Madras. The applications within the limits were for about 67 lacs. Tenders on Calcutta at 1s. 11½d. will receive about 70 per cent.; on Bombay, 1s. 11½d. about 57 per cent.; and all above these prices in fall.

THE PRINCE OF WALES'S LEVEE.—The following officers and gentlemen were among the presentations to his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, on behalf of the Queen, which took place at the levee on Wednesday last:—Lieutenant William H. Burton, on return from India, by General Sir F. Burgoyne; Lieut.-Colonel Boileau, on return to India, by Major-General Boileau; Lord Harris, on appointment as Chamberlain to her Royal Highness the Princess of Wales, by the Lord Chamberlain; Captain Hon. A. Harris, by his brother, Lord Harris; Surgeon-Major Thomas Thompson, by the Secretary of State for India; Lieutenant T. Coates, on return from India, by Colonel Custance; Mr. Daniel D. Dymes, of Madras, by Lord Harris; Rear-Admiral Sir J. Hope, on his return from China, by the Duke of Somerset; Mr. Albert D. Sassoon, by the Secretary of State for India; Lieutenant G. N. Saunders, by the Secretary of State for India; Lieut.-Colonel J. W. Carter, on return from India, by Sir C. Wood.

ORDER OF THE BATH.—(War Office, May 12.)—The Queen has been graciously pleased to give orders for the appointment of Lieut.-col. Reynell George Taylor, of the Bengal Army, to be an Ordinary Member of the Civil Division of the Third Class, or Companions, of the Most Honourable Order of the Bath.—May 15.—The Queen has been graciously pleased to give orders for the appointment of Major John Watson, v.c., of the Bombay army, to be an Ordinary Member of the Military Division of the Third Class, or Companions of the Most Honourable Order of the Bath.

APPOINTMENTS.—(Foreign-office, May 5.)—The Queen has been pleased to approve of Don Frederico Faque as Consul at Singapore.—(India-office, May 5.)—The Queen has been pleased to appoint William Holloway, Esq., of the Madras Civil Service, to be a Judge of the High Court at Madras.

SUICIDE OF AN INDIAN JUDGE.—On Friday evening, May 8, an inquest was held at Leamington on the body of Martin Richard Gubbins, Esq., who committed suicide early the same morning by hanging himself in a closet in his bed-room. It appeared that the deceased had been a judge of the Supreme Court of Agra, but was compelled to retire in December last, in consequence of severe ill health; since then he has been subject to extreme mental depression, and committed the rash act while temporarily residing with his brother, J. P. Gubbins, Esq., J.P., of Somerset House, Leamington. The jury found that he destroyed himself whilst in an unsound state of mind.

THE CEYLON LOAN.—The tenders for the £250,000 Ceylon Government Six per Cent. Debentures, the first portion of £1,000,000 to be raised for the construction of a railway from Colombo to Kandy, were opened on Wednesday, May 6, at the offices of the Agents-General for Crown Colonies. The total biddings represented £1,293,000. The minimum was fixed at 111, and the amount offered at and above that rate was £372,500. The tenders accepted ranged from £112. 1s. to £112. 5s. 6d.

THE INDIA FREEHOLD LAND COMPANY.—At an extraordinary general meeting of the India Freehold Land, Colonization, Trust, and Agency Association, held on the 15th inst., the resolution passed at the meeting on the 14th of April, in favour of the undertaking being wound up "voluntarily," was confirmed.

SCINDIA RAILWAY.—It appears that the down goods traffic on this company's line from Kotree, on the Indus, to Kurrachee, for the three months ending the 31st of March last, included 38,977 bales of cotton, 11,114 bales of wool, 134,175 bags of oil-seeds, 18,050 bags of grain, 14,439 bags of rice, 1,515 bales of flax and hemp, 49 truck-loads of rice in bulk, 7,328 bags of wheat, 7,093 bales of indigo, 13,315 bags of grain, 4,300 bags of saltpetre, 400 truck-loads of firewood, lime, &c., 58 truck-loads of military baggage and stores, and 50 truck-loads of railway stores. The cotton weighed over 5,000 tons, the oil-seeds 10,000 tons, and the remainder 10,500 tons, making together about 25,500 tons.

EAST INDIA COTTON.—From a parliamentary return just issued, it appears that in the month of January 28,362,335 lbs. weight of cotton, of the value of £1,468,078, were shipped from the port of Bombay; in the month of February, 23,588,454 lbs. weight, of the value of £1,237,557, were shipped from the same port.

THE "WATER LILY" has arrived from Kana-gawa, Japan, with 80,640 lbs. tea, and 12,000 bales silk.

LARGE ARRIVALS OF COTTON IN LIVERPOOL.—On Thursday, May 14, the ships Charger, Kildare, and Eliza Fry, arrived in Liverpool from Bombay. The Charger brings 4,877 bales of cotton, the Kildare 1,595 bales, and the Eliza Fry 4,544 bales. The ships Ketton, from Matamoros, and the Laura Ann, from Bermuda, both arrived in the Mersey on Thursday. These vessels bring between them about 3,000 bales of cotton.

INDIGO SALES.—At the public sales of indigo on the 13th May there was a general disposition on the part of importers to meet the wishes of buyers, and only a few unimportant parcels have been withdrawn. New indigo of medium quality sells at 4d. to 6d. per lb. under February rates; while old Benares and Oudes have declined 6d. to 10d. per lb. 562 chests were sold, 235 bought in, and 440 withdrawn. On the 14th, there was a fair competition for all descriptions of Bengal qualities, at about the rates current at the commencement of the series. 1,908 chests have now been sold, 825 bought in, and 1,041 withdrawn, leaving 5,038 chests to be offered.

ARRIVAL OF TROOPS FROM INDIA AT PORTSMOUTH.—The freight ship Adamant, 815, with Captain McCausland, 2nd Battalion, 11th Regiment; Lieutenant Teevan, 94th Regiment (on sick leave); Assistant-Surgeon Skinner, 92nd Regiment (preceding his regiment), has arrived at Portsmouth. Her dates are Calcutta Dec. 25th, Cape Feb. 18th to 25th, and Fayal April 21st.

A DISTRESSING CASE.—A very distressing case has within the last few days been brought under the notice of Mr. Elliott, at Lambeth Police-court. In the first instance a woman of colour, a native of Madras, applied to him for his assistance to procure her a passage to her native place, being left without the slightest means of subsistence, and, in fact, in a state of utter destitution. From her statement it appeared that a gentleman, who had been in the Indian army for some years, and who subsequently held a lucrative situation in that country as a barrack-master, had resigned his appointment to come to England to recover a sum of several hundred pounds due to him in this country. On his way he hired the applicant at Madras, and she left her husband and five small children to accompany the gentleman, his wife, and two children to England. In November last the vessel reached London, and the family, with applicant, went to lodge at Walworth. Whether the gentleman had been disappointed in recovering the money or not she could not say, but at all events it was apparent that he was wholly without means, and about the middle of last month deserted his wife and children, leaving them penniless; and had it not been for the extreme kindness and benevolence of the lady at whose house they lodged, and whose means were extremely scant, they must have starved. Mr. Elliott considered the case of the poor applicant was a most distressing one, and regretted very much he had not the power to assist her in getting back to her native home. This, however, was the season when families sailed for the East, and if some public notice was kindly taken of her unfortunate circumstances, some family might be found to employ her on the outer voyage. Since that application the wife, a native of India, the three children, and the mother of the gentleman, an old lady seventy-six years of age, have come before Mr. Elliott, their kind benefactor being totally incapable of keeping them longer; and the only thing the magistrate could do was to send them to the Newington workhouse, with a request that they might be treated with some consideration, and that the officer should look out for their natural protector.

MR. JOHN OLIPHANT has been appointed Assistant Private Secretary to Sir Charles Wood, in place of Mr. Waterfield.

EXPORT OF SPECIE.—The Ellora, for Bombay, which sailed on the 12th May, took out to Alexandria £39,500 in gold, and Bombay £17,200 in gold, and £8,000 in silver, making a total of £64,700.

THE EMPEROR OF CHINA'S SQUADRON.—The gun vessel, Kwan Tung, which left Falmouth on Monday night, May 11, for China, forms one of the squadron under the command of Captain Bernard Osborn, R.N., c.b. This ship was built of iron by Messrs. Laird Brothers, of Birkenhead; is 600 tons, paddle, engines 150-horse power; has ram stern, is double plated, brig-rigged, and fitted with all the modern improvements; carries an armament of six guns, including a 32-lb. Whitworth, and a picked crew of ninety men.

FORGERY.—A genteelly-dressed man, of about thirty-five years of age, who gave the fictitious name of Henry Dawson Slade, charged with feloniously forging and uttering the endorsement of Sir Frederick Slade and Herbert Dawson Slade to a bill of exchange for Rs. 300, with intent to defraud the Bank of Hindustan, 16, Cornhill, was brought up for final examination at the Mansion-house Police Court, on Wednesday, May 6, when the depositions were completed, and the prisoner was committed for trial.

DENTAL SURGERY, 9, GROSVENOR-STREET.

MR. EPHRAIM MOSELY'S IMPROVEMENT in the CONSTRUCTION of ARTIFICIAL TEETH, GUMS, and PALATES, on an INDIA-RUBBER BASE, are secured by Letters Patent, dated December, 1862, whereby the continual outlay of new teeth is avoided, alterations from the absorption of the gums, or any other cause, being easily remedied, and the first outlay no greater than for ordinary kinds. The extraordinary results of this application may be briefly noted as under:—It consists of one continuous piece of Prepared India-rubber. The Artificial Teeth present a uniformly even surface to the action of the tongue, preventing lodgment of food and all secretions, so much complained of in the present system. No gold or any other metal being required, sharp edges are avoided, a greatly increased freedom of suction is supplied, a natural elasticity hitherto wholly unattainable, and a fit perfected with the most unerring accuracy, are secured; while, from the softness and flexibility of the agents employed, the greatest support is given to the adjoining teeth when loose or rendered tender by the absorption of the gums. The acids of the mouth exert no agency on the prepared india-rubber; and, as it is a non-conductor, fluids of any temperature may be retained in the mouth, all unpleasantness of smell and taste being at the same time provided against by the peculiar nature of its preparation.

FIRE DEPARTMENT.

The Company now stands, in point of revenue, seventh on the list of fire offices in the United Kingdom.
Insurances granted against fire at home, in the colonies, and most foreign countries.

FOREIGN RISKS.—The Directors, having devoted great attention to this branch of insurance, are enabled to offer unusual advantages as regards rates of premium and conditions, and a discount is allowed to merchants and others effecting their own and correspondents' insurances.

LIFE DEPARTMENT.

(REDUCED RATES FOR THE EAST INDIES AND CHINA.)

The Directors have recently adopted a new system of Rates for the East Indies and China, by which the insured, instead of being subjected to a heavy extra premium during the years of his residence within the Tropics, has the option of throwing the same over the whole currency of his insurance, by paying an unchanging rate, which it will be seen is very little higher than that charged for residence in Europe.

The following are specimens of the new Rates for civilians:

FIRE! THIEVES! FIRE!!!

C. H. GRIFITHS having purchased nearly all the best quality of Fire-proof Safes from the International Exhibition of 1862, including those made by Messrs. Perry, Chatwood, Rhodes, and other eminent makers, is enabled to offer them at half the original cost. The patented improvements of the latter maker render it an impossibility for fire to take any effect under any circumstances of time and place. In consequence of the increasing demand for these essential and valuable repositories, which no house of business, or, indeed, private house (where plate, books, and documents are kept) should be without, in these hazardous and dangerous times C. H. G. has taken additional premises, 3, Pentonville-road, opposite the Angel, Islington, where he also intends to keep a variety of Second-hand Safes by those eminent large makers, Milner, Price, Morlan, &c., at half the price of new. Sketches, with prices, free by post.

MR. HOWARD, Surgeon-Dentist, 52, Fleet-street, has introduced an entirely new description of ARTIFICIAL TEETH, fixed without springs, wires, or ligatures. They so perfectly resemble the natural teeth as not to be distinguished from the originals by the closest observer. They will never change colour or decay, and will be found superior to any teeth ever before used. This method does not require the extraction of roots, or any painful operation, will support and preserve teeth that are loose, and is guaranteed to restore articulation and mastication. Decayed teeth stopped, and rendered sound and useful in mastication. 52, Fleet-street. At home from Ten till Five.

TENDER & DECAYED TEETH STOPPED with ANODYNE CEMENT, which instantly allays the most violent pain, and fills up cavities, however large, and answers where every other kind of stopping has failed. Prepared only by Mr. ALFRED JONES, Surgeon-Dentist to their late R.H. the Princess Augusta and Duchess of Gloucester, the late Louis Philippe, and the ex-Royal Family of France, 64, Grosvenor-street, Grosvenor-square. At home from 11 till 4. No connection with any person practising in the same profession.

TEETH and PAINLESS DENTISTRY.—Messrs. LEWIN MORELY and SONS, 30, Berners-street, Oxford-street, W., direct attention to their GUM-COLOURED ENAMELLED BASE FOR ARTIFICIAL TEETH, GUMS, &c., specially commended at the International Exhibition—Class XVII., No. 3,556. Single Teeth, from 5s.; Sets, from Five Guineas.—For the successful result and efficacy of their system, vide "Lancet."

PRICHARD'S AROMATIC STEEL PILLS stand unequalled for restoring vigour to weak and relaxed constitutions, and have been proved to be the best medicine ever offered to the public. To those who are suffering from languor and exhaustion occasioned by a residence in hot climates, these Pills will be found particularly beneficial. They give energy to the muscles and nerves, strength to the stomach, and completely renovate the system, so that the patient is astonished at the effects produced.

Prepared by W. PRICHARD, Apothecary, 65, Charing-cross, London. In boxes 1s. 1d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., and 11s. May be had of all Medicine Vendors.

RUPTURES.—BY ROYAL LETTERS PATENT.

WHITE'S MOC-MAIN LEVER TRUSS is allowed by upwards of two hundred medical gentlemen to be the most effective invention in the curative treatment of HERNIA. The use of a steel spring, so hurtful in its effects, is here avoided, a soft bandage being worn round the body, while the requisite resisting power is supplied by the MOC-MAIN PAD and PATENT LEVER, fitting with so much ease and closeness that it cannot be detected, and may be worn during sleep. A descriptive circular may be had, and the Truss (which cannot fail to fit), forwarded by post, on the circumference of the body two inches below the hips being sent to the manufacturer.

SARSAPARILLA.

WILKINSON'S (late BRIDGE'S) ESSENCE OF FLUID EXTRACT OF RED JAMAICA SARSAPARILLA is appreciated for its Purity, and marked superiority, daily prescribed by the Faculty for Impurities of the Blood, Affections of the Liver, Constitutional Debility, Attenuation of Body, as an Alterative Medicine at the Changes of the Seasons, and for freeing the system from the effects of Mercury.

In India and the Colonies it is extensively used to prevent taking complaints incidental to Tropical Climates, and as a renovator of the system after Sickness is invaluable.

"A superior preparation, that may always be relied on."—Sir Astley Cooper.

"We are in every respect satisfied with it."—Lancet.

"We recommend your Sarsaparilla as the best."—Medical Review.

"Latterly, in consequence of much debility, &c., subsequent to Cholera, I have freely used 'Bridge's Sarsaparilla' myself, with complete benefit and success."—J. Poett, F.R.C.S.

Sold in pints, half-pints, and quarter pints. One pint is equal to eight pints of the ordinary preparations.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.—The public are cautioned against cheap preparations of Sarsaparilla, which, instead of being what they profess, are nothing but a decoction of common herbs, sweetened with molasses, and flavoured with American Winter Green. The genuine has "Thos. Wilkinson (late Bridge and Co.), 270, Regent-street, London," engraved on each bottle.

AGREEABLE SEIDLITZ POWDER in one bottle, protected by a case with measure and spoon included. This preparation is highly recommended, not only as a Mild Aperient, but to allay Fever, Thirst, &c.

AROMATIC TINCTURE OF QUINODINE for the prevention of Fever, Intermittent or Remittent Ague, and other effects of Malaria. No person exposed to the influence of or predisposing cause of Fevers should be without it, for if taken in small doses daily the system will become so thoroughly impregnated with its principles as to be rendered proof against all attacks of Contagion or Malaria. Sold in pints, half-pints, and quarter-pints.

The above articles prepared only by Thos. Wilkinson (late Wilkinson, Bridge, & Co.), 270, Regent-street, London, W.

KEEP AWAY THE DOCTOR is an old saying. People follow the advice, and ensure a good state of health by the simple and cheap process of taking PARR'S LIFE PILLS, which may be used with confidence in all cases of sick headache, indigestion, bilious, liver, and stomach complaints, habitual constiveness, nervous affections, &c. In most cases the sensation of illness vanishes after two or three Pills have been taken. May be obtained of any medicine vendor, in boxes, 1s. 1d., 2s. 9d., and in family packets 11s. each.

KEATING'S PERSIAN INSECT DESTROYING POWDER.

For which a Prize Medal was awarded to the Producer at the International Exhibition, 1863.

THIS POWDER is quite harmless to animal life, but is unrivalled in destroying Fleas, Bugs, Flies, Cockroaches, Beetles, Gnats, Mosquitoes, Moths in furs, and every other species of insect.

Sportsmen will find this an invaluable remedy for destroying Fleas in their Dogs, as also Ladies for their Pet Dogs. It is perfectly harmless in its nature, and may be applied without any apprehension, as it has no qualities deleterious to animal life.

Sold in packets 1s., 2s. 6d., and 4s. 6d. each, or post free for 14 or 36 postage stamps, by THOMAS KEATING, Chemist, 79, St. Paul's Churchyard, London, E.C.

Take notice each genuine packet bears the above name and address. See "The Field," October 7th and 9th, pp. 263, 283, and 294.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT and PILLS.

CHEST COMPLAINTS.—The propriety of disturbing the nervous and vascular system in pulmonary maladies by administering internal medicines was long questioned before Professor Holloway was enabled to prove the practicability of relieving over-gorged lungs and restoring their natural action by external means. His Ointment thoroughly rubbed upon the walls of the chest twice a day gives the utmost security and comfort in influenza, acute and chronic coughs, bronchitis, pleurisy, stitches in the side, shortness of breath, and palpitation. The weakest may safely try this remedy, and will find that they have not staked their hopes on an uncertainty, or frittered away most valuable time in fruitless or injurious experiments. Moderate doses of Holloway's Pills are sometimes advisable.

THE POLISH CAPTIVITY:

An Account of the present Position and Prospects of the Poles in the Kingdom of Poland, and in the Polish Provinces of Austria, Prussia, and Russia.

By H. SUTHERLAND EDWARDS, Author of "Russians at Home."

"A portion of this book on Poland by Mr. Sutherland Edwards has already appeared in our columns, though apparently such a small portion that it is substantially a new as well as a highly opportune production."—The Times, April 2, 1863.

"Mr. Sutherland Edwards not only understands his subject, but what is far more important and uncommon, his readers. He tells his audience precisely the facts which they are desirous to know. The 'Polish Captivity' is full of light but suggestive sketches, pieces justificatives of historic value, national songs and stories, descriptions of Polish towns, Polish notabilities, and Polish women, and is, besides, a book an English lady might read with twice the ease of Mr. Trollope's latest novel."—Spectator, March 28, 1863.

"The book in which Mr. Sutherland Edwards has depicted the 'Polish Captivity' would have been valuable at any time, but the opportuneness of its arrival so enhances its merits, that it is certain to command a greater than ordinary success. It is a subject which few writers are competent to deal with, but Mr. Edwards possesses special qualifications for the task. Personal experience has made him well acquainted with Poland and the Poles; the interest he takes in their fortunes has led him to study the question of their wrongs with zeal and assiduity, and his acquaintance with Slavonic languages enables him to make use of stores of information which are unobtainable to the ordinary student. Consequently, he is entitled to speak with authority, and his opinions on the condition, feelings, and prospects of the various nations which he describes deserve a very different hearing from that which we should give to the crude theories formed by a careless traveller passing hastily through an unfamiliar land."—London Review, March 28, 1863.

"Mr. Sutherland Edwards visited Poland in the interval between the Warsaw massacre and the breaking out of the insurrection. What he saw he has described simply, but forcibly. Few English writers are so likely as he to form a correct judgment on any matter connected with Russia or Poland. His acquaintance with each of these countries, its people, its language, and its literature, gives him advantages which few other travellers possess. In wandering with him about the streets of Warsaw, we feel that we are in the hands of a trustworthy guide, one who can tell us what the people are chattering about, and who can explain the written mysteries which, under the veil of an unknown tongue, elude our baffled eyes. Mr. Edwards's book will be read with deep interest. It is well written, and the narratives are well constructed."—Athenaeum, March 21, 1863.

MAILS TO INDIA.

Mails to India and China, via Marseilles, are despatched from London as follows, viz.:—Those for Bombay packets, on the evening of the 3rd and 18th of each month; and those for Calcutta packets (including mails for Ceylon, Madras, and China), on the evenings of the 10th and 26th of each month. When any of these dates falls on a Sunday, the mails are made up on the following evening.

Letters and Newspapers can be forwarded to any part of India, via Bombay and Marseilles, and in most cases will reach their destination some days sooner than if despatched by the following Calcutta mail. The Bombay mails via Southampton, however, are no longer available for the transmission of Letters or Newspapers to the Madras Presidency.

Mails for the Mediterranean and all parts of India and China, except the Bombay Presidency, are despatched via Southampton on the mornings of the 4th and 20th, or, when either of these dates falls on Sunday, upon the previous evening.

Mails for the Mediterranean, the Presidency of Bombay, and Upper or North-West Provinces of Bengal and China, are despatched via Southampton, on the 12th and 27th of the month, except when these dates fall on Sunday, in which case they are forwarded on the previous evening.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

THE Viceroy's progress terminated on the 4th of April, when his Excellency made his entry into Simla.

The Governor of Bombay left his Presidency on the 18th of April on his way to Kandalla and the Mahableshwar hills.

On the 16th of April the inhabitants of Bombay met to propose addresses on the marriage of the Prince and Princess of Wales. There was to be a brilliant illumination and grand fete on the 1st of May in honour of the Royal marriage.

Sir Charles Trevelyan was to have his Budget ready by the 29th of April. Sir Charles is losing some portion of the popularity that attended him on his first arrival in the City of Palaces. People complain that he is too much of a Paul Pry, or busy-body. He makes his way into every public office, like a hungry lion seeking whom he may devour, recommending dismissals of public servants, and retrenchments of salaries in all directions. Lord Byron tells us that "quiet to quick bosoms is a hell," and certainly Sir Charles Trevelyan seems a "lord of unrest," and ever impatient of a smooth repose. No tropical sun can reduce his energies to a state of languor. He has got into a dispute with Sir Barnes Peacock by referring off-hand the settlement of questions to the High Court, as if it were an establishment wholly subordinate to the officers of Government. Sir Barnes Peacock tells him that he should go in his doubts and difficulties to the appointed law officers of Government. The matter has been referred home to the Secretary of State for India. There is even an idle rumour—a straw which shows the direction of the wind—that Lord Elgin is going down to Calcutta to check Sir Charles Trevelyan's eccentricities. Sir C. Trevelyan has placed during the last month the sum of one crore of rupees at the disposal of the bank authorities for the purchase of Government securities at the market rates. The above-mentioned papers are to be purchased in the names of the financial secretary and the accountant-general conjointly. A portion of the securities have already been purchased.

The Government of India has sanctioned the grant of a gross allowance of Rs. 500 a month to the family of the Sarun Rajah for life, their estates having been confiscated by Government for taking part in the late rebellion.

Captain Richard Paget Campbell Jones (he has names enough), of the 4th Battery, 14th Brigade of Royal Artillery, has been tried by court-martial at Umballah on seven different charges, and sentenced to be cashiered. The sentence has been approved and confirmed by the Commander-in-Chief. He was acquitted of four of the charges, but pronounced guilty of the remaining three. The chief charge proved against him was that of having misapplied some public money entrusted to him as commanding officer of the Battery.

The final order for the abolition of the Indian Navy was dated Bombay Castle, April 22, 1863. The sentence is accompanied with a very flattering official testimony to the services of the Indian navy as "most varied, honourable, and useful." It is acknowledged to have done successful war services in Burmah, China, and Persia, and to have distinguished itself by the repression of piracy and the slave trade. Every officer will receive one grade of honorary rank to have effect from April 30 last.

There is a rather interesting case, reported by this mail, of a supposed lunatic of the name of Samuel Eldred, who was accused before a Mr. Vans Agnew, magistrate of Saharunpore, of breach of trust and embezzlement of Rs. 4,000. Before the case was decided, Eldred was supposed to have exhibited symptoms of insanity, and he was accordingly sent down to Calcutta, and placed in the lunatic asylum at Bhowanipore, in charge of Dr. Payne, the superintendent of that establishment. In Dr. Payne's opinion, the man was perfectly sane, and he reported that fact to Government. No notice was taken of his report, and the poor fellow remained for two months in the asylum. At last he applied to the High Court for a writ of habeas corpus, and Sir M. L. Wells did not hesitate to say that the Government had been unmindful of its responsibilities and duties on this occasion. The solicitor for Mr. Eldred was advised to serve a motion upon the solicitors for the Crown to show cause why he should not be discharged. The next day the said solicitors appeared, but they gave no satisfactory reason for the long detention of Mr. Eldred as a lunatic. Sir M. L. Wells granted their application for permission to send Mr. Eldred back to Saharunpore for the completion of his trial, warning them that if he was not immediately removed from the asylum he should give Mr. Eldred his discharge.

There was a grand ceremony attended with long and enthusiastic speeches of gratulation on the opening of the Bhow Ghaut Incline, on the G. I. P. Railway, on the 21st of April. His Excellency the Governor of Bombay and all his Staff were present on the occasion.

His Excellency made a long and appropriate speech, and then declared in the name of her Majesty's Government that the Bhoore Ghaut Incline was open and fitted for public traffic; on which the guns thundered forth a Royal salute. The line is now clear from Bombay to Sholapore. The Bombay papers occupy nearly ten columns of small type with the report of the speeches and proceedings connected with the happy and memorable completion thus far of a great and noble public work, that does so much credit to all concerned in its construction.

The interesting question of copyright in the case of Roussac v. Thacker, Spink, and Co., has been decided in favour of the defendants. Mr. Roussac seemed to fancy that he was entitled to a monopoly in the compilation of names and dates and general orders connected with the Indian services, and that no one else was to print such details. In mere directories different compilers must of necessity repeat each other's information. Most of the details are common property. It was easily and very clearly shown that "Roussac's Directory" was founded on that of Samuel Smith's "Directory" of 1858. In fact, it was but a new edition of that work. Mr. Roussac has gained nothing by his motion but some terrible bills of costs.

It is said that Assam is in by no means a satisfactory state. The Bhootias are again becoming restless, and the officers commanding detachments on the frontier have been required to be on the look-out.

The Cabul correspondent of the Delhi Gazette, under date of 29th of March, states that the Ameer had intercepted a messenger conveying a letter from the Shah of Persia to Sultan Ahmed Jan, sympathising with him, and promising to consult the three Powers with a view to inducing them to allow him to interfere. Another letter to Mahomed Ludeek Khan had been intercepted by the Ameer, from which it appeared that the plotting with that nobleman, which the Ameer had more than suspected, was still going on. The Ameer is still reported to be very ill, and indeed, there were rumours of his death.

Two hundred and seventeen miles of the Mekrah line of telegraph have been completed, and Lieutenant Stiffe has proceeded on his inspection in the territories of the Imaun of Muscat in connection with the establishment of telegraphic communication between Europe and India by the line of the Persian Gulf. It is intended to attempt the working of this line by a cable along the Gulf.

A Mr. Rundle having bought some waste land at Darjeeling at a Government sale, under Lord Canning's rules, was deprived of the land by the operation of Sir Charles Wood's subsequent modifications of those rules. Not willing to submit to this loss, he brought an action against the Secretary of State in the High Court of Calcutta. It was decided that Mr. Rundle must first sue in the Darjeeling Court, though he had the right of appeal to the High Court.

Large supplies of arms and ammunition have been sold by the British Indian Government to the imperial authorities of China, and now we learn that the insurgent Taepings have been obtaining similar supplies from Singapore. The matter has been brought to the notice of the Secretary of State for India. The war on the Eastern frontier is quite at an end.

The rebels were coming in by hundreds and laying down their arms. A small force is to be still kept up for a time to secure peace and order in the Jynteah and Cossyah hills. All India is now in a state of profound peace.

Mr. Nott, the barrister, has come to England, to bring the supposed wrongs and claims of the Nawab Nazim of Bengal before Sir Charles Wood and the British Parliament. Mr. Nott was employed in the case of the Mysore princes.

We regret to notice the death, at Surat, on the 25th ult., of Colonel G. R. Grimes, in command of the 12th Bombay Native Infantry. He had only recently returned to India from furlough.

We regret to announce the death of the Hon. Frederick A. H. Chichester, one of the senior clerks in the India-office, after an illness of some duration. This vacancy will cause the promotion of Clements R. Markham, Esq., at present private secretary to T. G. Baring, Esq., M.P., to a senior clerkship.

Monday, April 20, was a general holiday in Calcutta, that day being fixed upon for a commemoration of the marriage of the Prince and Princess of Wales.

BENGAL.

RUNDLE v. SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL.

The very luminous and elaborate judgment delivered by Sir Mordaunt Wells in the case of C. S. Rundle v. the Secretary of State in Council clearly defines the province of the ordinary original civil jurisdiction of the High Court. The suit in question, it will be remembered, was instituted against her Majesty's Secretary of State for India for the specific performance of an agreement. Acting upon Lord Canning's resolutions of the 17th October, 1861, Mr. C. S. Rundle applied for and obtained a grant of 500 acres at Kinchington, in the Darjeeling territory, for which he paid to the superintendent of that district the sum of Rs. 1,250, being at the rate of two rupees eight annas per acre. In Dec., 1862, however, this same lot of land was advertised for sale by public auction, in pursuance of instructions received from the Home Government, and in the following month of January was knocked down at the rate of Rs. 25 per acre. The purchaser was Mr. Rundle himself, who was naturally reluctant to lose the entire value of the money he had already expended in improvements, though he took care at the same time to protest against this arbitrary interference with what he was entitled in equity to consider as his own property. Following up this protest, Mr. Rundle prayed the High Court to restrain the Home Government from enforcing payment of this second purchase money, and to call upon it to furnish him and his heirs for ever with a proper title to the estate paid for by him in hard cash in January, 1862. The facts of the case were not disputed, but a doubt arose as to the legal jurisdiction of the Court. Under the old system, an action would unquestionably have laid in the Supreme Court as against the East India Company, but the jurisdiction of the High Court is confined within considerably narrower limits. The Secretary of State, as representing the Government of India is, of course, liable to be sued either in this country or in England, but only in "such Court or Courts as may have jurisdiction in respect of each particular cause of action." Now, it so happens that the land in question is actually situated beyond the local limits of the ordinary original civil jurisdiction of the Court; and, further, the defendant cannot be said to be carrying on any business, or to be working for gain within those limits, as is required by Section 12 of Act XXIV. and XXV. Vic., Cap. 104. Neither can it be supposed that, because Government is ubiquitous, its representative is liable to be sued in any court most convenient to a plaintiff. Moreover, Section 12 of the Letters Patent was intended to supersede and cancel the charter of the Supreme Court, and not to supplement it. The criminal, the testamentary, the intestate, and the Admiralty jurisdictions formerly exercised by the Supreme Court were expressly conferred upon the new court, and therefore by implication it follows that the same extent of civil jurisdiction, on the equity and plea sides, was purposely withheld. But although the High Court cannot take cognisance of this suit in the first instance, an appeal will lie to it from the Subordinate Court; or the plaintiff, if he be so minded, can remove to that court as a court of extraordinary original jurisdiction a suit he may have previously instituted in the proper court at Darjeeling.

What may be the amount of costs in this action one shrinks from contemplating, but it seems to us that it is a case in which they should rather be borne by the Landholders' Association than by an individual, however rich or self-sacrificing he may be. Every European holder or occupier of land throughout the country has an interest in the judgment elicited from the High Court by the spirited line of conduct pursued by Mr. Rundle in this matter. We merely throw out the hint for the consideration of those whom it chiefly concerns.—Bengal Hurkaru, April 13.

ROUSSAC v. THACKER AND OTHERS.

Have any of our readers waded through the elaborate judgment passed by Sir Mordaunt

Wells on the copyright case lately pleaded before him? Five columns of small type, it must be owned, do not present much attraction for men who are engaged all day in business, whether of an official or mercantile character, and still less for those who have leisure to indulge their taste for light and sparkling literature. And yet there is something in that repulsive-looking document which will well repay the trouble of perusal. It is valuable, if for nothing else, as illustrative of the infinite pains taken by English Judges in general, and by Sir Mordaunt Wells in particular, to arrive at a thorough knowledge of every question brought before them, under all its bearings. The task of comparing so many works devoted to dry and uninteresting details, in order to detect technical differences or plagiarisms, would be no light work in any climate or country, and in Calcutta must have tested to the utmost the patience, the sagacity, the mental application of the learned Judge. In after years, when looking back upon the salient points of his Indian career, Sir Mordaunt Wells will hardly be disposed to mark with white chalk his Easter vacation of 1863.

The suit in question was instituted by Mr. Roussac, in the name of the Bengal Printing Company (Limited), to restrain Messrs. Thacker, Spink and Co., from selling "Thacker's Post-office Directory, and to recover Rs. 10,000 damages for alleged piracy from three books respectively entitled "The New Calcutta Directory" for 1862, "The New Quarterly Alphabetical List" for October, 1862, and "The Almanack Diary" for 1862. These books are the property of the Bengal Printing Company, and the plaintiffs charged the defendants with having made use of their private materials to compile the smaller directory, to punish and suppress the sale of which was the object of this suit. The evidence adduced on either side occupied the exclusive attention of the Court for five whole days, during which seventeen witnesses were examined and forty-five exhibits put in. To arrive, however, at a really just and satisfactory conclusion the Court was compelled to reserve judgment until a more careful comparison could be made of the respective directories of the plaintiffs and the defendants, together with sixteen books of various denominations, from which both alike had derived their so-called original matter. The result of this investigation satisfied the learned Judge that Roussac's Directory of 1856—the groundwork of the others—was itself largely pirated from Samuel Smith and Co.'s Directory for 1855, in the compilation of which Mr. Roussac had himself been engaged as a hired assistant. And yet after thus availing himself of the information acquired while in the service of another directory proprietor and publisher, he now pretends to "claim a monopoly in a book which is in a great measure the result of the industry, enterprise, and capital which Samuel Smith and Co. bestowed in the preparation of their directory for a quarter of a century." A case standing on such a shifting and unsubstantial basis was clearly doomed to fall as soon as the facts were fairly grasped by the judicial mind, and the learned Judge concluded in the following words his very careful analysis of the entire mass of evidence on both sides:—

"The publication of Thacker's Directory may be prejudicial to the plaintiffs, but the question I have to determine is, has there been an invasion of the plaintiffs' legal or equitable rights? and I feel myself bound to make answer in the negative. The plaintiffs are now seeking to establish a monopoly in respect of a directory compiled for the most part from information collected and published by other parties from an early period down to the present time. The classification and arrangement of the 'Bengal Directory and Annual Register of 1855' 'on a new and improved plan,' which was published by Mr. Smith, is almost identical with that of the plaintiff. I have also looked through 'Smith's Directory for 1858,' and I have no difficulty in saying that Roussac's is nothing more nor less than a new edition of Samuel Smith's book, with additions and improvements as it may appear. Mr. Roussac, at the hearing of the suit, strongly asserted his claim for protection in respect of the 'table of distances' and the 'postage rates,' although it appears that the former was copied verbatim et literatim, with the exception of a few additions, from the 'East India Calendar,' and that the latter was obtained from the Calcutta Post-office. Can it be seriously contended that for the future the Queen's subjects in India are not to be allowed to receive information on such subjects except through the medium of Roussac's Directory? Of course, if the plaintiffs are entitled to restrain the defendants from selling the new directory, the proprietors and publishers of many other useful publications will be placed at the mercy of the plaintiff; and, considering that from the beginning to the end of the plaintiffs' directory there is not a single line of original matter, the strongest evidence of 'piracy' and 'servile imitation' by the defendants or their agents could alone induce me to decide against the defendants' right to publish their directory. I cannot help thinking that the establishment of a monopoly in such a work would cause considerable inconvenience to the public. As the population of the large and important cities in India increases, local directories will be requisite, containing such information as 'Postal Distances,' 'Postage Rates,' a list of 'Calcutta Banks, and Other Institutions.' And yet if the plaintiffs are entitled to an injunction in this case, it would establish their right against all future publications of the same character, and as regards the other Presidencies, the proprietors of directories might be assailed for having pirated Roussac's Directory."

The Court then dismissed the suit, with the heaviest costs that can be given, and wound up with a graceful compliment to Messrs. Bell and Doyno, the counsel engaged in the case.—Bengal Harkaru, April 11.

OUR FINANCIAL POSITION AND PROSPECTS.

Another opium sale, to yield another half million to the revenue, and Sir Charles Trevelyan will, in the second or third week of April, produce the Budget of the new financial year. Modifications of the Customs duties and of the Income-tax may safely be anticipated as not the least interesting of its features. And to prove that Government mean to keep faith with the public by abolishing the latter two years hence, if not before, we can see no objection to at once relieving the poorer classes by raising the minimum of annual incomes on which the tax may be levied to a thousand rupees from five hundred as at present; and even by imitating Mr. Gladstone in taking twopenny off the pound, or reducing the percentage from four to three. This would at least be a fair instalment of the relief which the honest middle-class payer of the tax eagerly expects, while it would not rudely devalue the revenue by throwing a million and a quarter sterling to the dogs. Sir Charles Trevelyan might go farther, and, using the present income-tax returns, classify all wealthy dealers in money and merchandise, so as to raise from them fixed sums which could be paid into the treasury as the land revenue is.

It will be a disgrace to our Government if, when political reasons can no longer be assigned for the exemption, the wealthiest classes of natives, embracing 150,000 out of 150,000,000 at the utmost, are allowed to go scot free. The shroff, the mahajun, the banian—the Income-tax apart—contribute no more to the taxation of the country than the menial on wages of ten rupees a month. They use the same amount of salt and even less clothes; we question if they contribute as much to the customs duty; they virtually escape indirect taxation. Yet in peace and security these classes heap up wealth by the luxurious and oppressive arts of the middleman. They suck the blood of the agricultural classes. The whole expensive machinery of our Government seems to exist only for them. They command the Courts, for they are able to bribe the omrah. It will be the statesmanship of folly which will tax the poor man's salt, land, justice, and luxuries so as to raise from him four-fifths of a revenue of forty-four millions sterling, while the really rich man, whose wealth our rule alone has created and daily protects, escapes. We admit the hardship of the Income-tax on the honest and the industrious. But let us not, in our haste to abolish it, do them and the millions of India an injustice equally great. Above all let us not do so on the plea of the oppression and political danger of a tax which, without new returns, now falls on only a few thousands of the very class to whom revolt would be destruction. Sir Charles Trevelyan has learned wisdom since he wrote his Madras protest. All that was true in that protest has been met by his predecessor's act which raised the minimum to incomes of five hundred rupees a-year. Let Sir Charles abolish the unjust double Income-tax, which was protested against from the first, and, if he will, raise the minimum to incomes of a thousand rupees. If he goes much farther the very class of honest payers of the tax who now demand its abolition will regret it, when they see the whole Government of British India kept in existence for a few thousand wealthy natives who pay nothing for its support. The zemindar, the clerk, and the coolie are all interested in this question, for on their shoulders, on their land, luxuries, and salt, the burden will fall. The abolition of the Income-tax, without a substitute, means the transfer of taxation from the dishonest rich to the industrious, struggling middle class and poor.

One of the best authorities on Indian finance in England declares that the accounts of the year about to expire will show a deficit instead of an equilibrium, as Mr. Laing expected. The writer is correct, for the "Revised Estimate" lately issued in Calcutta for 1862-63 has been cooked according to Sir Charles Wood's orders. The revenue has been very much better than Mr. Laing estimated, but the expenditure has increased in equal proportions, and the loss by railway exchange represents the deficit the existence of which Sir Charles Wood has insisted on proving to save his consistency for once. This will be evident on a comparison of Mr. Laing's estimate with the Revised estimate. Looking first at Revenue, we have the following results:—

	Mr. Laing.	Revised.
Land, Sayer and Alkaree...	21,588,000	22,372,500
Assessed taxes ...	1,383,100	1,645,000
Customs ...	2,475,000	2,120,000
Salt ...	5,054,700	5,450,000
Opium ...	6,300,000	7,102,500
Stamps ...	1,850,000	1,580,000
Mint ...	257,100	330,000
Post-office ...	480,000	430,000
Electric telegraph...	70,700	75,000
Law, justice, and police ...	493,000	522,500
Marine ...	200,000	180,000
Public works ...	650,000	627,500
Miscellaneous ...	450,000	410,000
Military ...	800,000	800,000
Interest ...	33,000	45,000
Tributes and contributions (included in the revised estimate under land) ...	685,200	—
	£42,971,800	£43,990,000

Thus the revenue of the present year is £1,018,800 more than Mr. Laing estimated, the increase being chiefly in land, excise, salt, and opium. Looking at expenditure we find:—

	Mr. Laing.	Revised.
Charges against income, under treaties, and the cost of salt and opium ...	8,983,100	9,335,000
Army ...	12,200,000	12,400,000
Public works ...	4,262,000	4,260,000
Salaries, &c. ...	1,203,000	1,210,000
Law and justice ...	2,100,000	2,210,000
Police ...	2,051,100	2,100,000
Education, &c. ...	500,000	506,000
Political agencies, &c. ...	187,300	200,000
Retired allowances, &c. ...	658,800	650,000
Miscellaneous ...	208,600	210,000
Civil contingencies ...	118,100	120,000
Interest ...	3,367,100	3,400,000
Loss by railway exchange	—	375,000
Charges in India ...	£36,329,100	£37,490,000
Charges in England ...	4,961,986	5,191,432
Interest on railway capital	1,500,000	1,500,000
	£42,791,086	£44,181,432

The result is that, whereas Mr. Laing estimated he would receive £42,971,800 and spend £42,791,086, he would now receive £43,990,000 and spend £44,181,432. So as to leave a little surplus of £179,814, he received £14,481,432. But as Sir Charles Wood insisted on including the two items of expenditure we have italicised—loss by railway exchange, and home charges to the amount of half a million more than is fair to India—and as our improved financial position led the Indian Government to spend more on the administration than before, Sir C. Wood will be enabled to assert, without contradiction by the ignorant, that the past year has been one of deficit after all. We have said "more than is fair to India." Will it be believed that he refuses to allow the Budget of the expiring year to take credit for £150,000 entered by Mr. Laing as due for the charges of the late China expedition, and for £79,448 due from the War-office for advances here on account of England? By a financial juggle, to which Sir C. Wood has forced the Indian Government to become a party, the year 1862-63 is represented as with a deficit of £491,432 instead of with a surplus of £413,034 thus obtained:—

Revised revenue of 1862-63	£43,990,000
Deduct expenditure, omitting railway loss and charging for money due by England for China, &c.,	48,576,986

Surplus of 1862-63 ... £413,014

Or if we concede that the railway loss should not be reckoned in the cash balances, then the year would still end with a small surplus. We are curious to see how Sir Charles Trevelyan will deal with the expiring year. Whatever may be his opinion as to the railway loss, we are assured he is too honest a statesman not to give an account of the half million that England owes India for an expedition which closed so long ago as two years. It belongs by right to the year 1862-63, and honour is more valuable than the consistency of the present Secretary of State for India.

As to the coming Budget, that has in favour of a large surplus the decreased expenditure which will follow on the abolition of the Indian navy; on the contemplated reorganisation of public departments, which actually cost half-a-million more than the previous year; and on the absence of such military expenditure as gratuities to disbanded men, which should reduce the cost of the army to twelve millions. On the other hand, there is the normal increase of revenue which may now be put at a million sterling annually, the little pickings from the sale of waste lands, and the investment by Government in its own securities with the currency cash, while the increasing receipts of railways should diminish the amount of guaranteed interest. The cash balances are about twenty millions sterling, but there seems little doubt that they will be employed to pay off the £4,820,000 of debenture debt which matures next September. We should, however, prefer to see that debt consolidated. On the whole, our prospects seem bright. They justify the marvellous enhancement in the price of Government Securities, which is shown by Four per Cents. at one and a-half, and Five-and-a-Half per Cents. at twenty premium, a result no other nation can boast of.—Friend of India.

WILKINSON V. ISSURCHUNDER DAY.

The inconvenience of conducting business of any kind in a loose and careless manner is sufficiently illustrated in the recent case of "R. E. K. Wilkinson v. Issurchunder Day." The facts may be briefly told. Mr. Wilkinson, acting in a friendly way for Mr. Roussac, on December 17 last, instructed Mr. Duff, the broker, to dispose of forty-four shares in the Bengal Printing Company (Limited). As Mr. Roussac was, at the time of the transaction in question, the secretary of that concern, it was clearly impossible for him to appear in propria persona as the principal, without serious detriment to the value of the shares. This circumstance, however, is altogether episodic, and does not in any way affect the real merits of the case. On receiving his instructions, Mr. Duff looked around him for a likely purchaser. It so chanced that, as he was leaving the Oriental Bank, he met the defendant, a broker like himself and with whom he had had previous transactions in the way of joint brokerage. Aware that, although himself a poor man, he had several native clients of wealth and respectability, Mr. Duff offered him one-half of the usual brokerage fees if he would assist in disposing of these shares. The defendant replied that he was acquainted with a native named Kartickchunder Bural, who had expressed a wish to buy some shares in the Bengal Printing Company, but that he would not return from Hooghly before the afternoon. For himself, he continued, he was suffering from fever, but would send his nephew Sreenauth Dutt to mention the matter to his client, and if the answer were in the affirmative would communicate it to Mr. Duff without delay. It was also understood that if Kartickchunder Bural declined to have anything to do with the shares at the price named, the matter fell through of itself without any necessity for further correspondence between the two brokers. The shares were declined, and the defendant accordingly considered the affair altogether terminated. His surprise, therefore, may be imagined when, on the 24th of the same month, or exactly a week afterwards, he received an intimation from Mr. Wilkinson that, unless he immediately accepted delivery of fourteen Bengal Printing Company's shares, they would be resold at his risk and charge. Though confined to his bed by fever, he instantly wrote to Mr. Wilkinson entirely repudiating all interest in these shares, and explaining that he was only a broker for other people and not a speculator on his own account. After this he heard nothing more of the matter until the 31st January, when a letter from Mr. Carrapiet, the attorney, was put into his hands, dated the 5th of that month, requiring, in the course of that day or the following—that is, on the 5th or 6th—payment of the sum of 714 rupees, being the difference between the value of the fourteen shares on the 17th December and on the 2nd January. Again did the unhappy defendant deny all connection with the Printing Company or its shares, but with no other result than that of finding himself sued at law for the amount of loss sustained by the original proprietor of the shares through his alleged neglect to take them up. The case came before Sir Mordaunt Wells, who gave judgment in favour of the defendant after a very careful and impartial hearing of the evidence on both sides. Such is a simple outline of the main facts of the case, but there are one or two points which appear worthy of special consideration.

A most culpable irregularity and indifference to the ordinary practice and forms of business mark the conduct of all parties to this transaction. As a bank manager, one might surely have expected that Mr. Wilkinson would have required Mr. Duff to furnish him with some sort of an acknowledgment from the reported purchaser of the shares, in default of which it is clearly against Mr. Duff that he should have proceeded to indemnify himself against the loss occasioned by the non-acceptance of those shares. He seems, however, to have been perfectly satisfied with his broker's verbal declaration, notwithstanding the emphatic contradiction of the assumed purchaser. Then, there is no proof that the defendant himself took any trouble to come to an explanation with Mr. Duff, after receiving Mr. Wilkinson's notification. And with regard to Mr. Duff himself, we are sorry to say that he comes out of the affray with anything but flying colours. He would have us believe that he sold these shares to a native broker, with whose residence he was unacquainted, and that he was unable to exchange with him the usual memoranda, because the latter failed to keep an appointment at the Bonded Warehouse. All this time, however, he was aware that the defendant's address was known at the Mercantile Bank, and that he had nothing to do but to apply for it. If this be his usual mode of transacting an agency business, we can only say that he shall never have any to transact for us. Small matter for marvel was it that the learned Judge should have severely condemned such culpable irregularity. A lax mode of doing business is one of the strongest temptations to dishonesty, and one would think that no man with a nice sense of honour would incur the shame of being ever suspected of an impropriety. In London, we believe, brokers who are also speculators on their own account are looked upon with a very natural, if not always a perfectly just, suspicion. A middleman, one who is trusted by both parties to a transaction, cannot be too careful to act with the strictest regard to forms. He is by his very position liable to be suspected by one party or the other, if not by both, and the faintest breath of such suspicion is fatal to his successfulness as a broker. The remarks made by Sir Mordaunt Wells on this subject should bear good fruit if properly laid to heart, and the commercial world of Calcutta may well be grateful to him for his condemnation of the loose and slovenly mode of doing business exemplified in the course of this trial.—Bengal Hurkaru, April 9.

MISCELLANEOUS.

ANARKULLEE.—Lahore, April 5.—Great doings here just now upon the Punjab Railway, which is going ahead with a vengeance. The inhabitants of Umritsur and Lahore are exchanging all possible sorts of civilities with one another, and seem to be rejoicing that the days of the Ekkas, the "one-hoss shays" of the Punjab, are numbered. Special trains are the order of the day. Yesterday, to-day, and to-morrow bring the good natives of Umritsur in here to be present at a grand Mela in the Gholinair gardens, and on the 9th no less than five special trains beyond the usual ones are to convey the Lahorees to Umritsur to another grand tamasha at that place, but for what purpose, whether for pleasure or barter, I cannot say. Verily this railway is working wonders, and the great civiliser is held in the highest possible esteem by natives of all castes. A few short years and not a shadow of caste will exist along the great lines which are being constructed. The weather here has been very variable of late—hot in the days, cool in the nights,—the consequence of which is that sickness is prevalent here to some extent; bronchitis mostly among children, some of whom have been carried off, I hear, in Anarkullee; and fever and dysentery, not fatal though, at Mean Meer. With the exception of the railway, everything is relapsing into a state of stagnation. The grain crops have turned out very well this year; gram especially seems to be flourishing, though I fear rain would ruin it just now, as it is but half ripe and will take another fortnight or so to gather in.—Hurkaru, April 13.

RAJMAHAL AND ITS SIGHTS.—I was yesterday a witness to the Châ-et Festival, a sort of Indian "May-day." It was celebrated on a large maidan or plain, to the west of the railway station, a mile distant, by a large concourse of natives. Some sahebs, and one or two mems, made up the outside lookers-on. To the native community it seemed a general holiday, without distinction of caste or station, from the Zemindar to the coolie. The usual restrictive policy of Asiatics to the "fair" was also set aside, and wedlock and padlock had ceased to be synonymous, a number of Eve's daughters, "dark but comely," being of the throng. The choice of attire, male and female, lay in strong colours—red predominating. Elephants, horses, mules, and covered carts, with more or less gay caparisons and trappings, hung with little bells, formed part of the scene. In the vicinity of a ruined Mosque were arranged a lot of booths, and shameenahs or awning, some of a plaid pattern, red and white, others a light blue ground, set off with silver paper, &c., &c., and all prettily festooned with flowers—the eaves drooping pendant with imitation clusters of flowers, corn sheaves, painted shells, and gems. The amusements consisted of running races, a game something like "prisoner's base," called "Kubbuddee," and kite-flying; principally the last, in which young and old joined with equal zest; the kites being of different patterns, colours, &c., fantastically decorated with long silver serpents twined, for tails; rosettes at the shoulders, &c., &c. Add to all this the enjoyability of a clear blue sky, and the balmy breath of a cool delicious evening, and my reverie was natural, endeavouring to realize to my mind's eye the time when Rajmahal was a "place of kings," and her sovereigns and nobles came forth, in all their barbaric pomp, to celebrate, perhaps on this very Maidan, the Festival of "Châ-et."—Hurkaru, April 18.

BANK AT LUCKNOW.—The branch of the Bank of Bengal, at Lucknow, was opened for business on the 8th of April, under the management of Mr. Carberry.

CRIME IN OUDE.—Few of the criminal trials reported in the Indian journals are so interesting as those of Oude. In one case, for want of evidence, Colonel Abbott, the Commissioner of Lucknow, could not convict the murderers of a girl aged eleven for her ornaments. The circumstances of the case are very terrible, showing how in a small native society one of its juvenile members can be carried off and murdered for a few trumpery ornaments, in broad daylight, with small chance of detection. Four days after the disappearance of the child, at night, a neighbour was awoken by dogs barking, and found the body of the child, over which the dogs were fighting; they had torn the flesh from off the face. The throat had been cut by a blunt knife. In giving evidence one precocious youth, of four or five years of age, declared his father and uncle killed the child with a knife, and when the Judge did not understand some expression he used, he said, with contempt for the knowledge of the Bench—"What, don't you know what a burria is?" and explained that it was a hole into which rubbish is thrown. In another case a new born infant was found dead in a well by a villager. The Chowkedar at once sent a Dye to inspect all the widow women in the village, and the third person inspected was the prisoner, who showed unmistakable signs of recent parturition. The prisoner is a widow, and had several children by her marriage. This child she admits to be illegitimate, born to a Brahmin, whose name she will not mention. One of her sons, who sleeps in the same room with her, testifies to a child having been born at night, to having heard it cry; to his mother having twenty minutes after birth taken it out, and twenty minutes after that returned, saying the child was dead. The prisoner admits this to be her illegitimate child, admits not having taken usual precautions to preserve life, to not having called in assistance as she did for her legitimate children, but denies that she threw it down the well alive; admits that she threw it down after it was dead to hide her shame. She was sentenced to ten years' rigorous imprisonment. The widow system of Hindooism is as fruitful a source of crime as poisoning.

AN AWKWARD AFFAIR.—When the celebrated Robert Hall was remonstrated with upon sometimes suddenly leaving off in his sermons, because he had reached the limits allotted by him to their length, he replied that his desire was that the people should rise from the service with an appetite. Whether our contemporary had a similar intention or not, we cannot pretend to say; but the following paragraph, which appeared in the Times of Friday, just whets an appetite which it does not satisfy:—"An Awkward Affair.—A few days ago a small vessel, the Sphinx, arrived off this port, bound to the Malabar Coast for an oil cargo, for the purchase of which there was a considerable sum in gold on board. The captain landed in order to purchase provisions; during his absence on shore sail was made on the vessel, which was soon out of sight, leaving the captain at a loss how to proceed." We deeply sympathise with the unfortunate captain; but we presume that, as the news has reached Colombo in the above shape, it must have come from him, and from being at a "loss how to proceed"—he must have proceeded to declare the loss; and we hope that small profit will accrue to the thieves on board the Sphinx for their unwarrantable proceeding. The following version of the affair is from a correspondent:—"On Wednesday last a French vessel, called the Sphinx, bound, I believe, for Tutucoreen, for the purpose of purchasing a cargo of cocoanut-oil, for which there was a large sum of money on board, anchored outside our harbour, when the captain landed to fetch some provisions. During his absence the vessel made sail, and soon disappeared, leaving the unfortunate man in an awkward position. Telegrams were immediately despatched all round, giving information of this act of treachery on the part of the crew. The captain intends, I believe, proceeding to Mauritius."—Colombo Observer, April 17.

CHOLERA is raging at Benares and other stations in the North West Provinces.

BEYPORE, THE PORT FOR THE MADRAS AND BENGAL MAILS.—Calcutta will not be fairly linked on by railway to Bombay till the end of 1866. Are the two presidencies of Bengal and Madras to continue to receive and despatch their English mails in so irregular a manner as at present, when they have practically only one mail a fortnight? One plan we have already exposed as a monstrous job which will saddle all India with double rates of ocean postage. That is the proposal of the Peninsular and Oriental Company to run a steamer from Bombay to Aden to meet the Calcutta steamer, at a cost of at least £64,000 extra subsidy annually. Even this waste of money, affecting the poorest European in the country, will not prevent the present irregularity. A far superior and cheaper plan, for which too lifeless Madras should agitate, is that of sending the mails by Beypore. If a small swift steamer waits at Madras to convey them to Calcutta, the people of the capital will receive their letters two days earlier than by Bombay, and four days earlier than by Galle, as we urged three years ago. The question is not one of supposition, but of fact, allowing eighteen hours for the railway, and six for detention at Madras. The P. and O. Company ask a subsidy of £10,000 more to send the Madras mails via Beypore. But instead of paying £74,000 for two lines, which leave Bengal without the benefit of regular communication, the use of Beypore will give Bengal her mails two days sooner than by Bombay, and leave an interval of a week between the departures and the arrivals of the mails. The extra cost would be some £10,000 for a steamer to take one of the Bombay weekly mails to Beypore, and another £10,000 for the P. and O. Company's steamers from Suez to Galle to touch at Beypore, causing a detention of only one day to the shippers of cargo and the Chinese and Australian passengers. By arranging this call at Beypore the mails which now arrive at Calcutta about the 13th and 28th would reach on the 9th and 24th of every month, and those now departing on the 9th and 23rd need not leave till the 13th and 27th for Beypore, thus making a full week of interval in connection with the Bombay mails, which are despatched on the 5th and 20th. It will be a gross sacrifice of public interests if the Home Government have agreed to pay the P. and O. Company £84,000 so needlessly, and if they double the rates of postage to meet the folly against which the public protest. Till 1866 Beypore is the port for all India except Bombay and the Punjab.—Friend of India.

COTTON.—The publication of the trade returns of the United Kingdom for 1862 enables us to estimate the state of the cotton trade. For twenty years the following quantities of raw cotton were received:—

1844	646,111,304
1845	721,979,953
1846	467,856,274
1847	474,707,615
1848	713,020,161
1849	755,469,012
1850	663,576,861
1851	757,379,749
1852	929,782,448
1853	895,278,749
1854	887,333,149
1855	891,751,952
1856	1,023,886,304
1857	969,318,896
1858	1,034,342,176
1859	1,225,989,072
1860	1,390,988,752
1861	1,256,984,736
1862	523,973,296

This shows a falling off from 1860, the most prosperous year, of 866,965,456 lbs., or more than a whole year's supply previous to 1852. Still the supply was more than in 1847. Of the whole quantity in 1862 there were 510,449,072 lbs. from sources other than American, against 437,484,208 lbs. in 1861. Only 13,524,224 lbs. were sent from America. These figures are hopeful for India.—Friend of India.

MR. STALKART.—A case lately came before the police magistrate at Howrah which demands a few words of comment. A native servant of Mr.

W. Stalkart, while leading his master's pony along the public road and carrying his gun, was stopped by the local police and called upon to show his pass. As the pony was saddled with an English saddle, and the man explained that he was in the service of an English gentleman, the police must have been perfectly aware that no breach of the Arms Act was being committed. The syce, relying on the once magical influence of a European name, appears to have treated the police with considerable disrespect, and is even charged with having offered to show fight. This was clearly a mistake on his part, and the inspector is not much to be blamed for carrying him and his gun off to the thannah. Mr. Stalkart himself soon afterwards came up, and is said, very likely with truth, to have exhibited some loss of temper, and to have expressed himself in rather violent language. It would certainly have been more dignified and proper to have retained his self-command, and to have contented himself with bringing the matter to the knowledge of the commissioner of police, and there cannot be any doubt as to his having committed a very great blunder in following up his abuse by striking the nearest chowkeedar a smart blow on the head. He then wrested his gun out of the hands of the policeman who had taken charge of it, and was about to leave the spot, when the inspector suddenly closed with him and flung him on the ground. Springing to his feet, Mr. Stalkart is represented as having made good use of his fists, until he was overpowered by numbers and cruelly maltreated. It will be said, of course, that he had only himself to thank for the brutal punishment he received in the course of the affray, and that the police must be protected from violent assaults. The latter assertion we fully admit, and the magistrate did no more than his duty in fining Mr. Stalkart Rs. 50 for taking the law into his own hands. It is only fair and reasonable that magistrates should support the police in the discharge of their arduous and thankless duties, and neither Europeans nor natives must be permitted to constitute themselves the exponents of the law. But it is assuredly no part of the duties of the police to use their batons, except in self-defence; nor can it be tolerated that they should be allowed with impunity to strike men when on the ground, or have recourse to any more violence than is absolutely required to master a troublesome subject. In the present instance a posse of constables threw themselves upon a single unarmed man, and beat him so violently that he was obliged to call in medical assistance; and yet we do not find that the magistrate addressed one word of reproof to the inspector, or his ignorant and brutal myrmidons. But how would it have been had a native been thus violently assaulted by Europeans? How sternly would he not have rebuked the offenders, and reminded them that all men were equal before the law! But, as Mr. Laing justly remarks in his admirable pamphlet, when a quarrel supervenes between a non-official European and a native, the former is very apt to get less than justice, owing to the magistrate's over-anxiety to avoid any appearance of leaning towards his own countrymen.—Hurkaru.

BRANCH BANK AT NAGPORE.—Nagpore has made another step in progress, a branch of the Bank of Bengal having been opened at the close of last month, with Mr. Sterndale as agent. The residents have made some attempts to establish a newspaper. We regret to state that Mr. Temple's illness, caused by incessant work and exposure, still continues.

CAPT. FARQUHAR.—The certificate of Captain Farquhar, lately commanding the S.S. Colomba, has been returned to him by the Board of Trade. The chief engineer was blamed for not reversing the engines at once when the order was given.

MOULMEIN TIMBER AGENCY.—The staff salary of the new office of the agent for purchasing timber at Moulmein, to which Major R. Benson, of the Madras Staff Corps, was recently appointed, has been fixed at 700 rupees per mensem. The above expenditure is to be debited to the Imperial Government.

MESSSES AND BANDS OF EXTINCT REGIMENTS.

—The Government has notified in the Gazette that it has determined to afford aid to officers of extinct regiments towards the settlement of their liabilities on account of messes or bands, and has appointed Lieutenant Perreau to examine and pass the various claims that may be brought forward. Payment will only be made on the understanding that it is to be accepted as a full satisfaction of all claims "both against the regimental funds or property, and the officers personally."

THE METCALF HALL STRUCK BY LIGHTNING.

—During the severe thunderstorm that passed over this city on the evening of April 12, the Metcalf Hall was struck by the electric fluid, and seriously injured. A portion of the parapet wall was torn up, and the progress of the fluid is clearly traceable through one of the top windows, whence down the iron staircase, which is considerably injured, to the flooring on the ground, whence it escaped, leaving a blackened hole. Fortunately, being Sunday, no one was in the building.

THE FIELD FORCE on the Jynteah Hills being under orders for breaking up, the Honourable the President in Council has decided that Colonel Dunstond, C.B., is to receive the staff allowance of a Brigadier General, and his lieutenant that of a Brigade Major for the time those gallant officers were with the Field Force. His Honour has also sanctioned an extra doing-duty allowance to Lieutenant Peckenham, Adjutant of the 33rd Regiment N.I., for three months, subsequent to 1st September last, or the time he was employed with the above-mentioned force.

GREAT FIRE AT BHOWANIPORE.—A most calamitous fire lately took place in Bhowanipore, the southern suburb of Calcutta. It commenced at one o'clock, and, aided by the west wind, burned on till eight in the evening. It began in a hut, but at length reached the great wood stores on the banks of Tolly's Nullah, where it blazed forth in awful power. It extended a full quarter of a mile. It has destroyed between two and three thousand huts and shops, and between sixty and seventy brick houses of small size. Thirteen lives were lost, chiefly of women who had hid in the brick houses, and were at length unable to escape. A subscription is being raised for the poorer sufferers, headed by the Hon. Baboo Sombhumath Pundit, the native judge of the High Court, the missionaries of the London Society, and other residents. A fire so enormous in its area is very uncommon. The natives assert that the district has not suffered in this manner for a hundred years. It is the focus of the hideous Kallee Ghat superstition which gives Calcutta its name, according to some; and is the great depot for the produce with which the Eastern districts supply the native population of the city.

THE EPIDEMIC IN BENGAL.—There is the most ample evidence as to the extent and fatal character of this scourge, of whose continuance, however, we have heard nothing lately, so that it is to be hoped it has died out. In the last Education Report we find the epidemic thus adverted to by Mr. Woodrow, whose circle of inspection embraces the 24 Pergunnahs, Nuddea, and part of Zillah Hooghly:—"The declension in the total number by 400 pupils requires some remark. For the last few years, the increase has been so steady, that an interruption of the law of development causes surprise. The explanation in the present case is patent to all. An extensive tract of country containing a substantial portion of the division has been desolated by an epidemic fever of the most fatal type. The tract of land most affected by the pestilence lay in a general direction running from north-west to south-east. It is about ten miles broad and thirty miles long. Towards the northern extremity lie the large schools at Bansbaria, Trebani, Hallyshubur and Kancharipara, and towards the southern extremity those of Baraset and Nulcoora. All the people of Bansbaria, young and old, rich and poor, were laid up with the fever. At Baghati near Bansbaria out of an average number of 208 boys the attendance was reduced to forty-two at the latter end of October, and the school was then temporarily closed. At Kancharipara the schools were closed for several weeks. The secretary of the Hallyshubur Koomerhatta school described the state of that large cluster of Brahminical and Kayasth villages in the following terms:—"Not a house was to be seen which was not afflicted by the epidemic. Father, mother, and children lay crowding in one bed, none having strength sufficient to procure any medical assistance, or even to hand over a glass of water to the parched lips of their dying relatives. The whole village was in a state of mourning, nothing was talked of except the terrible effects of the epidemic, no cry heard but that of lamentation and distress' . . . 'During the months of October, November, and December deaths averaged about fifteen every day out of a population amounting to 18,000. In the middle of November to such a degree did the mortality increase, that the performance of funeral rites—a ceremony held so sacred by the Hindus—was dispensed with, and the bodies of the victims of the pestilence, which would at other times have been burnt with all the éclat of religion, were now seen floating in groups in the river, affording thereby hearty feasts to the ravenous beasts and birds. To avoid further ravage by the disease, many of the inhabitants, leaving their homes empty, fled with the wreck of their family to distant villages, expecting to be cured by the salubrity of the climate.' The school in consequence fell in attendance from 182 boys in June to 23 in December. Similar tidings of the ravages of the disease and of the consequent depletion of schools, were received from Baraset and Nulcoora, and from the villages along the course of the Sootiwer. The deputy-inspector considered this choked-up river as the reservoir of the malaria which desolated the district." The "choked-up river" is far from creditable to the Government of Bengal.—Phoenix.

PESHAWUR, April 18.—"Charming April weather, little or no sun, light showers daily; thermometer 71°, nights positively cold again, and murky and dark; the greatest activity shown by the demi-savage tribes around the valley, members of which visit the cantonment nightly, help themselves to pretty much what they choose, and are safe in their hill fastnesses by daybreak. About eight p.m. these daring robbers commence operations, and the sentries and chokeydars who are loaded with ball bang away at any object real or imaginary, but strange to say never succeed in hitting or catching a thief; it is more than possible that if any chokeydar dared attempt to capture and give up one of the hill thieves, that chokeydar's life would not be worth three days' purchase. I will relate you two cases of what the press would call 'daring robbery'; both have occurred within the last week. Captain Lumsden awoke at night, hearing some one in his bedroom, looked round and perceived one of these savages quietly examining the various articles in the house, aided by an oil lamp carried in the thief's hand; Captain L. could scarcely credit such audacity, and feared to use his pistol lest the intruder might turn out to be a servant of his establishment; the man, however seeing Captain L. spring to his feet revolver in hand, sought safety in flight; and as he emerged from the door, fired a pistol full in the face of Captain Lumsden; the ball fortunately missed and struck an opposite wall, while the man escaped entirely, carrying away a box of valuable property. Captain Soady hearing a horse's footstep in the garden before his house, went at once to his stable to see if his stud was safe; found the first stall empty, and in the dim starlight saw his favourite horse being ridden off at no indecent pace on the Michnee road. This is the style of thing here on every dark night. To close with one of these men, is to get severely wounded, or perhaps killed; rushing out from a bright light into total darkness as any of us might do, would be to place ourselves entirely at their mercy; and probably if one had the good fortune to rid the earth of one of these lawless murderers, a court of inquiry, or worse fate would be the consequence; but with a large military force such as exists in Peshawur, there is to my mind something detracting from our reputation in thus allowing our beads to be laughed at; besides which, few, save rich men, can sleep in peace, knowing property and horses are so entirely unsafe. Fancy such a state of things for a moment in Algeria, where military power is supreme. Why should we, say the French, manage these things better than we do; most assuredly they would check it, and so could we, did we choose; the remedies are simple. Stolen property or cattle can always be traced to a certain tribe—let that tribe reimburse the loser, or let us burn their villages. If the civilians are unable to stop these depredations by political measures, let General Haly have power to act as he may choose, and these robberies, degrading to our character as soldiers, will cease. —Delhi Gazette.

OFFICERS TO PROCEED HOME WITH INVALIDS.—

The Secretary of State, in a recent despatch to the Government of India in the military department, has restricted the number of officers to be allowed in future to proceed home with invalids and time-expired men from India according to the following scale:—From one to 30 men, there will be no officer in charge; from 30 to 60, one officer; 60 to 120, two officers; from 120 to 150, three officers; from 150 to 300, four; and from 300 to 500 men six officers. Sir Charles Wood has further directed that no other officers, except those who are under orders to proceed home on sick certificate, shall be appointed to the charge of the aforesaid men. This arrangement is expected to effect a considerable saving of public expenditure. In coming to the above decision, the Secretary of State has only concurred in the views expressed by the local Government of India, when a reference was made to it by the Bombay Government, some time ago, relative to the same subject.—Hurkaru, April 17.

LUCKNOW, April 20.—Among the numerous visitors in the past week who have been here and away again, I may mention, as more intimately connected with the interests of the province, Sir Arthur Cotton and Mr. Dyer, who have just left for Cawnpore after comparing notes regarding the long-looked for canal through Oudh. Mr. Dyer has taken all his levels between the Nepal frontier, a little beyond Birtapoor, in the Khyreegurh and this city, at which latter point he intends to join the waters of the Gurwa, Korealee, Sardah, and Chowika with those of the Goomtee. He has been hard at work during the past six weeks, completing, on an average, nine miles a day, and it is only urgent family matters which take him now suddenly to Calcutta on a month's leave. Captains Bingham, of the 8th Cavalry, and Wyse, of the 34th Native Infantry, with their families, have passed through en route to the Hills. Captains Vaughan and Gordon, of the 20th East Devonshire, have gone on to Baraitch in quest of sport, and of the other visitors I can only note the names of Captain Dartnell, and Lieutenants Clay and Cotton, of the 27th Inniskillings, as well as Captain Webster, of the 9th Native Infantry. Two barristers have recently attached themselves to the Lucknow Courts. One of them appeared in gown and bands the other day before Mr. Lincoln, the Extra Assistant Commissioner, who disposes of the small causes in our Civil Court. It was rumoured that the gentleman intended to appear in wig also, but so far spectators were disappointed. The other portions of his dress, however, attracted considerable attention and comment. One grave old Moslem gave it as his veritable opinion that as the gentleman wore a white tie, like the English Padrees, he was assuredly deputed from the Bench of Bishops.

THE GANGES CANAL.—Sir Arthur Cotton, the great enthusiast for navigable canals, is now at Roorkee, making calculations, our informant says, regarding the commercial value of the Ganges Canal, with the view of making an offer for its purchase on behalf of a joint-stock company with limited liability and unlimited faith in the excellence of the scheme as a remunerative speculation. This canal is worthless for navigable purposes, the current being so rapid that boats can with difficulty ascend, while the bridges are so low that boats laden with bulky articles cannot pass under them.

DELHI PRIZE MONEY.—The Prize Committee have decreed another issue of the Delhi prize-money, at the rate of either Rs. 30 or Rs. 24 each share, but which of the two figures has not been decided. This will leave still another issue to be made, which, we suppose, the owners will realise at "crack of doom." We are sorry to say that there is still due, and unrealised by Delhi Prize Fund, about a lakh and half of rupees, which is owing by purchasers at the auctions of prize property which were held in the city after its capture by our army. The greater part of this sum must, we fear, be put down to profit and loss account; but, as we suppose a considerable portion of it is due by British officers, it strikes us that there can be no great difficulty in recovering from them what they owe to the Delhi Prize Fund. If the sum due by such officers is of any considerable amount, we should be glad to see a general order directing all circle pay-masters to realise at once, and remit the sums recovered to the fund.

HEAD-QUARTERS OF THE ARMY.—Before 1863 has passed away, the head-quarters of Her Majesty's army in India will be established at Meerut and Mussooree: the political, strategical, financial and sanitary advantages of which arrangement have been made since his late visit to this part of the country, are fully appreciated by the Commander-in-Chief; and will by his Excellency be impressed on Government in one of those pithy minutes, which no man living knows better how to write with effect than Sir Hugh Rose. Not that it requires much force of reasoning to persuade men of sense that Meerut is the most eligible situation in India for the permanent head-quarters of the army. With a railroad to the foot of the Kijonawur Pass, and a good military road through that to Mussooree, the saving in the lives of European soldiers would, in a very few years, cover all the expenses caused by that effort of idleness, the Mohan Pass; where angels would have feared to make an attempt to make a road, fools are still rushing on to prove the old adage. The Adjutant-General's, Quarter-master-General's, and other offices will be moved to Meerut as soon as the committee for the examination of papers accumulated in the offices and the destruction of all useless papers, have done their work. Meerut will be the permanent head-quarters, from which light detachments will accompany the Commander-in-Chief in his tours, and to Mussooree in the hot weather.—Mofussilite.

TRAFFIC REPORT OF THE Umrtsur and Lahore section of the Punjab Railway (thirty-two miles) for the week ending 5th April, 1863:—

" for goods	180 10 0
Total	Rs. 5,071 14 6

THANNA TOONGRA.—Sir Hugh Rose, accompanied by Colonel De Salis, when passing through Mussooree on the 9th April, inspected Thanna Toongra, or Pokree, as it is sometimes called, with a view to form an opinion upon its adaptability as a military station. His Excellency expressed himself in strong terms of approbation. This site was strongly recommended as a military station by the late Sir S. Whittingham, when commanding the Meerut division in 1833.

THE 3RD N.I.—A letter from Lucknow of April 20 says "that the 3rd N.I. (late 32nd), under Colonel Nuthall, leave Seetapore to-day for this station, to take the place of the 34th N.I. A destructive fire took place at Seetapore last Monday night, and had it not been for the heavy rain (which has been general over the whole province) the whole bazaar might have been burnt down. The officers and men have been great sufferers by the fire, which destroyed a great quantity of their clothing, it having broken out in the dhoties' lines.

STRANGE OCCURRENCE AT SEA.—We have received the following account of a rather extraordinary addition to the danger of the seas, from Capt. Donovan; and his statement we have found by actual inquiry is corroborated by all the crew of the vessel. Extract of the log of the British barque Marys:—"Friday, January 9th, 1863, lat.

40.0 S. long. 66 E. at 2 p.m., a large whale attacked the vessel, and continued for two hours to strike us so heavily that we had all the feeling as if the vessel was on a shoal; upon two occasions it struck the rudder so heavily that it was in great danger of being unshipped, and from the appearance of large cuts on the back of the whale, supposed to be done by the copper on the ship's bottom, we have every reason to fear that the vessel has received great damage." The captain informed us that the whale came alongside, evidently with the intention of clearing the barnacles off his back; and this he managed so effectually that the dirt was seen to go astern in streaks, the vessel at the time going one and a half knots through the water. At least twenty musket balls were fired into him, and as he lay alongside, one of the men, named Lombardini, laying hold of a rope actually jumped on the whale's back, the whale taking no notice of his unusual visitor. All this time the whole crew were assaulting the whale with axes, adzes, crow-bars, and bayonets; part of one of the latter was left in his back, it having broken, the remaining piece was shown to us. The wounds from these instruments caused so much blood that the water was dyed for some distance around, and numerous sharks were playing about the whale. After about two hours he went off, apparently confused with the loss of blood. On arrival here several pieces of copper were found to be rubbed off the ship's bottom, she having just been coppered previously to her leaving England.—Straits Times, April 6.

THE 34TH NATIVE INFANTRY left Lucknow on the 13th April, for Chittagong. The regiment proceeds by rail to Allahabad, from thence by bullock train to Benares, where they will again take the railway to Calcutta. The only reason, says the Delhi Gazette, assigned for this unreasonable move "is that Mr. Wingfield has suddenly discovered that he can do with one native regiment less in the province." They are expected to arrive at Howrah this evening.—Hurkaru, April 18th.

THE LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR N. W. P.—We hear from Lahore that the Lieutenant-governor left the capital for Sealkote on Friday, the 17th inst., driving out to Goojranwalla that day, and that Lady Montgomery followed on Saturday. His Honour would halt at Sealkote on Sunday, and resume his journey towards Jummoo on Monday. The Baneehal, or private route, of the Maharajah will be taken by Sir Robert and suite, being the shortest and, with the exception of Baramoola, the only one practicable at this season of the year.—Delhi Gazette, April 23.

MISCELLANEOUS.

ADDRESSES ON THE ROYAL MARRIAGE.—The meeting at the Banqueting Hall was well attended yesterday evening, all classes of the community, European, East Indian, Mussulman, and Hindoo having been fairly represented. His Excellency Sir W. Denison having taken the chair, the Sheriff read the requisition addressed to him to convene the meeting; and his Excellency the Governor briefly referred to the objects for which the meeting was called. The first resolution was then proposed by the Hon. W. Holloway, in a telling and eloquent address, and was seconded by the Hon. R. O. Campbell:—"That this meeting desires to convey to her Majesty the Queen its loyal and respectful congratulations on the marriage of the Prince of Wales to the Princess Alexandra of Denmark." The second resolution was proposed by the Honourable Sir Hope Grant, G.C.B., and seconded by the Honourable V. Sadagopah Charloo in a very excellent speech, that the following address to the Queen be adopted:—"To the Queen's most Excellent Majesty.—May it please your Majesty,—We, your Majesty's loyal and devoted servants and subjects of the presidency town of Madras in public meeting assembled, desire to approach your throne with the expression of our heartfelt congratulations on the marriage of his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales to her Royal Highness the Princess Alexandra of Denmark. We avail ourselves of this happy occasion to assure your Majesty that the inhabitants of this distant part of your dominions, feel the warmest interest in an event which promises to perpetuate that great and enlightened dynasty, under whose beneficent rule the people of India have been raised to all those privileges of personal freedom and equal laws, which are the birthright of every British subject. That the Almighty Father of all nations may crown this auspicious union with his choicest blessings, so that it may contribute to the happiness of your Majesty and their Royal Highnesses, and to the good of the British Empire, is and ever will be our fervent prayer." The third resolution was proposed by T. G. Clarke, Esq., and seconded by Sumsum ood-dowlah Bahadur Nazim Jung, that the following Address to the Prince and Princess of Wales be adopted:—"May it please your Royal Highnesses,—We the undersigned inhabitants of the Presidency town of Madras in public meeting assembled, desire to present our earnest congratulations on your recent marriage, an occasion so fraught with happiness to your Royal Highnesses and so nearly affecting the welfare of all good subjects of her Majesty throughout the world. Endeared as her Majesty is to us by her devotion as a wife and mother, the interest we have ever felt in all that concerns the welfare and happiness of herself and her children, is more than the old English feeling of loyalty to the Sovereign. It is a deep-seated reverence, a sacred expression of gratitude for so high an example, and of love for one who indeed and in truth has been a mother to her people. Her joys and sorrows have alike been ours. But never has our sympathy as a nation been so roused to rejoice with her as now, when in the happy marriage of your Royal Highnesses, we see fulfilled a re-union long desired by the two great families of the North, who glory in the same forefathers, are blessed by the same love of truth and patriotism, are bound together by the same ties of commerce and enterprise, and who share in the same faith. Many who sign this address may never look on the faces of those to whom their congratulations are offered, but we beg to assure your Royal Highnesses that the hearts of British subjects of all races, and of all creeds, and in the most distant parts of the globe, will ever be actuated by the strongest feelings of attachment and loyalty to the Queen of England, and to those who, in God's good time, may be called on hereafter, to sit upon England's throne." The Hon. Mr. Holloway then proposed a vote of thanks to his Excellency the chairman for his conduct in the chair.—Times, April 9.

HYDERABAD, March 12.—Nuwab Shums-ool-Oomrah, on whom the late Nizam conferred the title of Ameer-i-Kubeer, was lately so very ill that he was considered on the verge of death's door. Within the last few days, however, he has rallied, and is now in a fair state of recovery. This is a fortunate circumstance for the country at large, for his death would have been a sad calamity, as he is without exception the wisest and the cleverest man here, and in whose advice and integrity the present Nizam has, as his father had, the greatest confidence. He is consequently resorted to for his opinion, "in all cases of danger and difficulty" or trouble, the weight of his judgment being appreciated on all such occasions. Nuwab Shums-ool-Oomrah's death would, moreover, be a great loss to a large body of the poorer classes, for he is unquestionably the most charitable of the native nobility here, not excepting the Prime Minister Salar Jung, with his vast wealth and the vast resources of the country in his hands. During the recent scarcity, and to this moment, the Nuwab had grain imported from his own Talooquas (whilst others were selling it to the best advantage and at exorbitant prices), and gave to the poor daily or every other day from a hundred to a hundred and fifty maunds. This noble and magnanimous act, it need hardly be said, rescued from starvation and death a host of men, women and children, who might otherwise have perished—for it is well known that at the commencement of the famine (for such it amounted to in reality) a woman threw three of her children into a well and herself after them, because they were without food for days. On the other hand, a man stabbed himself to death, as he had had nothing to eat or to look forward to. These are but solitary instances of the many suicides that took place on account of the great dearth that prevailed. The dearth was not caused by a want of rain during the last season, not from any failure of the crops in any of the districts of this fine and fertile province, but from sheer mismanagement on the part of the Minister and from his establishing a sort of monopoly, by farming out to the sahokars and bunnyahs the exclusive right of purchasing all the grain in the Nizam's country and of selling it at whatever prices they liked. The result of such a "contract" has been but too apparent in the dire distress it occasioned, and the evil effects it engendered. A little agitation will doubtless entirely remove, as it has partly removed, the obnoxious practice that has prevailed. Before I conclude, I must not omit to add, that Shums-ool-Oomrah's restoration to health has been owing, under Providence, to the unremitting exertions of Dr. Fleming, the residency surgeon, whose fame for his professional skill has consequently spread far and wide. His suavity of manner, his good disposition, and his kindness of heart, are greatly appreciated by all classes of the native, as they have hitherto been by the Christian community. Dr. Fleming is here looked upon and regarded as one possessing the humanity and all the good qualities of another "man of Ross," who "prescribes, attends, the medicine makes and gives."—Times of India.

NAWAB SHUMSOOL-OOMRAH.—A letter from Hyderabad Deccan of the 11th April informs us of the death of Nawab Shums-ool-Oomrah, which event our correspondent says has caused the utmost gloom and sorrow in the city. The deceased nobleman was 80 years of age, having been born in 1780, and having survived the rule of three Nizams. He was universally respected and esteemed. Our correspondent's letter, which gives an interesting notice of the deceased nobleman's life in connection with the recent history of Hyderabad, will appear in our next.—Delhi Gazette.

JUDGMENT IN THE CASE OF CAPTAIN HURST, OF THE "JASON."—The High Court at Madras has given judgment in the case of Captain Hurst, late of the S.S. Jason—the Advocate-General and Mr. Mayne appearing for the Government, and Mr. J. W. Branson for Captain Hurst. It was denied by the Crown that the captain was taken into custody immediately upon his refusal to deliver up his certificate, in accordance with the decision arrived at by the commissioners. He was allowed ample time to comply with their judgment, but refused to do so, and the only course then left open was to arrest his person. The chief grounds urged in the affidavit of Captain Hurst were, that the commissioners had no jurisdiction to suspend the certificate or to require him to give it up; that under the Act which was said to authorise the proceedings taken, the Government could only obtain the commissioners' opinion in the matter, and that Act I., of 1850, was the only Act really applicable to the case. It was further contended for Captain Hurst that the Act under which the former proceedings were conducted—namely, Act I., of 1859, did not vest Messrs. Clarke and Crowther with any jurisdiction in the case; and this being so, the result of that inquiry must be null and void. It was urged for the Crown that the second inquiry was in no way barred by the first, and that the later proceedings before Messrs. Wilson and Martin were perfectly regular and justifiable. The judgment, which was a very lengthy one, defined exactly the bearing of the law upon the question raised, and pointed out especially the relative construction of the Imperial and Local Acts. The Court dismissed the application against Captain Hurst.

MR. JOHN BRUCE NORTON.—Mr. John Bruce Norton has created quite a sensation among the Hindoo community. The speech delivered in Patoheappah's Hall seems to have galloped those for whose good it was intended. The former part has elicited their hearty concurrence and praise, while the latter has given them as much umbrage as any direct insult could. The fact is that they have misunderstood the worthy gentleman. They allege that his remarks on Hindoo probity were quite uncalled for, and that if he ventured to touch upon this subject he ought merely to have stated the merits and demerits of honesty and dishonesty respectively. As regards these points they seem to forget that what he gave utterance to were not casual remarks, in which case alone perhaps they might be considered uncalled for. In the beginning of his speech he addressed himself to all generally. But as he proceeded and came on to the conclusion he found it necessary in acting the part of a patron to offer what advice he was able to the students before him. He saw they were for the most part lads on the verge of manhood, at which period of life the mind and character begin to form, and having studied the Hindoos closely, he gave expression to opinions which he thought were best calculated to aid them in their future walk through life. He touched upon Hindoo integrity. We are of opinion that if any other person pursuing any other vocation in life had ventured to meddle with this subject we should have considered him rash and imprudent in touching upon a subject of which he had not had sufficient opportunities of forming a correct opinion. But Mr. Norton has pleaded for twenty years in the Supreme Court at Madras, besides having had extensive practice in the Mofussil Courts; and there is no place better adapted for sifting men's character than an open Court. The close and rigid examination undergone there has never failed to lay bare the innermost nature of any man that has there stood his trial. Having had such opportunities of studying human nature, it is scarcely possible that Mr. Norton could have failed to see through the true character of the Hindoo people. We do not mean to say that there are no exceptions. On the contrary, we believe there are many whose character would bear the closest scrutiny. This is just as much as the worthy gentleman himself remarked. And as what he expressed was offered in the shape of advice to the students of the school, and not intended to degrade the people in the eyes of those around, we think the Hindoos ought to be more liberal, and not feel offended at what is given in good part. They ought to know the gentleman well enough by this time not to attribute any improper motive for the severity of his observations. Besides, it is always more creditable to profit by our errors being pointed out to us instead of being grieved with the person who from a true spirit of kindness does us that dangerous office. If Mr. Norton showed what he thought errors or defects in the Hindoo character, these were the result of his own observation during his long career in India, besides being the acknowledged belief of those of the same circle of society in which he moves. As a patron of Patoheappah's School, and as one who had ever manifested the warmest interest in the welfare of Hindoos, he felt offended that such should be the opinion of his countrymen regarding a people whom he had befriended, and with true nobleness of mind sought to remedy such matters. If under such an admirable spirit he has acted, and they whom he befriends will not acknowledge the honesty of his motives, what shall we say of them? Only this, that if they alienate the affections of Mr. Norton, they will never find another to fill his place with the same truth and earnestness of feeling that have ever characterised his connection with the institution.—Madras Times.

THE DECCAN.—A private letter from Baroda informs us that the Sowar who made the attack upon the life of the Guikwar's son-in-law, has expiated his crime with his life. While escaping from the city, he was challenged by a Sowadar belonging to the army of his Highness the Guikwar. The reply to the challenge was a sword-cut on the arm, aimed at the head. Upon receiving the wound on the arm, the guard drew his sword, and passed it, at once, through the assassin's body. The guard did not know who the man was until he reported the encounter, and its result, to his Highness, when inquiries were instituted, and the dead man was recognized as being the Arab who had attempted to assassinate the Keeladar. The Guikwar ordered the corpse to be brought before him, when he ordered the head to be cut off, which was done on the spot. The head was then fixed upon a pole, and put up outside the city gate. The trunk was thrown to the dogs, and the Arab thus disappeared from the surface of the earth! Such is the way in which Royal vengeance is satiated in the city of Baroda,—the terminus of a railway station, and the seat of a British cantonment.—Deccan Herald, April 17.

Mr. R. W. Lodwick, of the Bombay civil service, and civil paymaster of Bombay, has been appointed deputy auditor and accountant-general of Madras.

THE BAR.—A Madras contemporary states, authoritatively, that Mr. John Bruce Norton, of the Madras bar, is to succeed Mr. T. Sydney Smith as advocate-general, upon the retirement of the latter gentleman, who is about to leave for England. Mr. Whitley Stokes, barrister-at-law, has been nominated to act as administrator-general during the absence, on sick certificate, of Mr. J. Miller.

CHOLERA is decimating the inhabitants of Calcutta on the Madras coast. Upwards of half the convicts in the gaol have died from it, and the disease has spread to the Moplah population in its vicinity. The acting Inspector-General of Hospitals, Dr. Shaw, has directed the removal of the prisoners, and they will be located temporarily in tents on the sea beach.

THE STEAMER "PEARL."—The Pearl is indeed an ill-fated vessel. After her last repairs at Bombay, which cost the Government, I believe, some £4,000, it is much to be regretted that she should have met with another accident (although, as it is said, she got out safe) off Coconada, as was announced in a telegram received here on Saturday last from Madras. The unfortunate collision with the Feroze some years back, when she was only saved from going down on that occasion, from the fact of the vessel having been built in compartments. The expenses for her repairs then also cost the Ceylon Government a large sum of money. The profit and loss account, showing the receipts and disbursements up to 1862, will, I understand, show a frightful figure against her. It would, indeed, be advisable if this Pearl, which costs the Government a great price now, be disposed of to the best advantage, instead of being a burden on the revenue.—Colombo Observer, April 17.

BOMBAY.

ADDRESSES OF CONGRATULATION TO THE QUEEN AND THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES.

Pursuant to a requisition addressed to the sheriff, a numerous-attended and influential meeting of the inhabitants of Bombay was held on the 16th inst. in the Town-hall, for the purpose of voting an address of congratulation to her Most Gracious Majesty the Queen on the occasion of the marriage of his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, together with a similar address of congratulation to their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales. There were present on the occasion his Excellency Sir Bartle Frere, the Hon. Messrs. W. E. Frere, J. D. Inverarity, H. L. Anderson, W. B. Tristram, Juggonath Sunkersett, A. D. Robertson, M. H. Scott, Premabhoj Hemabhoj, H. Hebbert, and H. Newton; Brigadier Tapp, Captain E. Grant, Captain T. Leith, Major G. Bevis, H. Prescott, J. Hemson, &c., &c.

The Sheriff, Mr. Maneckjee Cursetjee, opened the proceedings by reading the requisition convening the meeting, after which his Excellency Sir Bartle Frere was voted to the chair on the motion of Mr. Sorabjee Jamsetjee Jeejeebhoy.

His Excellency the Governor said:—We are met here this day to give formal and public expression to our feelings of respectful and local sympathy with her Majesty, on the occasion of the marriage of his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales. The feeling is no new one, for it has its origin as far back as the commencement of her Majesty's reign, and has been growing in strength and intensity ever since. It is not a local feeling, for it is shared by every branch and every class of the many nations over which her Majesty reigns. It is not a transient feeling for it has pervaded and influenced our lives and actions for years past, and will continue to do so for years to come. It has left its impression on the annals of our nation, and will be among the landmarks of the history of this century. Such being the case it is not necessary nor consistent with our object, that I should use many words in commending the subject to your attention. It is fit and proper that we should not leave our feelings at this time to be simply inferred or taken for granted. It is right we should express them formally, publicly, and with our united voice as fully sharing the feeling which actuates her Majesty's subjects throughout the world; and with this view I will now call on the gentlemen who have been selected to move the first resolution.

The Hon. Mr. W. B. Tristram in proposing the first resolution said:—Within the last eighteen months two public meetings of the inhabitants of Bombay have been held in this room both appealing strongly to the sympathies, both melancholy in their nature. The first was convened to offer an address expressive of our condolence with the sorrowing heart of our most gracious Queen, the other to devise means of endeavouring to assist our then starving fellow-countrymen in Lancashire. But to-day is one of unmixed and general joy, for we are here met to convey to her Majesty our congratulations on the happy marriage of the Prince of Wales with the Princess Alexandra of Denmark, an alliance we must all look upon as most happy and desirable. May we not all hope that this auspicious event together with the strong feeling of renewed attachment to the Royal family which it has called forth throughout the British dominions, may we not hope it may tend greatly to soothe the sorrow of our Queen, who lives supremely in the hearts of her subjects and who has commanded the reverence of the world by her private and domestic virtues as well as by her noble administration of the Government of her country. The resolution and address I hold in my hand need no enticing words of mine to commend them to your acceptance.

His Excellency the Chairman before putting the resolution to vote, read the following extract of a letter dated the 16th from Sir Jamsetjee Jeejeebhoy, Bart., who was to have seconded the resolution, but was prevented from attending:—

"I am sure that all classes of the community will unite in the fervent hope that the important step in life which his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales has lately taken may be productive of happiness to the Royal Prince and Princess, and thus promote the well-being of the nation which identifies itself so closely, and sympathises so heartily, with all that affects the welfare of the Sovereign and her illustrious family."

Proposed by the Honourable W. B. Tristram, seconded by the Hon. M. H. Scott, and carried unanimously:—"That the following be adopted as the address of the inhabitants of Bombay to Her Most Gracious Majesty:—"

"To Her Most Excellent Majesty the Queen.

"May it please your Majesty,—We, the undersigned inhabitants of the Bombay Presidency and devoted subjects of the British Crown, for ourselves and on behalf of our fellow-subjects, as well European as native in this part of British India, humbly beg leave to approach your Majesty's throne with our loyal and fervent congratulations on the marriage of his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales to her Royal Highness the Princess Alexandra of Denmark.

"We entreat your Majesty graciously to receive our assurance that, as we in India yield not to the people of England in devotion to the Imperial Crown and in love and reverence to your Majesty's Royal person, so have we no less been moved with joy and thankfulness by the event of his Royal Highness's union to a Princess whom report with one voice proclaims so fit a consort for the Heir Apparent to the British Throne.

"We devoutly pray that this auspicious wedlock, graced as it is by every earthly good, the hallowed union of hearts, the approval of your Majesty and the wisest counsellors of the realm as well as the benedictions of those many millions who rejoice to obey your Majesty's rule in all quarters of the globe, may be blessed by Almighty God to the life-long satisfaction of your Majesty's, the unbroken happiness of the Royal pair, and the joyful content of your Majesty's loyal subjects of all tongues and races in this age and for generations to come.—We are, Madam, with the profoundest respect, Your Majesty's most devoted subjects and servants."

The Hon. Juggonath Sunkersett said:—Sir, before I propose the resolution that I hold in my hand, permit me to say a few words. Though we are rather late in our congratulations on the auspicious marriage of the Heir Apparent, it is hardly necessary for me to mention that it does not arise from any want of sympathy with the enthusiasm which the wedding has caused in England, but solely from accidental causes of a local nature. We take quite a personal interest in the family of her Most Gracious Majesty the Queen, and rejoice at any event which has a promise of happiness for them. The universal reports of the young Princess, who has now virtually become an Englishwoman, justify us in trusting that she will in all respects dignify and adorn her position, and assist in maintaining that high standard of morality and refinement which distinguishes the Court of Queen Victoria.

Proposed by the Hon. Juggonathjee Sunkersett, seconded by the Hon. Mr. Justice Hebbert, and carried unanimously:—"That the following address be adopted as the address of the inhabitants of Bombay to their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales:—"

"To his Royal Highness Albert Edward, Prince of Wales, Duke of Cornwall, &c., &c.

"May it please your Royal Highness,—We, the undersigned inhabitants of the Bombay Presidency for ourselves and on behalf of our fellow-subjects, as well European as native, in this part of British India, presume to offer to your Royal Highness our respectful and heartfelt congratulations on your late happy marriage.

"At the same time we humbly tender to your Royal bride and Princess of Wales, our dutiful homage, and a fervent welcome to her august station in the British realms.

"We beg your Royal Highness graciously to receive our assurance that as we in India yield not to the people of England in devoted loyalty to the Imperial Crown and in affectionate reverence for your Royal Mother, our most Gracious Queen and Her Illustrious Family, so neither are we less moved with joy, and gratitude to God, by the event of your Royal Highness's marriage, whereon have waited all good auspices, the vows of two nations and the sympathy of the world.

"We devoutly pray that Almighty God may be pleased of His infinite mercy, to bless this union to the happiness of your Royal Highnesses, the comfort of Her Most Gracious Majesty the Queen, and the joyful content of the millions who repose under the shadow of the British Empire, themselves and their posterity to ages yet unborn.

"We have the honour to be, with sentiments of the deepest respect, Your Royal Highness's most obedient humble servants."

The Rev. W. K. Fletcher said:—A practical solution, sir, has been entrusted to me, and as the hearts of my fellow-citizens are just now overflowing with loyal joy, I do not think that many words are required to induce them to manifest in appropriate demonstrations this feeling. Every affection of the human heart requires some external form in which it may openly and sensibly manifest itself, and communicate itself to men of kindred feeling. Our loyalty, it is proposed, should make itself known as publicly and brilliantly as possible by a display of fireworks on the Esplanade, in pleasure of which all the citizens without exception may participate. But there are some who may see this display who yet may not fully understand the occasion of our rejoicing. These require something more tangible—more personal to enfix in their minds the memory of the Royal marriage as the occasion of the feast. It is therefore proposed that all the school children of the island should join in festivities suitable to their age. It is proposed that children of both sexes and of creeds who attend school shall be gathered together and feasted in honour of the happy occasion, and taught by all their senses to remember the day as one of the happiest in their childhood. But the fireworks and the children's feast cannot be furnished without money, and to collect this it is proposed that a committee be appointed, as well as to devise and carry out all the necessary details of the festivities; and that money in abundance will be supplied, who can doubt? money sufficient I mean to make the display of fireworks and the festivities in some degree proportionate to the joyous loyalty which fills so many hearts, and not unworthy of this great commercial and wealthy city.

Proposed by the Rev. Mr. Fletcher, and seconded by H. H. Meer Jaffer Ally Khan Bahadoor, and carried unanimously—"That, to manifest our joy upon this happy occasion, subscription be raised for a display of fireworks on the Esplanade, and suitable festivities to be given to all the school children of the island, and that for the purpose of carrying out this proposal, as well as the other objects of this meeting, the following gentlemen be appointed a committee, with power to add to their number":—

The Hon. Mr. Frere; the Hon. Mr. Inverarity; the Hon. Mr. Andersen; the Hon. Mr. Lewis; the Hon. Mr. Tristram; the Hon. Mr. Rustomjee Jamsetjee Jejeebhoy; the Hon. Mr. Jugonmath Sunkersett; the Hon. Mr. Robertson; the Hon. Mr. Scott; the Hon. Mr. Premabhoj Hemabhoj; Sir Jamsetjee Jejeebhoy, Bart.; the Rev. Mr. Fletcher; Colonel W. F. Marriott; the Rev. Dr. Wilson; Commodore Frushard; Colonel H. Barr; M. R. Westropp, Esq.; Rev. J. D. Gibson; David Sassoon, Esq.; Dr. Stovell; H. H. Meer Jaffer Ally Khan Bahadoor; E. I. Howard, Esq.; Cowasjee Jelangeerjee, Esq.; Dr. Peet; Sorabjee Jamsetjee Jejeebhoy, Esq.; Dr. Birdwood; Munguldass Nathooobhoj, Esq.; G. Foggo, Esq.; Ardaseer Hormusjee Wadia, Esq.; D. J. W. Terry, Esq.; Venayackrow Wassoodewjee, Esq.; Goculdass Tejpal, Esq.; Goculdass Leeladhur, Esq.; Byranjee Jejeebhoy, Esq.; Com-laput Gopall Chobey, E-q., Bulwuntrao Bhicajee Dhowly, Esq., and that Venayackrow Jugonathjee, Esq., be requested to act as Secretary.

Proposed by Colonel Barr, seconded by Munguldass Nathooobhoj, E-q.,—"That the best thanks of this meeting be tendered to his Excellency the Governor for his kindness in so ably presiding on this occasion."

Proposed by Verjeevandass Madowdass, Esq., seconded by the Rev. Dr. Wilson, "That thanks are due to the sheriff for having convened the meeting."

The Sheriff having returned thanks, the meeting dispersed.

A list of subscriptions was placed on the table, and about Rs. 5,000 were subscribed on the spot.

MISCELLANEOUS.

UNOSTENTATIOUS CHARITY.—The Summachar Durpun and other papers notice in eulogistic terms an instance of unostentatious charity on the part of Mr. Kursondas Mahalewdas, broker to Messrs. Stearns, Hobart, and Co., of this town. It appears that Mr. Kursondas remitted a sum of one thousand dollars to a friend in Boston, for the relief of respectable families which might have suffered in consequence of the war. This Bania merchant is a young man, and has in a short space of time, by dint of perseverance and a course of honest dealing, taken a foremost rank among the respectable merchants of Bombay. He has proved to be a sincere friend of enlightenment, and takes a part in the promotion of all undertakings for the improvement and benefit of his countrymen. A truly charitable man, says one of our native contemporaries, is he whose left hand does not know what his right hand does; and Mr. Kursondas may be said to be one of those who "do good by stealth."

INCOME-TAX.—The vernacular journals have put it in the heads of the people, or else the people have got the idea themselves, that the income tax will not be allowed to exist as many months more as it has continued years. They seem to have unbounded faith in Sir Charles Trevelyan's determination to abolish it if he can. From what is stated in the Guzeratee papers, the natives appear to be anxiously looking for the moment of relief from this unjust impost. Should Sir Charles Trevelyan overcome all difficulties and succeed in abolishing it, he will have, says a contemporary, gained the blessings of the millions of India, and his name will become immortal in the annals of the country. With such anxiety is the news of the abolition of the tax looked for, that the day on which it is received will be marked as a day of feasting and rejoicing in every household throughout the country.

THE MEKRAN TELEGRAPH.—The Sindian announces the suspension of the works connected with the line of telegraph along the Mekran coast. Mr. Walton, the superintendent, has returned to Kurrachee with the news that his workmen at Gwader have been fired on and driven into the sea. A telegram was also received in Kurrachee from Sommeanee, calling for military assistance, as the camp was being surrounded by the tribes. We pay them black mail enough to secure their quietude, but they probably want more. This will falsify the promise of telegraphic communication between Kurrachee and London by the end of the year.

NATIVE FEELING TOWARDS EUROPEANS.—The Parsee Reformer is delighted at the thought that, though the natives are generally hated and despised by Europeans in this country, there are Englishmen who are true to their noble nature, their love of freedom and fair play, and are not without a generous regard for their native fellow subjects. The writer refers, in support of this statement, to the strictures of the English press upon the conduct of Lieutenant Jackson in murderously assaulting his khansama, who died from the injuries inflicted upon him; and quotes, approvingly, a passage in point from the Army and Navy Gazette, with the expression of his regret that but very few honest writers could be found, amongst the ranks of the English press in India, to compare with the writer in question. He recommends all Englishmen to engrave on their hearts the liberal sentiments of the Army Gazette, and urges them to recollect that the native holds no inferior place in the scale of being.

RAO SAHIB.—Some interest has been created in the trial of a Brahmin named Mahdooroo bin Rajaram, alias Shreemunt Rao Sahib Bajeeorw Peishwa, who was accused of abetment of treason and levying war upon the Queen, in consequence of its having been given out that he was an agent of the Nana Sahib of Bithoor, and was employed by him in an attempt to raise an army in the Deccan, and to murder all the Europeans that came in its way. The man turns out to be a treasonable and fanatical wretch, who after being made the tool of the police for several months, was arrested with the proofs of his treason upon him, and on his conviction was sentenced by the Judge of Sholapore to be hanged. The sentence has since been commuted by the High Court, on appeal, to transportation for life and forfeiture of his property. It appears from the facts of the case elicited at the trial, that about a year ago it came to the knowledge of the Sholapore police that a man of the Nana's party had taken refuge as a "bygaree" or religious devotee in a Hindoo temple in the Nizam's territory near our frontier. There is no proof as to who the man really is, but there is no doubt of his treasonable inclinations, which were fully developed by the police, who, on the pretence of aiding and abetting him in getting up a rebellion and massacre of the English, encouraged him to write all kinds of treasonable and seditious documents, such as commissions, bloody decrees, offering rewards for the heads of the Governor of Bombay and other high officials, and for the capture and mutilation of English women and children, &c., &c. The conspiracy in which this wretched creature involved himself was entirely the creation of the police, and for anything that comes out at the trial there is no reason to believe that the man is in any way allied to the Nana Sahib, but is a mere pretender who proposed to make capital out of his assumed relationship to the late Peshwa Bajeeorw. The whole case is not creditable to the police, for in every instance in which he was convicted of treasonable intentions he had merely responded to their suggestions, and all that was overt in the conspiracy was the work of the police themselves.—Times of India.

COTTON IN SCINDE.—A statement of the quantity of cotton cultivated in Scinde during the year 1862-63, contrasted with the extent in the previous year 1861-62, has just been published, which, to the surprise of a good many, establishes the fact that, despite the demand for exportation and high prices, the area under cultivation is less by 6,482 acres this year than it was last. The Scindian has gone into the matter in its two last issues, much, I fear, to the disgust of the lovers of light literature, and come to the following conclusions:—1st. The yield is not quite 95 lbs. of clean cotton to the acre. 2nd. The cotton famine had nothing at all to do in developing the culture of the plant in 1861-62, because it would have stimulated an increase in 1862-63, instead of which there is the decrease already mentioned. 3rd. Scinde has not even grown enough of the staple for her own use, because in 1853-54 she consumed 53,501 maunds, with a population of 10,87,762 souls, while in 1862-63, with an estimated population of 1,795,594 inhabitants, she has produced only 44,308 maunds. 4th. That the ryot, having received only from rupees six to rupees nine a maund for the staple while it was selling in Kurrachee at rupees 35 to rupees 37, and being able to grow grain easier and cheaper, the yield of which per acre is about equivalent to that of cotton, has derived no benefit from the rise in the markets, and cannot be induced to pursue its cultivation, in proof of which the fact is adduced that there were actually 3,623 acres more planted in 1858-59, before a single American port was closed, than in 1862-63, when they have been nearly eighteen months under blockade. 5th. That, if the productiveness of the soil will not exceed 95lbs. to the acre, the ryot may be induced to grow the staple even then, provided the agency of Banians and middle-men be dispensed with, and our exporting firms divide with the cultivator the profits which these harpies are now thriving upon. 6th. If the cultivation can be so managed as to average a yield of two maunds to the acre, as the statement shows it does in seven Talookas only, then the crop at present prices, despite the extortionate practices of the middle-men, will pay better than any other—and, 7th. That in the absence of these two last conditions, it is hopeless to expect the province will ever be able even to supply the requirements of her own population. Such is the resume of nearly five columns of very dry statistics which, as is the wont of figures generally, tell some very stern truths, and are likely to exert a salutary effect upon the spirit of speculation in one species of produce only.

THE 7TH N.I.—It is stated that the headquarters' wing of her Majesty's 7th Native Infantry is expected to arrive in Poona, from Dharwar, within a fortnight. The Commander-in-Chief and staff are at Mahabeshwur, where the Bishop of Bombay has also arrived.

Court Martial.

CAPT. R. P. C. JONES, R.A.

Head Quarters, Camp Umballah, March 21.—At a general court martial assembled at Benares on the 2nd day of February, 1863, Captain Richard Paget Campbell Jones, of No. 4 Battery 14th Brigade Royal Artillery, was arraigned on the following charges:—

Charges.—First. With having, at Benares, on or about the 19th of July, 1862, fraudulently misapplied the sum of Rupees 5,615-4-8, or thereabouts, being public money received by him as commanding officer of the battery, as follows:—

Balance of daily pay for July, 1862	Rs. 459 14 4
Servant's wages for July, 1862	145 0 0
Pay of Quartermaster Sergeant Courtman for April, May, June, and July, and of Gunner Yenn for July, 1862	219 10 8
Subsistence of Mrs. Courtman and child for April, May, June, and July, 1862	30 0 0
Battery debt to Captain Paterson	299 7 0
Mess allowance for June, 1862	40 0 0
Clothing compensation for 1859-60	76 8 0
Gunner Martin's credit for May, June, and July, 1862	23 8 7
Gunner McAllan's credit for June and July, 1862	17 15 8
Collar maker Bathgate's credit on re-instatement	30 4 7
Effects and credits of the late Lieutenant Stevenson	1,303 12 5
Canteen fund	1,093 8 8
Battery debt to Captain Castle	5 0 0
Due for a copy of trial of Gunner Smith	9 12 0
School fund	118 7 4
Doctor Houghton's horse allowance	144 7 10
Lucknow prize money	1,598 0 0

Total Rs. 5,615 4 8

Second. With behaving in a scandalous manner, unbefitting the character of an officer and a gentleman, in having, at Benares, on or about the 19th of July, 1862, when about to leave the station on privilege leave, falsely and designedly stated to Brev. Lieut. Col. W. G. Ke Mesurier, c.b., who was to succeed next day to the command of the battery, that he (Captain Jones) had made arrangements for the daily payment of the men of the battery up to the end of that month.

Third. With conduct to the prejudice of good order and military discipline in the following instances:— 1st. In having, at Benares, on or about the 27th of May, 1862, obtained, through the instrumentality of Sergeant T. W. Bromby, pay sergeant of the battery, the sum of Rs. 180, or thereabouts, from Sergeant James Huston, of the battery, as a loan for the current expenses of the battery.

2nd. In having, at Benares, from the 15th to the 27th of May, 1862, both days inclusive, in disobedience of her Majesty's regulations, failed to issue pay daily to the men of the battery.

3rd. In having, at Benares, on or about the 19th of July, 1862, in direct disobedience of the regulations of the service, which prohibit the issue to pay sergeants of large sums of money, delivered to Sergeant T. W. Bromby, pay sergeant of the battery, the sum of Rupees 400 for distribution, day by day, to the men of the battery.

4th. In having, at Benares, on or about the 19th of July, 1862, used for his own private purposes money in his custody belonging to the men of the battery, viz., the cricket fund, Rs. 193-9-0, and the library fund, Rs. 53-0-0; total, Rs. 248-9-0, or thereabouts.

5th. In having delayed to obey the order he had received at Mussorie, on or about the 16th of August, 1862, to return forthwith to Benares, his leave having been cancelled, and failed to rejoin his battery until the 21st of September, five days after his leave had expired.

6th. In having at Benares, on the 23rd of Sept. 1862, on the false plea of illness, failed to attend a court of inquiry held to examine the accounts of the battery, although duly warned to attend.

Additional Charge.

With having between the 1st day of December 1859, at Allahabad, and the 19th day of July, at Benares, fraudulently misapplied the sum of Rupees seven hundred and sixty-six, six annas (766-6-0), or thereabouts public money, being a part of the canteen daily receipts under his charge, as commanding officer of the battery.

Finding.

The Court finds the prisoner, Capt. Richard Paget Campbell Jones, of the 4th battery 14th brigade royal artillery, on the first charge brought against him, guilty, with the exception of the word "fraudulently," of which the Court finds he is not guilty, and acquitted; also with exception of the words "and July" in the item of subsistence to Mrs. Courtman and child, of which the Court finds him not guilty, and acquitted also with the exception of the item of Collar Maker Bathgate's credit on reinstatement, of which the Court finds him not guilty, and acquitted; also with exception of the item of effects and credits of late Lieut. Stevenson, of which the Court finds him not guilty, and acquitted; also with exception of the item due for a copy of trial of Gunner Smith, of which the Court finds him not guilty, and acquitted; also with exception of the item Doctor Houghton's horse allowance, of which the Court finds him not guilty, and acquitted.

On the second charge brought against him, guilty; On the third charge brought against him, guilty; with the exception of the first and fourth instances of the same, of which two instances, the Court finds him, not guilty, and acquitted; On the additional charge brought against him, not guilty, and acquitted.

SENTENCE.

The Court sentences the prisoner, Captain Richard Paget Campbell Jones, of No. 4 Battery 14th Brigade Royal Artillery, to be cashiered.

(Signed) J. CORRIE, Lieut. col.,
H.M.'s 29th Regiment,

Benares, 12th February, 1863. President.

APPROVED AND CONFIRMED.

(Signed) HUGH ROSE, General,
C. in C. in India.

Camp Meerut, 14th March, 1863.

The Services of Lieut.-col. E. B. Johnson, Royal Artillery.

Head Quarters, Camp Deobund, March 17.—The fusion of the staff department at army head quarters has caused the absorption of the office of adjutant-general of the army, filled, provisionally, by Lieut.-col. E. B. Johnson, c.b., royal artillery.

The C. in C. in India is desirous of placing on record his sense of the good service which this officer has performed during his tenure of office, embracing, as it did, a period when questions of the first importance connected with, and arising from, the amalgamation of H.M.'s British and Indian armies, were to receive a solution.

In these matters H.E. has derived great assistance from the ability, tact, and judgment of Lieut.-col. Johnson.

In all questions relating to the discipline of H.M.'s Indian forces, the late officiating adjutant general of the army has evinced qualities which are essential to its maintenance, firmness, and decision, accompanied by justice and discretion.

Lord Clive's Fund.

Head Qrs., Simla, April 2.—With reference to the wound-pension warrants in force, which require an officer to have been in receipt of such pension for 5 years (or 6 years from the date on which the wound was received) before it is declared permanent, it is hereby notified, under instructions from Govt., that the exam. of officers, in view to their pensions being declared permanent, should take place at or after the expiration of the above period.

Applications for admission to the benefits of Lord Clive's fund, being still received in the mil. dept. of the Govt. of India direct from officers comdg. corps, &c., the attention of all officers concerned is drawn to G.O., No. 1,084, dated Nov. 26, 1861, page 411, prescribing rules for the transmission of such applications, and others therein named, to the controller of military finance.

EDUCATION IN BENGAL.

WE regret to observe that, on the publication of the last General Report on Public Instruction in the Lower Provinces of the Bengal Presidency, the old and truly vulgar objections to the cultivation of the youthful mind through the medium of pure literature have been revived by some of our editorial brethren in the East. We are told that such an education is not practical, and that an available and really useful knowledge of the English language is not to be acquired from the study of our poets, and that to familiarise the native mind with Shakespeare, and Milton, and Cowper, and Thomson, is not the way to fit Bengalees to earn a livelihood in a merchant's counting-house, or in the public offices of Government. Now the British authorities in India have explained that there are other and higher objects of education than a mere preparation for profitable employment. "These are no other than the acknowledged objects of mental cultivation amongst all civilised races." The latest scheme of education for India was not intended for shopkeepers, or mechanics, or professional men, or schoolmasters, but for "the whole gentry of the country." The main purpose is not to teach the natives how to earn their curry and rice—nor how to use their hands, but how to use their minds. It is the moral and intellectual improvement of the people that is or ought to be the first thing contemplated in public instruction, and not an improvement of their physical condition, which is rather a political than a scholastic consideration. A general evolution of the mental and moral faculties is what is chiefly aimed at in the Government system of education in India. The State proposes to bestow upon the natives the great boon of a liberal education. In the first instance the Hindoo is to be educated not as a soldier or a sailor, a tinker or a tailor, a trader or a merchant's clerk, but as a man. If a native wishes to be a cook or a trader, he must take his lessons in the kitchen or the shop, and not in a college or a school. If a Government desires to encourage particular trades or professions, it should establish separate institutions for such purposes. A liberal education, though it does not directly prepare a man for any particular trade or profession, so far from being a hindrance to his success in any special line of life, is sure to facilitate his progress in any new branch of knowledge, by enlarging and sharpening his understanding. We can conceive no more direct or effective means of elevating the Hindoo mind than that of familiarising it with the noblest thoughts of the noblest intellects which our own great country has produced. We may fairly judge of a system of education by its results, as we judge of a tree by its fruits; and we were well pleased the other day to observe, in one of our leading London daily journals, expressions of astonishment and admiration at the manner in which a number of native gentlemen, at a meeting held at the Town-hall of Calcutta, expressed themselves on great public questions. Not their language only, but their very thoughts and sentiments were thoroughly English. They had studied Shakspeare, and Bacon, and Addison, and Johnson to some purpose. There are scores—nay, hundreds—of native gentlemen who, if they were to converse or debate together in a dark room in London, would be taken by any number of persons for natives of this country. In nothing but the colour of the skin are they to be distinguished from other subjects of Queen Victoria. Some of these native gentlemen have written anonymous articles for the press which have been attributed to some of our most practised authors. We would ask whether the sort of education thus exemplified is not a fair cause of honest triumph on the part of the British Government in India?

A CHRISTIAN COLONY IN DEHRA DOON.

MANY of our readers will be interested in hearing of the prosperous condition of a little Christian colony of converted Hindoos in the fertile valley called the Dehra Doon, situated between the upper courses of the Jumna and the Ganges. We have struggled so hard to introduce the Christian religion into India, and most of our efforts have been so deplorably futile, and such vast sums of money have been spent in vain on this object, so much zeal and talent have been devoted to it, and so many valuable lives have been sacrificed in the cause by constant exposure to the ungenial influences of the climate, that we are naturally disposed to make the most of the faintest prospects of success, and to magnify the smallest triumphs. There are some missionaries in India less sanguine than the majority of their brethren, who seem almost inclined to despair of making sincere Christians of the Hindoo heathens, though they still deem it their duty to continue their labours as best they may, and leave the result to Heaven. They have but too often found that it is comparatively easy to teach the young Hindoo to cast off the creed of his ancestors, but that it is a very different and far more difficult task to make him embrace a new religion under the form of a direct revelation from God to man. When the educated young Hindoo gets rid of his superstition, he almost invariably becomes a Deist. Deism,

* According to a late calculation which we find in the Friend of India, there are no less than thirty-one missionary societies, who have between them 386 stations in India, with 2,307 branches and 1,542 churches. They have in ten years printed and circulated gratuitously 1,634,940 copies of the Scriptures in the languages of the country, and 8,604,033 copies of tracts, at an annual cost of £294,300. When we take into consideration the prestige of Europeans in India—"the master caste"—the universal acknowledgment of their vast intellectual superiority to the people of India—the immense amount of zeal and energy and ability devoted to the task—"with all appliances and means to boot,"—it is amazing indeed that we have done comparatively so little towards ridding the people of their monstrous superstitions, and providing them with a better creed.

Bishop Heber used to say, was the half-way house on the road to Christianity; but hitherto Young Bengal has stopped obstinately midway, and refused to advance another step. There have been some exceptions to this general rule, but it is beyond all doubt or dispute that the vast majority of educated Hindoos are perfectly satisfied with the profession of natural religion, and ask what is the use of getting rid of one superstition only to embrace another. Then, again, the professed Hindoo Christians are but too commonly nominal Christians only, and being miserably poor and of low caste are glad to connect themselves in any way with so influential and respected a body as the European missionaries, so long as they are supplied by them with food and shelter and a small monthly stipend. One of these nominal Christians, not long ago, waited on an English gentleman in Calcutta, and saying that he had come from a missionary station up the country, added that he was almost starving, and asked for refreshment. The gentleman at once complied with his request, but falling into conversation with the man was shocked to hear him express his extreme vexation that he had been induced to embrace the religion of Christ, because, as he explained, it was so extremely unprofitable in a pecuniary point of view, and had deprived him of all intercourse with his own relatives and friends; while he was regarded rather as a dependant than a companion by his European patrons. There are, we fear, but too many of these worldly-minded malcontents amongst the supposed converts to Christianity in Anglo-Indian missionary establishments. It is all the more delightful, therefore, to hear of the little Christian colony in the Dehra Doon, because if we are to credit the accounts of it in the Indian newspapers, it is a genuine success, a real triumph of the missionary cause.

If we understand the matter rightly, a Major Rind, who has large plantations of some sort in the Dehra Doon, was induced, at the suggestion of the late Rev. Mr. Lamb, of the Church Missionary Society at Meerut, to consider the propriety of collecting together on one spot, in the Dehra Doon, a number of converts to Christianity, scattered about and exposed to persecution from the surrounding heathens. In 1858 Major Rind succeeded in establishing a colony of these people, amounting altogether to about 300 souls. Major Rind had originally no assistance except from private charity, but at last the Lieutenant-Governor of the North-Western Provinces was induced to grant 7,000 rupees to erect a building to be used as both a school and a chapel, and the Rev. Tulsi Paul, formerly a catechist under Mr. Lamb, was appointed their pastor, on a salary of fifty rupees a month. A schoolmaster has been appointed on the same salary—and about 500 acres of waste lands have been granted to the settlement, free of rent. It is said that the little community is in every respect most promising. The people are well behaved, well dressed, and extremely industrious. They are contented with their lot, and apparently quite sincere in the profession of their new faith. The children are described as cleanly in appearance, well-clad, and intelligent-looking. Altogether, this little settlement of new Christians, in a healthy and romantic locality of India, must have the best wishes of their brother Christians all over the world.

CORRESPONDENCE.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—This may come rather late in the day, perhaps, but still the discussion on the affairs of the Indian Army may not entirely have come to a close. The following remarks, therefore, are at your disposal, if you think them worth inserting in your paper.

It is surprising how little appears to be understood in England about the Indian Staff Corps, even by such men as Lord Ellenborough and the Duke of Cambridge; and how it should ever have been contrived in its present form is more surprising still.

That a Staff Corps was needed, I fancy most people practically acquainted with the Indian Army will admit; but the absurd scheme which has been instituted will be as assuredly condemned.

For some years previous to the mutiny officers had been withdrawn from regiments for Staff employ to that extent that, to ensure efficiency, it became necessary at different times to augment the establishment of officers. But, even with this increase, many regiments became nearly denuded of officers; and to remedy this defect various schemes for a Staff Corps were suggested—still none so preposterous as the existing one.

What was required at that time was simply that those on staff employ should be formed into a separate corps, and that the establishment of officers of regiments should consequently be reduced to just such a number as would ensure proper discipline and efficiency for service. This might have been effected without any great difficulty, and regulations framed to prevent undue supercession in either branches, after those composing the Staff had been entirely disconnected in every way from the regiment to which they had belonged—not obstructing the promotion of those who remained in them. However, it is useless now to say what might have been done.

The intention of the present staff corps doubtless was to do away with the old establishment of the Indian army and promote economy, but how the latter object is to be attained by the present system of increased pay to the staff is not very apparent.

Now, what is the present Indian Staff Corps? It consists of all those who were actually on staff employ before its formation, and as many more as (having been at any previous time on regimental or general staff for certain periods) chose to elect for it, thus creating a body of staff officers beyond the requirements of the service, and whom now it is not very well known how to dispose of. In fact, several may be said to be drawing pay for doing next to nothing. The economy of the measure consisted in this. For fear, apparently, staff appointments should go begging, an inducement was held out to enter the corps. A lieutenant, who had been a certain number of years in the service, and out of that had been fortunate enough to be a certain period on either regimental or general staff, was to be promoted to captain, and draw captain's pay; a captain in like manner to become a major; a major, a lieutenant-colonel. Of course, under these circumstances there was no great difficulty in filling up the new staff corps to overflowing. Men had no objection to do the same work with increased pay. Not a few who were regimental captains at the formation of the corps are now lieutenant-colonels. The question is, how are all these field-officers to be employed who have been unsatisfactorily almost idling away their time for the last two or three years?

But how stands the case with the officers who had not had the interest and opportunity to get on the staff before the Staff Corps came into existence?

They remain stationary in their regiments, with their promotion retarded by the names of those who are actually out of the regiment, and contribute in no way to any of its funds, being retained in the cadre of the corps. Thus, the name of an officer, who is actually a lieutenant-colonel in the Staff Corps, remains as captain on the roll of officers of his old regiment, and until in the common course of events he would have attained not merely his majority, but his lieutenant-colonelcy, or become a casualty, the officer next below him cannot be promoted. Or to put it in another way. The second captain of a regiment, where the major and senior captain have both entered the Staff Corps, cannot obtain his majority till the names of both these officers are removed from the cadre of their old regiment, and this will not be till these officers would have been promoted in the ordinary course of events, supposing them to have remained in the regiment, unless they become casualties in the meantime. These two officers may probably both be lieutenant-colonels in the Staff Corps. I know an instance where the above example is actually the case.

This is where the great injustice exists, and which, I believe, is the main cause of the petitions to Parliament on the part of Indian officers.

In such a state of affairs it is not surprising that officers are becoming disgusted with the service; but, of course, will not, or perhaps cannot, leave it, unless sufficient compensation is made to them.

The fact is the Staff Corps has created a superabundance of field officers, who, together with those whose prospects are blighted, should be induced to retire by a liberal bonus. The great difficulty, however, is to convince the Secretary of State for India that four is the double of two. When the arithmetical fact dawns on his perception, he will probably discover that it is more economical to pay officers in England as pensions half of what they receive in India as pay.

This is but a very imperfect sketch of the Indian Staff Corps and its consequences. It may, however, draw attention to the subject, and give the public an inkling as to the state of affairs out here, which it is difficult for them to come to a knowledge of, and it may lead others to enlarge on the matter, and corroborate what is here stated.—I am, sir,

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—I venture to call the attention of the public to the fact that the Central India Prize Money remains to be paid to our Anglo-Indian forces, also that the siege and capture of the large city of Kotah, the metropolis of Rajpootana, has never been rewarded by a clasp, as stated in the English Times, or even by prize money, to which Generals Roberts and Lawrence were entitled.—I remain, sir, your obedient servant,

VERITUS.

SIR JOHN BENN WALSH V. THE
SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA AND THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—MAY 15.

(Before the Lord CHANCELLOR, Lord BROUGHAM, Lord WENSLEYDALE, and Lord CHELMSFORD.)

This appeal from the Court of Chancery involved a most singular and important question—whether the respondent, the Secretary of State for India, was bound, as succeeding to the liabilities of the East India Company, to pay to the executor of the first Lord Clive, first, the sum of five lacs of sicca rupees, which the company undertook to pay to Lord Clive whenever they should cease to employ ships, and to have a military force in their actual pay and service; and, secondly, five eighth parts of the sum of £24,128, which belonged to Lord Clive, and which he left in the hands of the Company for objects which have become extinct. The questions arise under the following circumstances:—By an indenture dated the 6th of April, 1770, made between the East India Company and Lord Clive, after reciting that Meer Mahomed Jaffer Cawn, deceased, late Nabob of the kingdom or province of Bengal, did before his death bequeath to Lord Clive the sum of three lacs of rupees, 50,000 rupees in jewels, and 50,000 in money, and one lac in gold mohurs, in all five lacs of rupees, and after reciting that the said five lacs of rupees, of the value of £62,833, 6s. 8d., had been received by Lord Clive and paid by him into the Company's treasury at Calcutta, for which he obtained their notes bearing interest at the rate of 8 per cent. per annum, and reciting that Lord Clive, being zealous for the prosperity of the company, the security of their territories and territorial revenues in India belonging to them, and their trade and commerce, which greatly depended on the bravery and conduct of their troops; and considering that the establishment of a provision for such of the officers and private men employed in their service as should be disabled by age, war, or disease contracted during their service would tend to induce fit persons to enter into their service, and encourage the bravery of the soldiery employed therein, had proposed to the Court of Directors of the company, to appropriate the interest of the said five lacs of rupees for the support of a certain number of officers, non-commissioned officers, and private men in the service of the said company, who from wounds, length of service, or diseases contracted during their service, were unable or unfit to serve any longer, and whose fortunes might be too scanty to afford the officers a decent and the private men a comfortable subsistence in their native country, and also to make some provision for the widows of such officers and private men as should have been entitled to the said bounty, or whose husbands should have lost their lives in the service, and reciting that Syf-al-Dowla, the then Nabob of Bengal, had given the company the sum of three lacs of rupees as an addition to the fund, and reciting that it was proposed that the Court of Directors and their successors should be perpetual trustees of the fund, it was covenanted between the parties that the eight lacs should remain in the hands of the company, who should pay 8 per cent. per annum to the objects of the trust; that the sum of £24,128 then due for interest upon the five lacs should be capitalised, and should be applied to the purposes of the fund. The Company then covenanted that if they should part with their territories, so that his jaghire ceased, or if before the year 1784 they ceased to employ a military force, they would pay to Lord Clive, or his representatives, the sum of five lacs of rupees, subject to any existing pensions. If, after 1784, the Company ceased to have a military force, the interest of the eight lacs was to be applied to the benefit of their sailors; and if at any time after 1784 the Company should cease to employ a military force in their actual pay and service in the East Indies, and also ships for carrying on their trade and commerce, "then, and in such case, as soon as the said event should happen, the said United Company should and would pay unto the said Robert Lord Clive, his executors, administrators, or assigns, for his and their own use, at their treasury in Calcutta aforesaid, the full sum of the five lacs of sicca rupees," subject to the payment of all pensions and annuities for the lives of the persons then entitled thereto. By the Act of 1833 it was enacted that the Company should close their commercial business, and since April, 1834, they have ceased to employ ships for carrying on their trade and commerce; and by the Act of 1858 all sovereign and territorial rights were taken away from the company and vested in her Majesty, and, in consequence of such enactment, they ceased to employ a military force in their actual pay and service in the East Indies. Under these circumstances the appellant, who is the legal representative of Lord Clive, claims the payment from the Secretary of State for India, as succeeding to the liabilities of the company, of the five lacs of rupees and the £24,128, and in July, 1860, he filed a bill in Chancery to enforce his claim. The defence rested on two grounds, the first being the statute of limitations, it being contended that by the operation of the Act of 1833 the company became trustees for the Crown of the revenues of India, out of which their forces were paid, and therefore that their military force, which previously to the 22nd of April, 1834, had been in the actual pay and service of the company within the meaning of the deed of 1770, ceased to be in such actual pay and service on that day. The second defence raised by the answer was that the officers and men composing the Indian military forces of her Majesty were the persons for whom the pensions and benefits provided by the deed of 1770 were designed, and that while such a similar force exists the intention of the parties' deed would be frustrated if such pensions and benefits were held to have ceased in consequence of events affecting merely the character and position of the trustees of the funds out of which such pensions and benefits were provided. The cause came on to be heard in December, 1861, before the Master of the Rolls, who dismissed the bill with costs, on the grounds that the sums settled by the deed of 1770 were trust funds in the hands of the East India Company at the time the Act of 1858 was passed, and that by the express provisions of the Act this trust fund, in common with all other trust funds held by the East India Company for the Government of India, passed to her Majesty to be applied to the same purpose.

Against that decision the present appeal was brought.

The arguments were not concluded when their Lordships rose.

Sir H. Cairns, Mr. Hobhouse, and Mr. Bridge appeared for the appellants; and the Solicitor-General, Mr. Forsyth, and Mr. Melville represented the Secretary of State for India; and the Attorney-General and Mr. Wickens appeared on behalf of the Crown.

MAY 19.

The noble and learned lords present this morning were the Lord Chancellor, Lord Brougham, Lord Wensleydale, and Lord Chelmsford.

The arguments in this appeal from the decision of the Master of the Rolls were concluded this afternoon.

The appellant sought to have it declared that he was entitled to the sum of £62,833, the value of five lacs of rupees, and also the sum of £24,128, which had been given to the East India Company by the first Lord Clive in trust for the benefit of the disabled officers of their forces in India, with a provision that such sums of money were to be repaid to him or his representatives in the event of the Company ceasing to employ military and naval forces in India. The appellant contended that by the Act of 1858 the events contemplated by Lord Clive had happened, and that, therefore, he, as his representative, was entitled to the several sums so given. The Secretary of State by his answer in Chancery submitted, first, that, by the operation of the Act of 1833, the Company became divested of their military command in India, and had only acted since that period as trustees for the Crown of the revenues of India, out of which the troops were paid; and upon this point a plea of the Statute of Limitations was founded. In case of this not being considered a valid objection, it was further contended that the officers and men composing the Indian military forces of Her Majesty were the persons for whom the pensions and benefits provided by the deed of 1770 were designed, and that while such a similar force existed, the intention of the parties to that deed would be frustrated if such pensions and benefits were held to have ceased in consequence of events affecting merely the character and position of the trustees of the funds out of which such pensions and benefits were provided. The Master of the Rolls decided against the appellant on the ground that the Company held the two sums in trust for the objects described in the deed of 1770, and that by the Act of 1858 this trust fund, in common with all trust funds held by the East India Company for the Government of India, passed to Her Majesty, to be applied to the same purpose.

It was now contended, on behalf of the appellant, with regard to the first objection, that from an examination of the provisions of the Act of 1833, and of the proceedings of the Company between the date of that Act and the passing of the Act of 1858, and of the dealings of the Company with their troops, and of the dealings of the Crown and the Company with one another, it would appear that it was not until the Act of 1858 had passed that the Company ceased to employ a military force in their actual pay and service within the meaning of the deed of 1770; and, further, that as the life interest of all officers and soldiers entitled to pensions were reserved, the whole sum would not have fallen into Lord Clive's representatives for many years after 1834, supposing that to be the period at which within the meaning and terms of the deed the Company ceased to maintain a military force. Although by the Act of 1833 large powers were given to the Crown, yet large powers were also reserved to the Company, and from that time, and up to 1858, they exercised an independent authority in India. The Act of 1833 recognised the East India Company as having a military force under their exclusive control, and, under its enactments the Company acted independently of the Crown, and on their own views of policy, one memorable instance of which was their compelling the Crown to remove Lord Ellenborough from his office of Governor-General of India. With regard to the second objection, it was argued that the events which had happened did not merely affect the position of the trustees of the fund, but affected the position of the employers of the Indian army, and the Indian army itself. Lord Clive's object was to form a permanent provision for an army having no national resources or permanent and recognised taxation to support it, and he did not desire to support a Royal or national army, but merely those European soldiers who were actually in the pay and service of the East India Company, in whose success he naturally took a great interest. The events which happened were, in fact, the very events on the occurrence of which he stipulated he should have his money back again—namely, in the event of the authority of the Company being superseded by another authority which was well able to support its own army, and in the event of the Company ceasing to employ troops in their actual pay and service. With regard to the ground upon which the Master of the Rolls decided in favour of the respondents, it was argued that, even if this were the true view of the Act of 1858, it afforded no answer whatever to the appellant's claim to the five lacs of rupees which the Company expressly engaged to pay whenever they should cease to employ a military force in their actual pay and service in the East Indies; the covenant of the Company having the effect of creating an original and independent legal liability to pay the money whenever the stipulated event should happen. But, on broader grounds, the appellant contended that it was altogether beyond the scope of the Act of 1858 to destroy the claims of private persons against the Company, or to substitute one class of objects for another as rightful claimants against the trust funds vested in the Company; that the intention and legal effect of the Act was to give to every person the same rights against the Crown as he would have had against the Company if they had continued to possess their former property and privileges, and to give no other and no further rights; that, as no soldier not having been in the actual pay and service of the Company could have claimed any benefit of the funds settled by the deed of 1770 against the Company, so no such soldier could now claim any such benefit against the Crown; that if upon the stipulated events taking place while the trust funds remained vested in the Company the objects of the deed would have become extinct, they had equally become extinct though the trust funds passed to the Crown; and that, therefore, the Crown stood in exactly the same position with regard to the appellant's claim as the company itself would have done. Under these circumstances it was contended that the decision of the court below was wrong, and ought to be reversed.

On behalf of the respondent, the Secretary of State for India, it was contended that the effect of the Act of 1833 was to destroy the supremacy of the East India Company in India, and that since the passing of that Act the Company had acted merely in the subordinate capacity of trustee for the Crown in all matters, whether civil or military. In case their lordships should be of a contrary opinion, it was contended that the objects of the trust—the officers and soldiers of the Indian Army—were still in existence, and therefore the trust had not determined; and, thirdly, it was urged that the Act of 1858 expressly put the Crown in the same position with regard to the trust funds as was previously held by the Company itself, and that therefore the Crown must be regarded as the proper trustee of the sums claimed by the appellant.

The Attorney-General, on behalf of the Crown, prayed that any sums that their lordships might consider the appellant not entitled to might be applied to purposes to be declared in a scheme to be drawn up by the Court of Chancery.

At the conclusion of the arguments their lordships postponed the further consideration sine die.

COWAN v. LASCELLES.—CURIOUS CASE.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH—MAY 15.

(After Term Sittings at Nisi Prius, at Guildhall, before Mr. Justice WIGHTMAN and a Special Jury.)

This was a curious case as exemplifying the necessity of legible handwriting, especially in the case of signatures, which are too often made up of a number of hieroglyphics, more resembling Chinese characters than distinct, clear writing. The action was for falsely and fraudulently representing to the plaintiff that he was authorised by G. P. G. Cannon to sell for him certain coffee plantations and estates situate in India, and also Arthur Lascelles' estates in India, for the purpose of inducing the plaintiff to get up a joint-stock company (limited) for the purchase of the estates. The plaintiff endeavoured to get up the company, and was put to great expense, which was rendered useless in consequence of their being unable to carry out the project owing to the alleged false representations of the defendant.

The defendant pleaded not guilty, and, secondly, that he did not represent as alleged.

Mr. Hawkins, Q.C., and Mr. Inderwick were counsel for the plaintiff; Mr. Edward James, Q.C., and Mr. Prentice were counsel for the defendant.

The dispute in question arose in consequence of the defendant's reading the signature of "G. P. Glason for G. P. G. Cannon"—a mistake which Mr. Davis, the officer of the court, fell into when asked to read the letter and signature, and which from inspection of the document we can safely state would be read for Cannon by 99 persons out of every 100. It appeared that the plaintiff is a gentleman residing at 4, Connaught-square, Hyde Park, and the defendant is a retired officer of the Indian civil service, Madras, residing at Hampstead, a director of the Eastern Bengal Tea Company, and chairman of the Indian Freehold Land Company, which has been recently wound up. The plaintiff was introduced to the defendant by a gentleman connected with India, and the intimacy that took place between them led to the possibility of their getting up a company for the purchase of land in India and its cultivation. The plaintiff represented that the defendant had authority to sell his son's estates in India, and also General Cannon's estate, which produces the best coffee, and is well known in the market, upon the faith of which the plaintiff got up a company, but that its completion was frustrated from its afterwards turning out that the estate for sale was not Cannon's estate but Glason's. When the matter was first mooted the proposition was to purchase the son's estates through the Indian Freehold Land Company for £25,000, but as they were too small for the purposes of a company it was arranged that Cannon's estate should also be purchased for £21,000. He drew a prospectus, on the faith of the purchase of Cannon's estate, of the proposed company, and he asked several gentlemen to become directors. He accidentally met the defendant one day and showed him the draft copy. They stood under a gateway where the defendant read it, and expressed his wish to become a director. Plaintiff got several other gentlemen to become directors and to promise to take shares, and the prospectus was issued. The company was called "The Neilgherry and Mysore Tea and Coffee Plantation Company (Limited)," in 7,500 shares of £20 each, with the following directors:—Sir J. Paxton, M.P., Lord W. Hay, Mr. Fergusson, 20, Langham place, director of the Sylhet and Cachar Tea Company; Mr. Francis Lascelles (the defendant), Mr. J. Cowan (the plaintiff) managing director. The company was formed for the purpose of completing the purchase of the estates of Messrs. Arthur Lascelles and G. P. G. Cannon, known by the name of Strathern Marylands, in Wynaud, Parenda Methal, Manara Mullau, Coocha Mullah, and Billia Para, in Mysore and on the Malabar Coast, with the object of extending the present cultivation of coffee and the growth of tea under the most favourable circumstances. The estate comprises 3,000 acres of the finest and most fertile soil in the slopes of the Neilgherry Hills, in Mysore, and the price was calculated at less than three years' purchase. Several meetings of the directors were held, and the business of the company was fully discussed. By the deed the company was to be finally formed by the 1st of October last, or the purchase to be void. It was then that the mistake was discovered, and the defendant would not agree to an extension of time. Plaintiff was put to the expense of £152 in bringing out the company. Afterwards he found from the defendant that Cannon had been dead for two years, and he said that the letter was signed by his nephew, who was in possession of the estate.

In cross-examination, he said he was to be managing director of the company, at a salary of not less than £300 per annum: £1,000 was to be divided annually amongst the directors. Besides that the managing director was to be paid £1 per ton for every ton of coffee produce brought to market by the company, and such additional sum, equal to $1\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. on the value of all tea and other produce not coffee brought to market by the company, and when the company paid 10 per cent. there should be appropriated out of the funds of the company such sum of money in addition to the £1,000 for the directors, a sum equal to one-tenth of the surplus profits for the further remuneration of the directors and the managing director, and to be divided in such a manner as they should appoint. Lord Wm. Hay objected to some of the clauses in the deed; but he did not object to plaintiff's remuneration. He withdrew from the direction after his lordship had signed the articles of association. The defendant objected to some of the clauses in the deed. It was at first proposed that he should have £600 a year. Messrs. Crossley were fixed upon as the brokers, and he and defendant called on them for that purpose. They at first assented, but afterwards resigned. They then called on Messrs. Froom and another broker, all of whom refused to belong to the company. The advertisements were withdrawn, and the company never was advertised. That was before it was known of the mistake. He had the letter referred to and read it, and read the name as G. P. G. Cannon. The company was not advertised because they could not get a broker's name. He knew the defendant was chairman of the Indian Land Company, and the purchase was to be made through them at a charge of 5 per cent. on the purchase-money. On the 8th of August, 1862, a deed of assent was drawn up between Mr. Sowerby, surveyor of the Indian Land Company, and the plaintiff for the purchase of Mr. Arthur Lascelles' and General Cannon's estates through the company, and that if no allotment of shares took place before the 1st of October the agreement was to be void, no personal responsibility attaching to the plaintiff.

Re examined: Sowerby was managing director of the Indian Land Company. The allotment of the shares was delayed in consequence of something being wrong about Cannon's estate. The defendant said he had written to India to his son for an explanation, and it was suggested that the company should not be advertised until after the receipt of that information. The defendant objected to an extension of the time.

Mr. Fergusson, one of the directors, and also director and chairman of the Bengal Coal Company, &c., said Cannon's coffee fetched the highest price in the market. Defendant said he had authority to sell Cannon's estate, and produced the letter at a meeting of the directors held on the 20th September. The defendant explained the mistake he had made about the sale of Cannon's estate in reading Cannon's name for Glason. It was suggested that time should be given to make arrangements under the altered circumstances for the allotment of the shares. Lascelles said the agreement was at an end, and he declined to extend the time.

Cross-examined: He saw the letter of authority, and mistook the name.

Mr. Justice Wightman said the writing was such a scrawl that, hastily read, it would easily be taken for Cannon.

Mr. Deane, solicitor to the plaintiff, was also solicitor to the company. His charges in connection with it, amounting to £162, had been paid by the plaintiff. In July defendant said he had authority from Cannon to sell the estates. A copy of a letter was forwarded to him with the name of Cannon. At a board meeting in September he explained that the deed would be void without an extension of time, which the defendant refused. No explanation was then given about the letter.

Cross-examined: About the first week in October he first heard of the difficulty about Cannon. Previous to that he had heard nothing about it.

By the Judge: The defendant said he would not give an hour's extension of time, and appeared reluctant to answer any questions. The only difference he knew of was in reference to the growing crop on Cannon's estate; information relative to it was expected from India.

Mr. Wagstaff said that in the latter end of September a proposition was made to him to find some of the capital. He saw the defendant about the 20th in reference to it. The proposed prospectus was placed before him, and he observed that his name being in the prospectus and his son's estate to be purchased, was undesirable and must be altered. He said Cannon's estate was a very good one, but it could not be obtained because Cannon was dead; but he knew his nephews, who had agents in London, from whom he might still be able to purchase the estate. Defendant objected to the plaintiff being the managing director, and the affair proceeded on its then basis. If certain alterations could be made in the articles of association he would extend the time. He embodied the alterations in writing in the prospectus for him to lay before the plaintiff, stating his objection. The prospectus with the memoranda were returned to the defendant.

Cross-examined.—He saw the plaintiffs and laid the objections before them. The plaintiffs declined to agree to them.

This was the plaintiffs' case.

Mr. Edward James submitted there was no case of fraud. He should not then rely on it, but put the defendant into the box.

Mr. Hawkins asked the learned judge to be permitted to amend the declaration.

The learned Judge refused.

Mr. Edward James said the defendant was a gentleman who had for many years occupied the position of a judge in the Madras Presidency, and he utterly denied having been guilty of fraud. The whole affair was a matter of mistake, which every one who had seen the letter had fallen into. He called the defendant.

Mr. Lascelles deposed that he was chairman of the India Freehold Land Company. His son was the owner of large landed estates in India. He had authority to sell two of them. He received the authority from his son by letter, which he produced. He had sold one for him. The letter signed "Glason," and mistaken for "Cannon," he received from his son. It commenced "My Dear Lascelles," which related to his son, and not to defendant. He read the signature "Cannon." He knew slightly General Cannon, an old Peninsular man. He was aware that he was dead, and that two of his nephews were in possession of the property, and at the time he read the letter he addressed a letter to Mr. Cannon, as from the board, in reply to it, which he enclosed for delivery in another letter to his son. The letter was read aloud at the board meeting of the Land Company by the secretary, reading the signature as "Cannon." The plaintiff was to have £3,000 for getting up the company. Defendant was not to get a farthing. Messrs. Crossley would not on any consideration become brokers; another refused, and he withdrew the advertisement accordingly. Messrs. Crossley refused £1,000 for the use of their names, and afterwards an offer of a commission in addition, but declined. Plaintiff made the offer. They declined on the ground of the objectionable nature of the articles of the association, and that they would not be able to face their shareholders with them. One objection was, that the plaintiff could not be removed for five years, except by special meeting of the board and shareholders, the former to be unanimous, and by a majority of the shareholders afterwards. They also objected to the payment to the managing directors, which would amount to £600, £800, £900, and that they were all purchased men on the board. Messrs. Froom also objected to become the brokers on similar grounds. Lord William Hay after that resigned. He first discovered the mistake in the signature about the 2nd or 4th of October. Up to that time he firmly believed the letter was signed Cannon. He did not say the letter was signed by Cannon's nephew.

Cross-examined: The signature was more like Cannon than Glason. Every member at the Land Board read the signature as Cannon. He produced the letter as coming from Cannon. General Cannon's estate was in Mysore. The letter had reference to Glason's estates. He had no recollection of introducing Sowerby to the plaintiff for the purpose of getting up the company. He had 400 shares of £1 each in the Land Company. It was wound up a few days ago. He did not contradict the impression formed by Messrs. Crossley that the directors were purchased directors. He did not know that Mr. Fergusson had subscribed for 250 shares, although his signature was to the paper. He did not read it when he signed it.

Mr. E. J. Ray, secretary to the Indian Land Company, read the signature to the letter "Cannon."

Cross-examined: No doubt the defendant mentioned the name of Cannon before the letter was produced.

The learned Judge, in summing up, left it to the jury to say if there was any known false representation, and whether the company was not carried out from the non-extension of time.

The Jury found for the defendant.

The learned Judge said it appeared to him that by the deed put in the contract was with the Land Company through Sowerby.

Leave was reserved for the plaintiff to move the Court above.

BOMBAY, BARODA, AND CENTRAL INDIA RAILWAY.

The report of the directors, to be submitted at the half-yearly meeting of this company on the 22nd inst., states that the mileage of line open and producing traffic, during the half year ending December 31st, was as follows.—From 1st July to 2nd September, Bulsar to Dolia, 132 $\frac{3}{4}$ miles; from 3rd September to 31st December, Bulsar to Mehmoodabad, 167 $\frac{1}{4}$ miles. On the 20th January last the line was opened to Ahmedabad (its present northern terminus), a further distance of 17 $\frac{1}{4}$ miles, thus increasing the total length of railway open for traffic to 185 $\frac{1}{4}$ miles. As regards the condition of the open line, recently reported upon, there are still some deficiencies to be supplied, though not involving a large amount of expenditure. The large viaducts and heavy works have all stood well, and the line generally is in good running order. The remaining portion of the railway, from Bulsar to Bombay (124 $\frac{1}{2}$ miles in length), is being actively proceeded with. The early and substantial completion of the line rendered it necessary, in the judgment of the directors, that their consulting engineer, Lieutenant J. P. Kennedy, should proceed to India, for the purpose of personally superintending the works. He left this country in the beginning of March, and by the recent mail he has written to say: "My intention is to concentrate the energies of all hands on the opening of the mail line from Bulsar to Bombay, and to defer all subsidiary operations until after the monsoon." The managing agent concurs with him in thinking it quite possible to run an engine throughout the entire line by the end of June. The bridge-work, which forms so large and peculiar a feature in the formation of this railway, has been rapidly and successfully constructed by the engineering staff; the bridges over the Mbye river and the Bassein channels being specially illustrations of this fact. His Excellency the Governor of Bombay, after a visit to the Bassein-bridge, describes the bridge as "a great triumph of art, and one reflecting much credit on the engineers." The growth of the traffic, and the results of the working of the line, are shown in the comparative statements appended to the report. From these it appears that the receipts from passengers have increased from £15,135 in the half-year ending December, 1861, to £22,752 in the half-year ending December last. The goods traffic in the period above referred to has almost trebled itself, the receipts being £5,092 and £13,985 respectively. This increase is still largely going on, so that the traffic manager reports that he has been obliged to run several additional special goods trains; and the Government Deputy Consulting Engineer, in his report, says:—"During the next three months the cotton traffic will probably be almost heavy enough to require a train to itself one way." The gross receipts, the directors state, have increased from £21,725 in the half-year ending December, 1861, to £38,803 in the half-year ending December last. This is considered a satisfactory increase when it is remembered that the open line up to that period consisted only of intermediate portions between the two termini—the most southerly point being one hundred and twenty-five miles from Bombay, the great port to which almost all the traffic on the railway must come. The working expenses, chiefly in locomotives and maintenance of way, have somewhat increased in the half-year ending June last, as compared with the previous half-year. No accident in the conduct of the half-year's traffic is reported. The net amount received from the working of the line up to the 30th June, 1862, was £28,648. 18s. 4d., and this sum has been paid over to the Government of India in reduction of the guaranteed interest. In conclusion, the directors say that, as the line sanctioned with guaranteed capital is drawing near completion, it becomes a matter for consideration whether extensions into neighbouring populous and fertile districts might not be entered upon, but with a separate and distinct capital, and under new arrangements to be made with the Government, though in intimate alliance with the existing system and management. Such extensions formed part of the original scheme of the company, and were necessary to complete its territorial district. The directors will not lose sight of this complement to the undertaking.

MISCELLANEOUS.

TRADE WITH JAPAN.—"The exports from Japan," says the Annales du Commerce Extérieur, "are acquiring considerable extension. They attained at Tanagawa, in 1862, the sum of 6,300,000 dols. (about 37,800,000*fr.*). Raw silk figured in the amount for about 5-6ths, the export of that produce having increased from 12,000 bales in 1861 to 22,000 in 1862. The value of the tea exported was 567,000 dols. The imports were estimated at 2,576,930 dols., of which 1,190,000 dols. were for lead and tin used for the ornaments of the Japanese. French commerce is down for one-tenth in the amount of the exports. China, notwithstanding the immensity of her territory, has only supplied France with four times the quantity of raw silk the latter received from Japan in 1862."

EXPORT OF SPECIE.—The steamer Pera, which sailed yesterday, took out £154,765 in specie for the East, of which £22,555 is gold and the rest silver. The bulk (£126,610) is for China.

CHARTERED MERCANTILE BANK OF INDIA.—

At the annual meeting of the Chartered Mercantile Bank of India, held yesterday, the report of the directors was unanimously adopted. It stated that after providing for the expenses of management and all bad and doubtful debts, the net profit for the year amounted to £94,228. 14s. 1d., making, with a small previous balance, a total of £94,269. 9s. 2d. Of this sum £50,000 had been paid in two half-yearly dividends, making, together, 10 per cent. on the paid-up capital. £40,000 had been added to the reserve fund, which now amounted to £100,000, of which £60,000 was invested in Indian Government Securities, and it was intended to invest the balance, £40,000, in public securities as opportunities offer. Arrangements have been made with Mr. C. Pearson, chartered accountant, at Edinburgh, to act as agent for the bank, for the receipt of deposit money, and the conduct of other business as required. The chairman stated that the deposits showed an increase of £800,000, and that there had been a considerable increase of business in the last year. All the losses incurred during the year had been written off. The amount of the Hong Kong loss was £13,000, not £8,000, as had been previously stated; but the board acquitted the manager of all blame. In future, the chairman said, the dividend would be paid on the 1st of January and the 1st of July. Arrangements have been completed for opening a branch in Japan, from which advantageous results are anticipated. The retiring directors were re-elected, and a resolution was passed increasing the remuneration of the directors from £1,800 to £2,000 per annum, to take effect from the 1st of January last.

THE LOSS OF THE "SARAH PALMER."—The official report respecting the loss of this vessel, an iron-built three-masted sailing ship of 1,301 tons, which was lost off the coast of Ireland on the 28th of April, has been made to the Board of Trade. She left Calcutta on the 21st of January last, with a cargo valued at £100,000, and, after a prosperous voyage, reached Mizen Head, on the Irish coast, April 28, and on the evening of the same day the Tuskar Lighthouse was visible, the rate of speed being ten knots an hour; no bearings were taken then or subsequently until the vessel struck on a dangerous rock about a mile from the Tuskar light. It was found impossible to save the ship, which was abandoned on the evening of the 29th. After a review of the facts connected with the loss of the vessel, the report proceeds to say:—"The master was on deck directing the course till seven p.m. The land had been in sight throughout the day; the evening was clear, the lighthouse on the Tuskar plainly visible, and the wind favourable. The ship was approaching the Tuskar at the rate of ten knots an hour. Nevertheless, the master left the deck to go down to his tea. Upon his return to the deck he found the ship too close to the Tuskar, and being aware of the existence of a sunken rock to the S.W. of that light, he ordered the ship to be kept away, but unfortunately too late, as the helm had hardly been put to port when the ship struck. The loss of this valuable ship can only be attributed to the neglect on the part of the master in not taking bearings of the Tuskar, and hugging the land too closely. I have, therefore, by the advice of the nautical assessors, pronounced Mr. William Reid in default, and have, in accordance with the provisions of the Merchant Shipping Act Amendment Act, 1862, suspended his certificate for the space of six calendar months." The report is signed by Mr. T. S. Raffles, magistrate, Liverpool, and Messrs. Harris and Baker, nautical assessors.

ARRIVAL OF TROOPS FROM INDIA.—The troop ship Middlesex has arrived from Calcutta, Jan. 27, and St. Helena, April 6. She brings the 92nd Highlanders from Calcutta, under the command of Colonel Lockhart. She was off Falmouth on Saturday night, received her orders for Spithead, and proceeded there.

THE "W. W. SMITH" has arrived from China with 769,573 lbs. of tea and 39 bales of silk.

The Misses WINTERBOTTOM can give most unexceptionable references.

MADAME BOILEAU and Daughters (of the Church of England) are devoting their time to the INSTRUCTION of a limited number of YOUNG LADIES. References—The Rev. Dr. Irons, Vicar of Brompton; Mrs. Giles Pullen, Youngbury, Ware, Herts; P. C. Owen, Esq., South Kensington Museum; Capt. Powke, R.E., South Kensington Museum; Lieut.-general Carmichael, Hyndford-house, Brompton.
Address Madame BOILEAU, 40, Grove-place, Brompton; or J. MASTERS and Co., New Bond-street, W.

SUPERIOR EDUCATIONAL HOME.—A Lady, daughter of an Officer, RECEIVES a limited number of PUPILS, who share the comforts of home with her own Children, and have the advantage of constant intercourse with a resident German Governess. In addition to a good English Education, the course of instruction comprises the French, German, and Italian Languages, the Piano-forte, Drawing, and Dancing. Inclusive terms, Eighty and One Hundred Guineas per annum.

Address Mrs. ALFRED MORRIS, Hazlewood-lodge, Roupell-park, Streatham, Surrey.

A LADY, who has for many years conducted a superior School, will be happy to RECEIVE into her Establishment YOUNG LADIES from India or the Colonies. The system of Education is based on the modern and intelligent plan of cultivating the understanding rather than crowding the memory. To those who value thorough Christian principles, combined with home comforts and a superior Education, this Establishment can be highly recommended. Testimonials from ministers and others.

For further particulars apply to Miss MASON, Agency for the Employment of Ladies, 12, Cranley-terrace, Fulham-road, London, S.W.

A CLERGYMAN, having the Son of an Officer of rank in India under his Charge to Educate with his own Children, is desirous of RECEIVING TWO more LITTLE BOYS, between the ages of Six and Nine preferred. Residence near a favourite watering place on the South Coast. Terms moderate.
Address Rev. M. A., care of Mr. J. W. VICKERS, 2, Cowper's-court, Cornhill, London, E.C.

MILITARY EDUCATION.—The Rev. CHARLES J. HUGHES, M.A. (Wrangler, Cambridge, 1852), Rector of Pertvale (population 32), begs to inform his Friends that he has REMOVED from the Finchley-road to his Residence (built expressly for him), CASTLEBAR-COURT, EALING, W., where he receives both Senior and Junior Pupils to prepare for the Army, Military Colleges, and the Civil Service.

HINDOOSTANI AND PERSIAN.

LESSONS in the above LANGUAGES are given by an INDIAN GENTLEMAN of Twenty Years' Experience as Professor, Interpreter, and Translator; who has obtained Certificates of degrees of honour and proficiency from the Examiners of the College of Fort William. He possesses the most satisfactory testimonials, and can give unexceptionable references.

Address, "ALLY," care of Messrs. ALLEN and Co., 13, Waterloo-place, S.W.

DENTAL SURGERY, 9, GROSVENOR-STREET.

MR. EPHRAIM MOSELY'S IMPROVEMENT in the CONSTRUCTION OF ARTIFICIAL TEETH, GUMS, and PALATES, on an INDIA-RUBBER BASE, are secured by Letters Patent, dated December, 1852, whereby the continual outlay of new teeth is avoided, alterations from the absorption of the gums, or any other cause, being easily remedied, and the first outlay no greater than for ordinary kinds. The extraordinary results of this application may be briefly noted as under:—It consists of one continuous piece of Prepared India-rubber. The Artificial Teeth present a uniformly even surface to the action of the tongue, preventing lodgment of food and all secretions, so much complained of in the present system. No gold or any other metal being required, all springs, wires, and fastenings are wholly unnecessary; sharp edges are avoided, a greatly increased freedom of suction is supplied, a natural elasticity hitherto wholly unattainable, and a fit protected with the most unerring accuracy, are secured; while, from the softness and flexibility of the agents employed, the greatest support is given to the adjoining teeth when loose or rendered tender by the absorption of the gums. The acids of the mouth exert no agency on the prepared india-rubber; and, as it is a non-conductor, fluids of any temperature may be retained in the mouth, all unpleasantness of smell and taste being at the same time provided against by the peculiar nature of its preparation.

FIRE DEPARTMENT.

The Company now stands, in point of revenue, seventh on the list of fire offices in the United Kingdom.
Insurances granted against fire at home, in the colonies, and most foreign countries.

FOREIGN RISKS.—The Directors, having devoted great attention to this branch of insurance, are enabled to offer unusual advantages as regards rates of premium and conditions, and a discount is allowed to merchants and others effecting their own and correspondents' insurances.

LIFE DEPARTMENT.

(REDUCED RATES FOR THE EAST INDIES AND CHINA.)

The Directors have recently adopted a new system of Rates for the East Indies and China, by which the insured, instead of being subjected to a heavy extra premium during the years of his residence within the Tropics, has the option of throwing the same over the whole currency of his insurance, by paying an unchanging rate, which it will be seen is very little higher than that charged for residence in Europe.

The following are specimens of the new Rates for civilians:

EAST INDIES AND CHINA.

ANNUAL PREMIUM (INCLUDING EXTRA) FOR THE INSURANCE OF £100.

(Payable during the entire currency of the Policy.)

NOTHING IMPOSSIBLE.—The greatest and most useful invention of the day, AQUA AMARELLA.—Messrs. JOHN GOSNELL and Co., Three King-court, Lombard-street, Perfumers to Her Majesty, respectfully offer to the public this truly marvellous fluid, which gradually restores the human hair to its pristine hue—no matter at what age. The Aqua Amarella has none of the properties of dys; it, on the contrary, is beneficial to the system, and when the hair is once restored one application per month will keep it in perfect colour. Price one guinea per bottle.

DINNEFORD'S PURE FLUID MAGNE-

SIA has been, during twenty-five years, emphatically sanctioned by the Medical Profession, and universally accepted by the Public, as the Best Remedy for Acidity of the Stomach, Heartburn, Headache, Gout, and Indigestion, and as a Mild Aperient for delicate constitutions, more especially for Ladies and Children. When combined with the Acidulated Lemon Syrup, it forms an agreeable Effervescent Draught, in which its aperient qualities are much increased. During Hot Seasons, and above all, in Hot Climates, the regular use of this simple and elegant remedy has been found highly beneficial.

It is prepared (in a state of perfect purity and of uniform strength) by DINNEFORD and Co., 172, New Bond-street, London; and sold by all respectable Chemists throughout the World.

FIRE! THIEVES!! FIRE!!!

C. H. GRIFFITHS having purchased nearly all the best quality of Fire-proof Safes from the International Exhibition of 1862, including those made by Messrs. Perry, Chatwood, Rhodes, and other eminent makers, is enabled to offer them at half the original cost. The patented improvements of the latter maker render it an impossibility for fire to take any effect under any circumstances of time and place. In consequence of the increasing demand for these essential and valuable repositories, which no house of business, or, indeed, private house (where plate, books, and documents are kept) should be without, in these hazardous and dangerous times C. H. G. has taken additional premises, 3, Pentonville-road, opposite the Angel, Islington, where he also intends to keep a variety of second-hand Safes by those eminent large makers, Milner, Price, Mordan, &c., at half the price of new. Sketches, with prices, free by post.

Quintessence of Jamaica Ginger and Camomile.

GINGER has long been deservedly known as an excellent domestic medicine, and, combined with camomile, it is the most efficient stomachic tonic known, for while the ginger relieves the stomach from distension and flatulency, arising from impaired digestion, the camomile strengthens the coats of the stomach, and by that means gives it a healthy and invigorating tone. So highly concentrated is this preparation, it is unimpaired by age or climate, and well adapted for exportation. In Gout, Spasms, Dysentery, Cholera, or those complaints incidental to tropical climates, it is invaluable, as in numerous cases a dose or two has checked and frequently cured most alarming attacks. No family should be without it. Sold in half-pints, quarter-pints, and one-eighth pints.

Agreeable Seidlitz Powder, in one bottle, protected by a case, with measure and spoon included. The advantage of this preparation is the perfect combination of the solid ingredients of the Seidlitz Spring in one compound powder.

It is very cooling and refreshing, well adapted for exportation, or travellers by land or sea.

Aromatic Tincture of Quinine.—For the prevention of Fever, Intermittent or Remittent Ague, and other effects of Malaria.

No person exposed to the influence or predisposing cause of Fevers should be without it, for if taken in small doses daily the system will become so thoroughly impregnated with its principles as to be rendered proof against all attacks of Contagion or Malaria.—Sold in pints, half-pints, and quarter-pints.

The above articles prepared only by THOS. WILKINSON (late Wilkinson, Bridge, & Co.), 270, Zeevan-street, London, W.

DRITCHARD'S DANDELION, CAMO-

MILE, RHUBARB, and GINGER PILLS.—This peculiar preparation of Dandelion acts particularly on the liver, thus avoiding the use of mercurials, and will be found invaluable to persons suffering from a sluggish state of that organ, or who have resided in India or other hot climates; whilst the well known stomachic efficacy of camomile, rhubarb, and ginger, renders these pills the most happy combination possible; and as many are at a loss for a safe remedy they will find this medicine a great convenience, which may be resorted to by all persons at any age, under any circumstances, and without the least inconvenience.

Prepared by W. Pritchard, Apothecary, 65, Charing-cross, London, in bottles, 1s. 1d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., and 11s. May be had of all Medicine Vendors.

NO MORE ERUPTIONS ON THE SKIN.

MOLLARD'S PERFUMED TOILET SULPHUR SOAP and CREAM, entirely free from any unpleasant smell, and are sovereign remedies against fever, local or chronic cutaneous eruptions, rheumatism, pains in the joints, &c. The Cream possesses all the properties of the renowned Barge Waters for baths. Recommended by the most eminent physicians. Prospects and testimonials sent on application.

Sold wholesale and retail by F. Newberry and Sons, 45, St. Paul's-churchyard; Dietrichsen and Hannay, 63, Oxford-street; G. Jozan, 49, Haymarket; T. Keating, 79, St. Paul's-churchyard; P. A. Gerard, 390, Strand; Bainbridge and Pound, 60, Leather-lane, and at the Central Depot, 2, Rupert-street, Coventry-street, W.

KEATING'S PERSIAN INSECT DESTROYING POWDER.

For which a Prize Medal was awarded to the Producer at the International Exhibition, 1862.

THIS POWDER is quite harmless to animal life, but is unrivalled in destroying Fleas, Bugs, Flies, Cockroaches, Beetles, Gnats, Mosquitoes, Moths in furs, and every other species of insect.

SPORTSMEN will find this an invaluable remedy for destroying Fleas in their Dogs, as also Ladies for their Pet Dogs. It is perfectly harmless in its nature, and may be applied without any apprehension, as it has no qualities deleterious to animal life.

Sold in packets 1s., 2s. 6d., and 4s. 6d. each, or post free for 14 or 36 postage stamps, by THOMAS KEATING, Chemist, 79, St. Paul's Churchyard, London, E.C.

Take notice each genuine packet bears the above name and address. See "The Field," October 7th and 9th, pp. 263, 283, and 294.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT.—YOUTH'S

FRIEND.—This excellent Ointment is so innocent in its nature, so cooling in its properties, and so healing in its action, that it is invaluable in skin diseases, scald head, tetter tooth rash, chafings, and the many varieties of rashes and eruptions well known and deeply dreaded in the nursery. Trivial maladies may by it be met and conquered at their outset, and all future mischief overcome before it has gained hold upon the constitution and endangered future health. Full directions are wrapped round each pot of Ointment. Holloway's Ointment may be applied with the best results in many diseases to which the sufferer silently submits, because the task of investigating them would be both difficult and delicate.

MAILS TO INDIA.

Mails to India and China, via Marseilles, are despatched from London as follows, viz.:—Those for Bombay packets, on the evening of the 3rd and 16th of each month; and those for Calcutta packets (including mails for Ceylon, Madras, and China), on the evenings of the 10th and 26th of each month. When any of these dates falls on a Sunday, the mails are made up on the following evening.

Letters and Newspapers can be forwarded to any part of India, via Bombay and Marseilles, and in most cases will reach their destination some days sooner than if despatched by the following Calcutta mail. The Bombay mails via Southampton, however, are no longer available for the transmission of Letters or Newspapers to the Madras Presidency.

Mails for the Mediterranean and all parts of India and China, except the Bombay Presidency, are despatched via Southampton on the mornings of the 4th and 20th, or, when either of these dates falls on Sunday, upon the previous evening.

Mails for the Mediterranean, the Presidency of Bombay, and Upper or North-West Provinces of Bengal and China, are despatched via Southampton, on the 13th and 27th of the month, except when these dates fall on Sunday, in which case they are forwarded on the previous evening.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

THE marriage of the Prince and Princess of Wales was but poorly celebrated at the several Presidencies of India; but this was owing to no lack of loyalty, but to mal-arrangements and accidental circumstances. One cause was the uncertainty with respect to the day fixed; for a blundering telegraph had announced to India that the marriage had been postponed from the 10th to the 18th of March, so that the authorities were perplexed for a time, and were at last driven into very abrupt and imperfect arrangements by a discovery of the mistake. The Governor-general was at Simla when he received final and certain information on the subject, and then issued an extraordinary Gazette declaring a public holiday on Monday, the 20th of April, which, unluckily, was the Bombay Mail day, when every one at that Presidency was busy letter-writing. A Royal salute was fired at every station. We cannot doubt for a moment that not our own countrymen only, but our fellow subjects in India of all creeds, would have celebrated the happy event with great enthusiasm and at great cost, too, if matters had not been bungled, and confused, and hurried. In spite of all disadvantages, however, the several Presidencies have sent loyal addresses of congratulation to the Prince and Princess.

Sir Charles Trevelyan's Budget is now being looked for with daily increasing anxiety. The natives still seem to hope that the obnoxious Income-tax will be abolished—a tax especially offensive to their habits and prejudices. Even Englishmen dislike it, as an inquisitorial interference with their private concerns, but the natives of India are peculiarly adverse to the revelation of the exact extent of their pecuniary means, and if any thing besides an interference with their religion could stir them to mutiny it would be a tax of this nature. But at this time they would submit to almost any degree of annoyance from the Government, even if they regarded the Government as oppressive and intentionally offensive, for with such a European force as we now have in the country all serious disaffection must be utterly hopeless. But while they know that the Indian Government was never stronger than it now is, they have observed that it was never more disposed to consult their true interests and respect their prejudices.

The Friend of India, of April 22nd, has the following paragraph:—

"As to relieve the weariness with which, for the past ten months, we have been watching the struggle between Cabul and Herat, an outbreak has taken place in the neighbouring country of Beloochistan, on our Scinde frontier. Since the murder of the great Nusseer Khan in 1857, his half-brother, Khodadad, has ruled as Khan. Placed, when only sixteen, at the head of nobles whom Colonel Green describes as a set of barons no less turbulent than those of the days of the Plantagenets, our agent yet managed to reconcile to the Khan all his chiefs, to recover for him the revolted Murrees and the provinces which Persia was gradually annexing, and to make him master of his country while he became our faithful ally. Since 1860, when the work was completed, Khelat has given us no trouble. It is as much our breakwater between Scinde and Persia as Afghanistan is between the Punjab and Central Asia. Its wool-producing capabilities are great. Through it lies the better of the two caravan routes into Central Asia. Along its Makran coast, where Alexander's soldiers perished, we are attempting to erect the telegraphic wire, and projecting a line of railway. Quetta alone, the principal town of the Shawl valley, is of immense strategical importance, commanding as it does the two high roads through the Bolan pass and over the Khelat plateau. Local accounts assert that Mirdal Khan, the ruler's cousin, after wounding him, has formed a party to supplant him, consisting of all the chiefs who do not receive a share of the black mail we pay for the safety of the Makran telegraph. As yet the accounts are native in their origin, but the return of the caravans which had left Kurrachee is ominous. Meanwhile, the telegraphic cable for the Persian Gulf has been landed at Gwader."

The Indian papers announce the death at Hyderabad of the aged Prince Shamz-ool-Omrah, described as the best and most enlightened member that has ever adorned the family of the Nizams of the Deccan. He was highly respected by both Europeans and Natives. He did good service to the British Government in the great mutiny by his steady loyalty, and by his influence over his relatives and his countrymen. If he had taken a part against us, the whole of the Deccan would have risen against us. The Government, in his lifetime, duly honoured and acknowledged his good services and fidelity, and at his death eighty-six minute-guns were fired in compliment to his memory, the number corresponding with his years.

Government currency-notes are now receivable at all treasuries in Assam, and measures are being taken to make notes generally available to persons who may have claims on the treasuries in Assam, and who may desire to obtain payment, or part payment, in notes.

Mr. Mansfield, Commissioner of Scinde, has left on a mission to the Imam of Muscat and Badjat, on the subject of the Persian Gulf Telegraph.

Dr. Elliott has presented a melancholy report to Government on the epidemic now raging in the district of Nuddea, generally considered a wholesome locality. For five years past, however, it has been afflicted with a disease almost as fatal as cholera. In one small town there were in one year 7,000 deaths out of a population of only 12,000. The doctor does not give this strange pestilence a name.

A communication from the home authorities has just been addressed to the Government of India, to the effect that her Majesty's Government have been pleased to offer annuities of 200l. (in addition to the pensions to which they may be entitled by the regulations) to a limited number of Regimental Colonels of the four Indian regiments of Artillery and Engineers. These annuities will be allotted according to seniority among the officers who may apply to retire under this arrangement. The annuities offered to Bengal, Madras, and Bombay are as follows:—Artillery: Bengal, 7; Madras, 4; Bombay, 3. Engineers: Bengal, 4; Madras, 2; Bombay, 2.

Transit duties on the principal roads in India are now in course of abolition.

The appointment of chief engineer to the Public Works Department of Madras has been abolished.

At Madras, Soojan Mull, a rich Sowcar, was prosecuted for having in his possession instruments and materials for counterfeiting Government stamps, and Cawder Bey, an influential Mahomedan, was arraigned for wilfully giving false evidence on a judicial proceeding. The first was acquitted legally, though he has not cleared himself to the satisfaction of the British Indian public. His own countrymen, however, are rejoicing at his escape. Cawder Bey, after a three days' trial, was found guilty, and, to the great grief of the followers of the Prophet, was sentenced to seven years' transportation.

A number of police appointments have been created in the Punjab, which include first and second-class superintendents, subordinate to which are several grades of assistants and supernumeraries.

The Indian correspondent of the Times gives the following extract from private letters on the subject of a flight of the King of Burmah's second son.

"Turning to Burmah, private letters inform me that our commercial engagement made with the King—for, as Lord Elgin said, it can hardly be called a treaty—is likely to produce the same state of things as we have had for the last three years in Japan, but on a smaller scale. There is an anti-foreign party who frighten the King, at present the sole trader in his dominions, with assurances that the foreigner will absorb all the commerce of his country. What connection there is between this and the flight of the King's second son to our province, it is difficult to see. A year ago the Prince Throngre-men-tha was married to his niece, the eldest daughter of the heir apparent, according to the Burmese rule that the Royal family must intermarry only with its own members. Accompanied by eighty horsemen, he made for a frontier town, of which his uncle is governor, and then on to Tongoo, our frontier station, where he delivered himself up to our officers. They very properly told him that he was free to go where he liked, and that they could do nothing for him. He is now, I believe, in Rangoon. He was hotly pursued by the King's horsemen, who demanded the youth from the Deputy Commissioner of Tongoo. That officer strove to make them understand that there was no extradition treaty, and that so long as the Prince behaved himself we could not turn him out of our territory. It seems that he tried to raise an insurrection before finally taking refuge with us. The punishment hanging over his head for unauthorised flight is death, so that he is more likely to take ship at Calcutta than go back to Mandalay. Why he has fled is not known, but I expect he chafed at the quasi imprisonment to which all the Royal family of Burmah have to submit, and was eager, now that there is a commercial treaty, to do something to carve out a career for himself and see the world."

The Hon. E. Drummond has left Calcutta for the seat of his Government at Allahabad.

The Hon. A. Roberts has taken his seat as a judge of the Bengal High Court, officiating in the place of Mr. Loch, who is on leave to England.

Sir Charles Trevelyan's scheme for the alteration of the arrangements now subsisting between the Presidency banks and the Government have not yet been revealed.

General Thomas, commanding the Calcutta Division, has returned to England by the steamer just arrived.

The Advocate General of Madras has again brought to the notice of the Home Government his claim on the Madras Government, for Rs. 55,000, on account of the trouble taken by him in the settlement of the affairs of the late Nawaub of the Carnatic.

The Pearl steamer, which had so narrow an escape from the fate of the Jason and Burmah is now afloat in the Madras Roads, almost uninjured. The Jason has been sold for Rs. 21,000. The vessel is to be broken up, but the engines, it is supposed, are not much injured, and may more than repay the outlay. The fittings, stores, &c., were sold separately. The total proceeds of the sale were Rs. 80,000.

The Nubia is to have Rs. 6,500 for her trip from Madras to the Straits.

Sala Jung, at Hyderabad, is acting the part of the Good Samaritan. He has expended eight lakhs of rupees in the purchase of rice for the poor, to be sold at a greatly reduced price.

BENGAL.

THE DUTCH IN THE EAST.

For more than twelve months past the British authorities both at home and in the East have frequently had their attention called to the encroaching spirit exhibited by the government of Netherlands India, and we might therefore not be surprised to see some steps adopted to put a limit to the almost insatiable desire of the Dutch for more territory in the Eastern Archipelago. Java has proved so lucrative a source whence to derive revenue to be spent in Europe—after the good old fashioned method of colonial taxation—that the Dutch evidently consider another Java would not prove a bad addition to its Empire in the East, and as some parts of Sumatra possess equal capabilities and a population of a similarly docile character, these are being gradually and quietly absorbed. The native chiefs have more than once and in different parts of Sumatra protested against this assumption of Dutch rule, but they are powerless in the matter, and so the annexations go on; but all our Government does is to remind some of the Rajahs that they are by treaty under obligations to us, while they, it appears, are only too anxious to see us set up to our responsibilities. But in the great majority of cases, as the Dutch well know, the lands belong to independent Rajahs with whom we are in no way under engagements. The attention of the Indian Government has lately been directed to the subject, but with the present determination of the Straits settlement to free themselves from the rule of his Government, and which they declare themselves sanguine of accomplishing in the year, it is not to be expected that Lord Elgin will trouble himself with so dangerous a question any more than the home Government has thought proper to do. Indeed, the British Government cannot with good grace, after so repeatedly declining to annex Borneo, think of interfering if the Dutch choose to gain an ascendancy in lands where no Englishman has, perhaps, ever set foot, nor does it even appear needful. Our Government is able to point to many spots in Malacca where European capital is safely and profitably invested under the rule of the native Rajah, and it naturally fails to see the necessity of planting the British flag wherever sugar is to be grown or tin mines worked. There is another reason why our Government should hesitate to mix itself up with the further colonisation of the Straits territories. The population is rapidly changing from Malay to Chinese, and constant feuds are brought about by these persevering settlers, who argue that if the Rajah who owns the mines will not work them, they have a right to do so, a doctrine which we English are not required to recognise. Quarrels perpetually arising out of these questions may safely be left to settle the rule in Sumatra, for that the Dutch form of Government will not suit the Chinese has been clearly proved in Banca. The interest of our government must of course be to see the native Rajahs expelled, and the Chinese are doing it as fast as possible. These Chinese are our best customers, they bring all they can grow or dig to us in Singapore or Penang, while on the other hand the Rajahs do not, but, through the excessive rentals they require from the Chinese, valuable land remains untitled and mines of vast wealth remain unworked. Those even who are under British pay for the purpose of developing their countries or of keeping order, have lately shown that without our assistance they are powerless over their own people. There is no fear of the Dutch ever taking possession of those parts of the Straits territories held by the cunning, and treacherous Malays. If the Dutch can find, as they have found on the opposite shores of Sumatra, territory inhabited by a docile people whom they can compel to grow coffee to add to Dutch revenues at home, they will in all probability take possession of those districts, but there is no great fear of our Singapore trade being injured by the Dutch form of colonisation. In one way any European occupation of territory in those parts must prove beneficial to Singapore, by getting rid of the swarms of pirates who now seek refuge in the best harbours of these uninhabited shores. These are now the places from which "hail" the most daring corsairs. It is in these that the Malay pirates, forming a terror to the small craft, who, as coasters, are the only possible means of transport of the produce of the neighbouring shores, reef and provision. The Straits of Banca, Gaspar, and Rhio, as well as others, afford a fine channel in which these villains, in their beautiful lorchas, carry on their trade; and even when chased by our vessels, they can bid defiance to us by their sailing powers and light draft of water.

If our Government, instead of interfering in any question as to the colonisation of these countries, will take care to keep the seas freed of these piratical hordes who now form the greatest impediment to the still further development of a trade already of wonderful growth, the rest may safely be left to the industrious Chinese who thoroughly understand the business of colonisation in the Straits settlements. If we meddle further, we may see the beginning, but it will be long before we shall see the end, of troubles with Malays, Chinese, and nondescripts. The Dutch have notified their intention of taking Siak and its Chinese population, and applying the opium farm regulations on July 1 next. Let the British Government see how they get on before it troubles itself to interfere in the matter.—Englishman, April 14.

A NICE CASE.

The luminous judgment delivered by Sir Mordaunt Wells in the case of Sreenauth Mullick and Others v. Beojololl Pyne and Doorgapersaud Seal, is well worthy of an attentive perusal, not only on account of the legal acumen exhibited in weighing conflicting evidence, but for the insight it gives us into that inner social life of the native community which is rarely penetrated by the eye of the European. The facts of the case can be very briefly related. Two boys, or youths, had been to school together, and were on terms of that close intimacy which frequently exists between two friends at school. These youths are the defendants in the present action, and it appears that they had borrowed Rs. 5,000 on a promissory note from the plaintiff, and for a purpose which is not indicated. The object of the plaintiff was to fix the liability upon one of them named Doorgapersaud Seal, whose connections were apparently possessed of considerable wealth; whilst it was the object of Doorgapersaud Seal to endeavour to escape from this liability, which he has succeeded in doing in a manner not very creditable to himself, by pleading that the paper he signed was not a promissory note, that his signature was fraudulently obtained, and that he was an infant at the time the note was made. Of course every one knows the conflicting evidence, the tricking of signatures, the prevarication about stamps, the strong suspicions of forgery, and the dove-tailing of doubtful evidence, always weak at the joints, which invariably accompany such cases, and which few judges can detect and expose with greater skill than Sir Mordaunt Wells. It is, therefore, needless to say that his judgment might be studied with advantage by every one, but we may add that his criticisms on the promissory note in question, and the manipulations to which it had or had not been subjected, are as interesting as a romance. It is true that the defendant Doorgapersaud got off on a plea of infancy, but with the following words of the judge ringing in his ears:—"Doorgapersaud, in denying a part of his signature, must have done so wickedly, and with intent to deceive the Court. It is painful to make such an observation with reference to a young man who is not only respectably connected and highly educated, but is just commencing life; but it is justified by the evidence which is clear and distinct as to his conduct. I am satisfied that he signed the promissory note knowing at the time what it was that he was signing." Looking at the facts from a European point of view, we should have considered that the family of Doorgapersaud would have done better to have sacrificed Rs. 5,000, or even the greater part of their wealth, than have suffered such a stain upon the character of any one of their number; though we must, in justice to the relatives of the defendant, observe that the Judge fully exonerates them from any implication in the attempted fraud, and states that he did not believe that either the mother or the uncle of Doorgapersaud would have assisted him, had they been aware of the real facts of the case. It is, however, rather gratifying that the present trial, like most others, goes far to prove that there is no greater fool than the knave. There was no occasion whatever for any prevarication as regards the promissory note. The plea of infancy, in itself not over creditable, was quite sufficient to enable the defendant to escape from paying the paltry Rs. 5,000.

Two or three other points in this case are also well worthy of consideration. First, we cannot gather from the judgment what the money was wanted for, nor what could have induced the plaintiff to lend it to the couple of youths, except for the sake of the exorbitant interest of 48 per cent. per annum. But we pass over these to consider the fact that came out in evidence, that when Doorgapersaud was only ten or eleven, and his girl-wife was only nine or ten, the latter was actually en famille, and that it is a customary occurrence among natives, in both the higher and lower classes, for children at the ages mentioned to live together as man and wife. Now, we are not about to indulge in a tirade against these conditions of social life amongst the natives. The result is a check to the growth of that energy and independence which make the Anglo-Saxon race superior to the Hindoo, and which render Hindoo husbands and wives mere children to their latest days. We are prepared to make some allowances for the difference of climate, and to believe that the maturity of both sexes is reached much earlier under the tropics than in the temperate zone; but the extreme state of things indicated arises partly, we believe, from the morbid desire of the natives themselves for grand-children to perpetuate their family, and partly from the general want of education, especially amongst the females, which renders them peculiarly the subject of those passions, which, at that early age, uncontrolled by the mind and unpurified by the natural play of the affections, can only be manifested in the most animal form. We are not saying this for the purpose of insulting the native and vaunting the European, but rather to stimulate the exertions of the former to bring about a more rational state of things in his family and zenana. The crying evil is the want of education. Shut any girl up in a zenana, without books to study or accomplishments to acquire, and the result may be easily imagined; and the evil is only exchanged for another by the marriage of girls of nine years of age to boys of ten. These social reforms, we are satisfied, can only come from within, and we can do no more than point them out, leaving them to be achieved as speedily as possible by the more enlightened natives, in the fashion which may seem most fitting to themselves.—Englishman, April 13.

MISCELLANEOUS.

EDUCATION.—The Director of Public Instruction [Bengal] furnishes in his last published general report the following important statistics regarding the extent of education in these provinces:—

	No. of Pupils.
Government institutions	19,503
Aided and other schools under inspection	29,012
Indigenous vernacular schools under improvement in Central, South-East, and South-West Divisions	8,685
Total	57,200

"Assuming," says the director, "the population of these provinces to be 40,000,000, and that one-tenth of the population or 4,000,000 are boys of an age to attend school, these returns show that less than one and a-half per cent. of the boys who ought to be at school are actually attending any school under Government inspection."—Hindoo Patriot.

HAILSTORMS.—The hailstorms which occurred in the Doon and Mussorie, and at Darjeeling, seem to have been pretty general. We hear of them in the Allahabad and Sarun districts; the change in the temperature which has lately taken place is doubtless owing to this cause.—Delhi Gazette, April 18.

DISTURBED STATE OF BUNDELKUND.—We hear from Bundelkund that in consequence of the disturbed state of the district Government have placed a detachment of European troops at the disposal of the authorities.

HERAT.—The Delhi Gazette's Cabul newsletter does not report much progress at Herat. The Ameer's force captured only two hundred sheep out of two thousand which managed to enter the city. The son of the former king of Kokan, having collected about fifteen thousand Kubchak and Kurghuz people, had taken possession of the city Oosh, and had closed the road to Kokan. He had levied a tax of one gold mohur and a half on every merchant going to Kokan. It is said that the Ameer has plenty of everything except coins, the normal want of Afghanistan. The Heratees are described as very badly off for supplies, particularly for meat, grass, ghee, and firewood. A number of poor citizens of Herat have removed their families to the neighbouring villages, where they have been kindly treated by the Ameer's men, and allowed to cultivate. A native letter says:—"It is very likely that the Herat business will be settled about the Nouroze (new year)."

MR. JOHN HAWORTH, of Croydon, in the county of Surrey, in England, has obtained, through his agent in Calcutta, the exclusive privilege "for an improved method of conveying telegraphic messages and signals by means of electricity without the intervention of any continuous artificial conductor." The specification may be seen at the Home-office by paying the usual fee.

NEW CHURCH AT ALLAHABAD.—Allahabad is likely to have a Scotch Church becoming the new capital. The Rev. Mr. Williamson, the energetic chaplain, has raised Rs. 10,414. The church will be seated for 400 persons, and is estimated to cost (inclusive of furnishings) Rs. 42,000. Of this sum, Government have subscribed Rs. 20,000, which, with private subscriptions, interest, &c., gives a sum total of Rs. 35,722-13 6, leaving a deficiency of rather more than Rs. 6,000 to be made up.

MAJOR GRAHAM.—We give prominent insertion to the following attempted contradiction. We say "attempted," because as Sergeant Major Graham's suicide has been reported in all the papers, it is more probable that he is under a mistake than we:—"To the Editor of the Delhi Gazette.—Sir, I was rather surprised on reading in your impression of the 14th inst. that I had committed suicide, &c., &c., but as the same is entirely void of fact, allow me at any rate, as the ghost of William Graham, to beg you will contradict the same in your next, as up to the present I am alive, and not in much fear of putting an end to myself.—Yours obediently, WILLIAM GRAHAM, Sergeant Major 11th Brigade, R.A., Lucknow Cantonments, 10th April, 1863." It is ridiculous to suppose that the public press is not the best judge in a case of this kind.

ALLAHABAD.—The following regiments are expected in the station:—Left wing pioneer corps, en route to the presidency, arrived here by special train from Allypore on the 15th inst. Right wing, under command of Major McMillin, will arrive by special train this morning. The above corps has been raised by order of Government for service in Ceylon. The Bengal Cavalry, under command of Lieut. Dayrell, en route to Cawnpore, will march into the station this morning, and will encamp at Alopee Bagh.—Allahabad Gazette, April 18.

PUNJAB.—There is so much sickness among the engine drivers on the Punjab line of railway that it has been rendered necessary to make application for hands from the East India line while the sickness continues. As there are several drivers out of employment here, and lower down on the line, we doubt not our information will induce such to obtain temporary employment at Lahore.

RAILWAY.—About ten miles of the line is completed beyond Allyghur, and there are plenty of sleepers on the ground, which will enable the authorities to push on the work. If the progress of the rail depends upon the platelayers only, there need be no fear of delay. Two platelayers can lay down ten miles in a month, so that, with even so very diminutive an establishment, the line will be ready in a very short time throughout to Meerut.

SEETAPORE.—We hear from Seetapore that, on the night of the 13th instant, there was a great thunderstorm. "While it was raging, the whole of the dhoby's huts in the 34th regiment bazaar caught fire, and were burnt to the ground, with all the soldiers' clothing mess, linen, and clothes belonging to officers and others. Providentially, the rain came down just in the nick of time, or the whole bazaar would have been consumed. It is raining yet (15th instant), and is likely to rain for some time. It is a misfortune for the crops, for the cultivators are crying out against it. However that may be, it has cooled and cleared the atmosphere very deliciously." We also hear that rain has fallen very copiously between this and Fyzabad, and in the Baiswarra and Barraich divisions. We have had some smart showers in Lucknow, too.—Oudh Gazette, April 18.

GENERAL WHEELER.—Major-General Wheeler, C.B., commanding this division, is expected to arrive at Meerut in a few days. He will proceed hence to Mussoorie (about the end of the present month), where his head-quarters will be during the hot season. Now that the electric telegraph is open, and the journey from Mussoorie to Meerut narrowed to twenty hours, or say fifteen hours, to a man who can ride like General Wheeler, no possible inconvenience can arise from the graceful concession in the General's behalf, on the part of his Excellency the Commander-in-chief, with the sanction of his Excellency the Viceroy. Let us hope that the same privilege will be extended to General Wheeler's successor, whoever he may be. Military officers in this country are always past the meridian of life before they attain to so high a command, and however vigorous and young (for their age) they may be, they require the bracing climate of the Hills, during the hot season, to render them efficient for the performance of their arduous duties during the cold weather in the plains. General Beatson will retain the command of the station during General Wheeler's absence, and will, we have reason to believe, succeed General Wheeler on his rumoured retirement next year.—Mofussilite, April 17.

THE P. AND O. COMPANY.—"The entire Indian press," says the Englishman, "is now indulging in unfavourable criticism upon the present administration of the Peninsular and Oriental Company's affairs. In proportion as that Company was once popular it is now unpopular. As it was once the favourite of the Indian public, so it has now become, in general estimation, the common enemy. If this wealthy Company has desired to try how far a niggard policy can undermine a position attained by energy, ability, and capital, we must certainly congratulate its directors on their triumphant success."

MR. LAING.—While advocating a permanent settlement for all India, Mr. Laing "nevertheless expresses his belief that as a matter of L.S.D., the State will find itself richer if it maintains its position of sole proprietor of three-fourths of the cultivated land of India, and only grants leases at fixed rents for limited terms, such as thirty years." "If," continues Mr. Laing, "the finance accounts of Bengal and Madras are carefully analysed it will be found, that after deducting the profits in opium which form part of the taxation, and a fair proportion of the custom duties levied at Calcutta for imports destined for the North-West, Bengal does not contribute so much revenue as Madras in proportion to its population. The rate is about 3s. 6d. in the former, and 4s. 6d. in the latter. In other words, the sacrifice of land revenue in Bengal under Lord Cornwallis' permanent settlement, has not been made good by the increased produce of other taxes."—Madras Times.

MUSSOORIE.—A very heavy storm of lightning, thunder, and hail visited Mussoorie on Sunday, the 12th. The hail-stones are described as the largest that were ever known to fall over the sanatorium.

CORON.—The Rajah of Johut, under the Bheel Political Agency, and the Nawabs of Mahomedgurh and Basowda, and the Rajahs of Nursingurh and Muxoodungurh, under the Bhopal Agency, have abolished transit duties on cotton within their estates. Central India is now almost free from these obnoxious imposts.

DEHONG AND DEBONG RIVERS.—Major Agnew's report on the navigation of the Dehong and Dehong rivers will be read with considerable interest by all who are concerned in developing the capabilities of Assam. It is now evident that a steamer can ascend as high as the mouth of those rivers, and almost equally, so that, with a very trifling outlay, steam communication might be opened even with Sudyah. It is certainly very desirable that Government should accede to Major Agnew's recommendation, and at once call for a survey of the Berhampootra as far as a navigable channel may be found to extend.

THE LAND.—A Ceylon planter writes, under date January 8, as follows:—"As a proof of the mania for land here, I may mention that there has been a general sale of land since I last wrote to you. The lots went off at exceedingly high prices. I shall give you the price of one valley which has been bought for one estate. It contains six hundred and eighty-six acres, and was sold for £4,351, about £6. 6s. 10d. per acre."

THE GANGES CANAL.—The main canal, including the two terminal divisions, is 520 miles in length, and the length of Rajbhas, completed on 30th April, 1861, is 1,542 miles. With its branches and distributing channels the canal had, to the same date, cost Rs. 1,87,48,290, while the value of the crops produced by means of the canal during the year under review is estimated at Rs. 1,51,22,640. The area of land irrigated was 536 square miles, and 3,483 villages received the benefits of irrigation. The cost of maintenance and repairs for 1860-61 (including a fair share of the cost of the central office) amounted to Rs. 4,62,327, and the amount of revenue derived in the same period was Rs. 6,45,115. The following table shows the progress made by the Ganges Canal since it commenced to yield revenue:—

	Capital expended to end of year.	Maintenance and repairs, including the cost of Central Office.	Income.	Deficit.	Surplus.
1856-57	1,62,05,673	4,01,259	48,000	3,52,659	...
1856-57	1,73,45,953	3,49,143	1,09,760	2,39,383	...
1857-58	1,75,75,466	2,53,150	88,790	1,64,360	...
1858-59	1,78,84,063	4,59,539	1,63,554	2,95,985	...
1859-60	1,82,63,874	4,63,129	3,05,097	1,58,032	...
1860-61	1,87,48,280	4,62,327	6,45,115	...	1,82,758
		23,88,547	13,60,916	12,10,419	1,82,758

It will thus be seen that for the first time since the opening of the canal the receipts have exceeded the outlay during the year, and the balance of charges has, in consequence, been reduced from Rs. 12,10,419 in 1859-60, to Rs. 10,27,631 in 1860-61, exclusive of interest on capital, which, at 5 per cent. per annum, amounts to Rs. 48,13,144.

MISCELLANEOUS.

LOSS OF THE "BURMAH."—The commissioners appointed to inquire into the loss of the S. S. Burma have presented their report. A considerable delay has taken place in consequence of the commissioners determining to await the decision of the High Court in the case of appeal preferred by the captain of the Jason. The loss of the Burma is attributed by the commissioners solely to a want of judgment on the part of Captain Ashton, and the absence of necessary precautions; the latter being more immediately observable "in respect of not taking the soundings in time, and in merely using the hand-lead under circumstances when the deep-sea-lead should have been used." These were the chief grounds of complaint, "but some minor details were referred to in the report to the Board of Trade." Under these circumstances the Board resolved to suspend Captain Ashton's certificate for the period of two years. Unlike Captain Hurst of the Jason, Captain Ashton at once handed over his certificate to the commissioners, who will forward it, together with their report, to the Board of Trade.

SECUNDERABAD, April 1.—Dr. McAllum, the Durbar Surgeon, has been at his own request transferred to the Hyderabad Contingent. Nawab Salar Jung, the minister, has purchased and collected grain to the amount of two lacs of rupees for the benefit of all the city people, especially the poor, who are dying daily for the want of food. It is very generous on Salar Jung's part to come forward as he has done. He has also issued strict akhams to all the village authorities in the Nizam's dominions to prevent the exportation of grain, under a heavy penalty, the surplus grain being sent to the city of Hyderabad, where the want of it is felt very much indeed. The Bunyas have been harshly treated the other day in the city, and justly, too. It appears a Rohilla went to a Bunya's shop and purchased a rupee's worth of rice. The Bunya bundled up the rice and told the Rohilla that the bundle contained eight seers, who, trusting to the grain-dealer's word, went home and made over the bundle to his wife, who measured the rice and found it to be only seven seers, and not eight, as the Bunya had said, and according to the general rate. The Rohilla immediately retraced his steps to the shop and politely asked him the cause of the deficiency, but the Bunya appearing to take no notice of it he (Rohilla) repeated his question, but no answer came; he tried again, and the answer was that he (Rohilla) must have taken one seer of the rice for himself. The man remonstrated, and even swore that he had not done anything of the sort, but it was to no purpose, and the upshot was that the Rohilla drew a knife from his waist-belt, deliberately cut off the Bunya's nose, and walked away. So the Rohilla was minus one seer of rice, and the Bunya now is minus his nose. Lieut. Tweedie has been appointed Second Assistant Resident, in place of Captain Fraser, gone on leave. The saving caused by the amalgamation of the Resident's offices is about 400 rupees. All the public buildings at Jaulna are either to be dismantled or sold. The weather hot. The Nizam's palace gate was burnt down the other day by a mob making a noise and fighting for grain.

THE VISITATION.—Yesterday was an important day for the clergy in the diocese of Madras. For six and a half years there has been no visitation held by the bishop, so that to very many the ceremony was quite a novelty. The clergy, in their gowns and bands, gathered in the cathedral, to the number of thirty or more, by eleven o'clock. The morning service was read by the senior chaplain, and an able sermon was preached by the Rev. A. Alcock from the appropriate text, Acts x. 22, which was read in the second lesson for the day. The rev. preacher dwelt principally on the connection existing between the pastor and his flock. The Holy Communion was then administered to about forty persons; and this terminated the morning's proceedings at two o'clock. On leaving the cathedral, those who preferred remaining until the evening service found a most ample tiffin prepared for them in a large tent. At half-past four o'clock the evening service commenced with the Litany, after which the names of the clergy of the diocese were called out by the Registrar, and those present responded to the call. The bishop then delivered his charge, which occupied about an hour and a-half. All that his lordship said on the different topics which he introduced was well and forcibly put, and rendered his discourse extremely interesting, not only to those more immediately concerned, but also to the congregation scattered in the nave. The Bishop first touched on the subjects most nearly connected with his own diocese, such as the missions in Tinnevely, Tanjore, &c., the work carried on by the Continental and Colonial Church Society, and the two large Missionary Societies, the S.P.G. and the C.M.S., and on the work of education going on in the diocese. He adverted also to those topics which are now agitating the religious world, in a most sensible manner. He advised his clergy what books to read with reference to the "Essays and Reviews," and the "Colenso Question," and dealt fairly with the subject of the plenary inspiration of Scripture, the discussion of which has latterly occupied the religious portion of the Madras world. We hear that this excellent charge is to be printed, so that we need not enter further into particulars.—Athenaeum, April 28.

THE REV. J. BAMFORTH.—We are happy to record that the Rev. J. Bamforth, now principal of the Military Male Asylum, who vacates that post on account of the designed Amalgamation of the Egmore Institution with the Lawrence foundation at Ootacamund, has been chosen to succeed the Rev. Mr. Halley as Head of the Doveton College, which latter is sure to thrive under his auspices. The Committee could not, we believe, have made a better selection, for Mr. Bamforth is a highly certificated St. Mark's man, of ability, scholarship, and great experience in teaching. A branch of the Male Asylum will still be maintained here for the present, by orders from the Secretary of State, under, we trust, the superintendence of the now Head Master, Mr. Berry, who admirably discharged the duties of acting Principal in addition to his own, for the space of eighteen months, and has every qualification for the office, as well as the best title to it. Government have sanctioned the immediate commencement of operations at Lovedale, Ootacamund, for the purpose of preparing a site on which the erection of the new buildings necessary to accommodate part of the Madras Male and Female Orphan Asylums may take place.

RE-ORGANIZATION OF THE PUBLIC WORKS DEPARTMENT.—The scheme now being carried out for the re-organization of the Public Works Department, which involves the turning adrift of some hundreds of subordinate officials, and some seniors of old standing and responsible position into the bargain. One of the latter, at the head of the Chief Engineer's Office, and who holds high certificates from his employers during nearly twenty years' service, is thus menaced with dismissal, but we should trust that such gross injustice cannot have been deliberately contemplated. The committee appointed to frame the plan of re-organization, have only partially performed their work of suggestion, and will, it is to be hoped, correct oversights of that kind.—Athenaeum, April 28.

THE OFFICIAL ASSIGNEE.—In consequence of Mr. B. Brooks, the official assignee and deputy clerk of the Crown, being compelled, from ill-health, to proceed to Europe by the first steamer in next month, it is said that Mr. J. H. Brockman will act in the former capacity, and Mr. Barclay (of the firm of Messrs Miller and Bayson) in the latter, during Mr. Brooks's absence.

MADRAS MAGDALEN ASYLUM.—Into the Madras Magdalen Asylum, established for thirteen years, fifty-four women have been admitted. Of these seven were on penitence, received again by their friends; four had been respectably married; fourteen had entered service, and were, on the whole, well spoken of by their employers; eighteen had left the institution at their own request—but several of these it was feared had returned to their evil course of life; one had died; ten still remained in the asylum. We fear the similar asylum in Calcutta, where it is so much needed, is not now in existence.

RAIL BETWEEN SHONANOR AND COCHIN.—We are given to understand that a party of railway engineers have proceeded to survey the route of a branch line of railway, which is to turn off the main line at Shonanor, and terminate at Cochin. We sincerely trust that Government will do all it can to expedite the construction of the line in question, as we shall then have a respectable terminus for our magnificent line of railway, instead of its ending nowhere, as it does at present. Cochin is greatly to be preferred, as a terminus, to Calicut, since there is a large through traffic to Madras via the former, but none with the latter.—Athenaeum.

LAND IN THE NEILGHERRIES.—The Nilgherry Excelsior records the first sale of waste lands on the hills under the new rules. The price realised for forty-five acres of forest land was Rs. 2 each, but under Sir W. Denison's obstructive rule to obtain the fee-simple at twenty-five years' purchase would raise it to Rs. 80. The firewood on the land, it is said, will pay the price if there are roads. The late Collector gave it as his opinion that every acre of forest land in the neighbourhood was worth from 700 to 800 rupees for fuel and timber. The purchaser of the present lot is a Mr. Vincent of Calcutta, who has already embarked in coffee planting, but now intends trying Cinchona and tea. He has secured 1,000 Cinchona plants from the Government gardens.

OUR PETTY MONSOON set in some days back, with a copiousness very exceptional during April, and enough rain has fallen to produce effects most beneficial to the country; but the weather cleared up again on Saturday night, rather contrary to our expectation, as appearances were threatening up to dark, and is now, seemingly, settled for the present, and growing very hot. We hope, however, that further falls will occur next month, of a still more abundant nature, and so replenish the larger tanks. A May gale is overdue just now, and we feel somewhat disposed to expect one this season. There has been nothing serious of the kind since May, 1851.

HER MAJESTY'S STEAMER Australian left the roads with the Sesostris, transport-ship, in tow, on the 27th of April. They carry the 34th Regiment N. I. to Penang and Singapore.

THE REV. MR. ALCOCK.—It is understood that the Rev. Mr. Alcock, M.A., will be nominated Commissary of the See of Madras, on the approaching departure of the Rev. Mr. Dealtry.

THE STEAMER Pearl, of Ceylon, has narrowly escaped coming to grief on the Madras coast. She grounded off Cocanada, but was happily floated again without sustaining any damage.

THE MORTALITY IN MADRAS for the year 1862, as gathered from the records of the principal Inspector General Medical Department, numbered 3,199 males, 3,146 women, and 4,755 children under 12 years of age.

BOMBAY.

COTTON FRAUDS BILL.

After many months of weary discussion and much adverse criticism, within and without the walls of the Chamber, the Cotton Fraud Bill has at length passed the Bombay Council, and now only requires the confirmation of the supreme authorities to become law. All honour to Mr. Scott for his unwearied and persistent perseverance, and to Sir Bartle Frere for his enlightened support of a measure which bureaucratic prejudice and jealousy would have stifled in its birth. We commend Mr. Scott's spirited conduct to the careful attention and consideration of those mild individuals who are facetiously supposed to represent Interlopia in the Governor-General's Council. Had they not betrayed their trust and slavishly welcomed the order which abrogated the freedom of discussion, the question of a Contract Bill would not now be in the "slough of despond" into which it has unquestionably fallen. Their feeble deprecation of Sir Charles Wood's edict contrasts humiliatingly with the energetic protest of Mr. Roberts, who, in this case, has proved himself a worthy disciple of that manly school of Punjab Politics, created by the great pro-consul who first inaugurated an Indian Parliament.

But the example of Mr. Scott should inspire us with hope. Young in years, but old in experience, and at the head of the largest mercantile establishment in Bombay, he has devoted such an amount of time and attention to this cotton question—which his peculiar and varied experience has made “a speciality”—that we regard success as the natural and fitting guerdon of his labours. In the face of bitter detraction and studied misrepresentation of motives, he held on, unmoved, the tenor of his way, regardless alike of the empty declamations of Mr. Robertson, the feebleness of Mr. Tristram, and the injudicious ardour of indiscreet friends out of doors. All British Legislation, however, is a system of compromise, and the most perfect measure devised by the mind of man must submit to this inevitable law. The present Bill is no exception to the rule, and in accommodating himself to the various modifications proposed and introduced, Mr. Scott has had, probably, to propitiate many diverse interests and prejudices, which, although not appearing on the surface, had still to be conciliated. The Bill, therefore, is not perfect; and in some of the clauses compromise seems to have been carried to the very verge of emasculation; but, on the whole, it is sound in principle; and we trust that the mere knowledge of its existence will be sufficient to prevent the evil practices which it was designed to remedy.

A Contract Bill is the necessary corollary of a Cotton Fraud Bill. Sir Charles Wood is not eternal; and the mendacity of spiteful missionaries, although backed by effete Bengal civilianism, is not the voice of England. We have no faith in the honesty of the Times, but we have great faith in its keen sense of its own interests. It has rattled once already on this question, and will rat again when it suits its purpose. The necessity for such a measure—and especially with reference to an early and adequate supply of cotton—is so obvious, and the evidence already adduced in its favour is so overwhelming, that any further discussion on the subject may well be dispensed with here. We may safely assert that every man in India, in or out of the service, whose opinion is entitled to the slightest estimation, is unmistakably in favour of such a Bill. Let us, therefore, live in hope. But in the meantime we must be up and doing. At home those in favour of the measure are daily increasing in numbers, wealth, and standing; and we trust the day is not far distant when Mr. Laing will be found in Parliament to represent and advocate the real interests of India. The Nestor of Calcutta politics will soon be there also. Is it too much to hope that he may be induced to forego his well earned leisure, and devote his unquestioned abilities and great experience to the advocacy of our cause in the House of Commons? No man could represent us more worthily, as no man could bring to the discussion of Indian subjects that sagacity and intimate practical acquaintance which is so lamentably lacking in the debates in the House of Commons. It says little for the gratitude of Calcutta that a man of note like Mr. Peterson, who is so essentially a representative man, and especially a true representative of the force and vigour of Anglo-Saxon character, and who has ever done such good yeoman service in the service of the public, should be permitted to leave our shores without any mark of recognition or regret. Is it yet too late to ask him to meet all Calcutta at a public dinner in the Town Hall? Or shall we fear dyspepsia more than the shame of letting every honest man's friend depart without one kindly word of respect, sympathy, and good will?—Ben-god Harkara.

OPENING OF THE BHOORE GHAUT INCLINE ON THE GREAT INDIAN PENINSULA RAILWAY.

Speech of Mr. Adamson in acknowledgment of the toast at the Bhoore Incline Banquet in honour of himself and his colleagues.

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN,—In rising to return thanks on the part of Mr. Clowser and myself for the high honour we have this day received at your hands, I should do so with diffidence were it not that we both know that we are amongst men who thoroughly understand the character of our labours—men who were familiar with the natural difficulties of the Ghaut before a foot of the line of railway had been cut, and who can, therefore, the more readily understand the nature of the obstacles which we had to remove or surmount—(hear).

Seven and a quarter years have passed away since the ground was first broken on the Bhoore Ghaut Incline. Brief, however, as it appears, the face of the empire has been changed, dynasties have been swept away, whole armies have been destroyed, and the power from which we received permission to construct a line of railway up the face of this Ghaut has become simply one of the vestiges of Oriental history. But the revolt which reddened the plains of Hindustan, and the resolution with which the rapacity of rebellion was avenged, never for a moment disturbed science in carrying out the great work which English enterprise had inaugurated, and for the completion of which English capital and English honour had been pledged—(cheers).

We knew that in the vicinity of our railway there would be no rebellion. Experience had taught us in other lands, that well remunerated toil, like security, would make repose more sweet; and instead of suspending our labours, we eagerly availed ourselves of the aid which the ravages of war and famine directed to the place where it was known a hard day's labour procured a good day's wages. All men who could work were cheerfully employed, and the little youngster scarcely heavier than the stone which he carried, and sometimes more diminutive than the basket which he bore on his head, if he only did an hour's labour, was remunerated in proportion to the value of the work he had performed—(loud cheers).

The news of the system pursued with regard to labour and its price, circulated far and wide; and the consequence was that our Bhoore Ghaut contract, from the commencement to the end, always swarmed with labourers, from the skilled artizan of the city to the rude denizen of the Ghaut Jungles, whose highest triumph of mechanical skill hardly reached higher than a basket of bamboos—(hear).

Women and children have all borne their part in the construction of the Ghaut Incline, and if they had not been employed we could not have seduced the masculine muscle of remote villages. Our instructions to our agent were, that they were to employ all who could pick up a stone or carry away a basket of earth. By adopting this course we infused love into labour, and this, as we all know, lightens toil, whether it be in the harvest fields of England or amid the sullen solitude of Indian jungles. We never wronged labour of an hour; and the consequence was, that we could have had the village grandfathers and grandmothers down to aid us if we had deemed it expedient to incur the expense of doolies to convey them to their work—(loud cheers).

The natives of India, like the natives of England, can and will work well if they are well and regularly paid; and it was by adopting the system of giving value for value that the triumph of this day has been achieved. English soldiers know how native soldiers can fight, when they are properly led; and English engineers will also bear testimony to the way in which Indian work-people can toil, when their industry is properly directed and fairly remunerated. English science and English capital constructed this Ghaut Incline; but, sir, and gentlemen, let us ever bear in mind, that it was native muscle that sustained the wear and tear of the gigantic work which you have this day beheld; and that it was native endurance that bore the heat and burden of the day, which would have triumphed over all the thews and sinews which the Anglo-Saxon race could have sent to these shores—(loud cheers).

But it is not alone the Asiatics who have performed marvels. Every European connected with these works has done his duty, as our countrymen alone can do when their hearts are in their work—(hear, hear). In a large undertaking of this character it was necessary that the supervision should be of the closest and most exacting character, as upon the connecting links of the system the success of the whole depended. It is therefore with pleasure on my own part and that of my colleague that I mention publicly the great benefit which the Ghaut Incline has derived from the exertions and vigilance of Messrs. Lean, Donohoe, Waites, Eggleston, Blisher, Elvins, Stockholm, Rothwell, Langram, Townsend, Watson, Nichols, Hoadley, Meachem, W. Donovan, J. Donovan, Windle, Skilliter, Nowell, Jowett, Machin, and M'Pherson. From the last-named gentleman we have received the aid of professional skill combined with large and varied practical experience. Neither must we forget to mention our acknowledgments to the Resident Engineers, Messrs. West and Tait, who identified themselves with the work, and in the success of the Bhoore Ghaut Incline recognised their own triumph as railway engineers. Both gentlemen cordially co-operated with us, and materially contributed to the success of the undertaking. To the chief engineer, Mr. Graham, and to all the officers of his department, our best acknowledgments are also due. Mr. Graham followed in the wake of his predecessor, and supported us whenever and wherever aid was required. To the secretary and his department, to the directors and to Colonel Rivers, the superintending engineer on the part of Government, our best thanks are due. They appreciated our labours, sympathised with our difficulties, and lent us a helping hand whenever it was required. More than this need not be said. We are fully sensible of the kindness of all; and if words are wanting to express our gratitude, the will must be taken for the deed. All officers connected with the construction of the G. I. P. Railway, whether on the part of Government or the company, vied with each other in lending us assistance, and contributed each in his own way to make the ascent of the Bhoore Ghaut by means of a railway and locomotive power one of the scientific feats of the century.

Having now, ladies and gentlemen, named I think nearly all who have distinguished themselves in connection with the work which has this day taken its place amongst the triumphs of science, I must now proceed to fulfil a less pleasing task; but as it is an imperative duty, you will I am sure sympathise and bear with me if I fail to do justice to the memories which I am about to invoke from “beyond that bourne whence no traveller returns.” To the genius of the late James John Berkley India owes the magnificent railway work which has this day been inaugurated. His eye had no sooner traversed the Ghaut from its base to its summit, than his mind conceived the railway incline by which you have this day ascended the Western Ghats. The intuition of genius told him it was practicable, and he gathered together the agencies and elements by the aid of which the Bhoore Ghaut Incline has become one of the greatest scientific facts of the age. In the meridian of his life he looked forward to this day as the most unworthy culminating point of one of the noblest brilliant professional careers which is to be recorded in the biography of our country, luminous as it is with the lustre of genius. He, however, died before this great work was finished, although to him the Incline was completed before even a line of the design had been laid down on paper—when the surveys and sections were finished, the combined light of genius and science had daguerreotyped on his brain the impression of the work over which you have this day passed. Well, indeed, might he have exclaimed, “to die so young!” not in the fear of death, but in the despair of genius—(hear, hear).

The other victim seized by the stern destroyer was Mr. Solomon Tredwell, a gentleman qualified in every way to carry out the designs of the engineer in chief. He also was lured to this country by the hope of fame, rather than by the thirst after fortune, as the industry of his youth had borne golden fruit, and placed him high amongst those whom wealth delights to honour; but he, too, was called away when fortune wore her sunniest aspect, and when in the flower of his age. Mr. Solomon Tredwell was, in every respect, a representative man. He was a fine type of the middle-class Anglo-Saxon—the men who have won for England her most imperishable laurels in science, art, and literature. To them the greatest obstacles which impede the progress of modern discovery appear simply as so many incentives to exertion. They plant their banners on the highest mountains; they change the course of rivers, and leave the trail of thought and the medium of communication along the beds of seas and oceans. To men like the late Solomon Tredwell, the world impossible is unknown; they look at the perfection of creation, follow the laws of unerring science, and in persevering and well-applied toil, arrive at that goal which all of us seek to attain—success! His indeed was the kind heart and the liberal hand; he had toiled himself, and he knew how sweet was the reward of labour; hence it was that he was loved by those he employed, and trusted by the capitalists who wished that their wealth should be directed into lucrative channels of circulation. Wherever railways are known on the Alpine viaduct, across the English morass, in the Australian bush, and in the heart of the Indian jungle, men are to be found in scores who in days gone by received a fair recompense for either rude labour or mechanical skill, from a family which will be as intimately connected with railway success as the name of Watt with the steam engine, Arkwright with the spinning jenny, or Stephenson with the locomotive. Well indeed might the noble eulogy of England's greatest bard be applied to Solomon Tredwell:—

"He was a man! Take him for all in all,
We shall not look upon his like again."

When he died, the honour of completing the incline devolved upon my colleague and myself, who stand here before you grateful to you all for honouring us as you have done; and above all, humbly thankful to the Creator of the Universe, who has spared us to do His work, so that the light of truth, science, and civilisation may penetrate into the darkest nooks of the globe. Again allow us to thank you most heartily and sincerely for all the honour we have received at your hands on this memorable day.

SPEECH by the late Mr. Berkley, on January 30, 1861, on the occasion of an entertainment being given by Messrs. Adamson and Clowser at the works on the incline:—

I gladly avail myself of the opportunity which your kindness has afforded me of expressing my perfect and entire satisfaction with the great and successful exertions which the assistant-engineers, Messrs. Tate and West, and the managers, Messrs. Adamson and Clowser, are making in the prosecution of these extensive and important works. I have never been one of those who underrated either the resources of this country, or the capabilities of English enterprise and experience in conducting even the most formidable of our Indian public undertakings. Yet it is only doing justice to our hosts for me to confess that the effects of their able, energetic, and liberal management have far outstripped my expectations. It has always been my impression that the long tunnel and massive viaduct near Khandalla, and the heavy rock cuttings and lofty viaduct which you have this morning beheld, could not possibly be finished before next year; yet, thanks to the extraordinary efforts and skillful arrangements of Messrs. Adamson and Clowser, they are already on the eve of completion. Those two gentlemen have not only achieved the triumph of making the public opening of this Ghaut Incline next year a matter of certainty, but its present condition exhibits a display of workmanlike and energetic operations, such as I believe is unrivalled within the whole range of engineering practice. I am proud to think that these remarkable results have been accomplished by two officers whom I may call essentially my own men. They were with me upon the Trent Valley Railway in 1846. They were with me again upon the difficult works on the Churnet Valley Railway in 1848. They came with me to India at the beginning of 1850, and having been practically identified with a considerable portion of our heaviest works, they took up their posts upon this Incline at the very commencement of its construction, and are now helping me, in a masterly manner, to pull through the numerous difficulties with which it is encumbered. The Bhoze Ghaut Incline is in point of construction a stupendous mass of heavy works, crowded upon an unhealthy, desolate, and almost inaccessible mountain scarp. The patient endurance, and the unflagging energy, of those practical men who have been employed upon it, have already surmounted most of its impediments; yet there is one attendant evil with which all our care and best arrangements do not enable us to cope. I allude, of course, to the vicissitudes of health and sickness. Here, as elsewhere, we are in that respect wholly dependent upon the protection of a merciful Providence. I trust that all our lives may be spared to witness the public opening of this Incline. You have seen enough this morning to enable you to form a conception of the wonderful transformation that will be effected, when one of the great iron ways of India will run along the rough flanks of this mountain range; when the commerce and population of vast productive districts will fly through these Ghaut jungles with their savage tenants to the flourishing port and metropolis of our Presidency—(cheers); and permit me to remind you, gentlemen, that railways have been already accepted by the people of this country. They have become indelibly stamped upon the map of India, to be superseded only when some better means of locomotion shall be devised. They are no ephemeral and waning of evidence of English influence upon Indian soil, but are an enduring and inalienable contribution from the British nation to the welfare and prosperity of this noble empire. I earnestly hope that Messrs. Adamson and Clowser will survive to enjoy the triumphant consummation of their long and arduous labours in the public opening of this incline. On that day, if it please God that I should live, I for one shall reiterate the claim to have cancelled from the pages of declamation, as untrue, the stigmatised words of Edmund Burke:—"England has erected no churches, no hospitals, no palaces, no schools; England has built no bridges, made no high roads, cut no navigations, dug out no reservoirs. Every other conqueror of every other description has left some monument, either of state or beneficence, behind him. Were we to be driven out of India this day, nothing would remain to tell that it had been possessed during the inglorious period of our dominion by anything better than the orang-outang or the tiger"—(cheers). What a striking commentary it is upon Burke's own maxim, "The situation of man is the preceptor of his duty," when we reflect that towards the close of the last century he could find circumstances to warrant him in uttering to a listening Senate a denunciation which has long since become an unmerited reproach upon the British nation."—Times of India.

CAPTURE OF THE REBEL MADHOWROW.

Justice is slowly, but surely, overtaking all those who bore any prominent part in the late Indian revolt. The last capture has been made by Captain Nuttall, superintendent of the Sholapur Police, who appears to have seized no less a personage than Madhowrow, or the Rao Sahib Peishwa. Whoever the captive may eventually turn out to be, the capture of such a mischievous and desperate criminal is a matter of congratulation. At least such is the opinion of our friend Mr. William Hart, the revenue commissioner, and he is a man that rarely makes mistakes, except when he runs a tilt at press. But we fancy that by this time he has learnt that stern lesson which defeat alone can teach—that discretion is the better part of valour. Meanwhile it is satisfactory to know that Mr. Hart is taking an interest in this capture, as he is in every respect eminently well qualified to pronounce a decision upon the point at issue. The real Rao Sahib is a stout fair man, of soldierly bearing, and conveys by his manner the impression that he possesses the heritage of command. He is no mean pretender, the Rao Sahib, but a prince in every respect. There are numbers of old people in Poona who could easily identify him, as he bears upon his countenance the lineaments of the Royal race from whom he is descended. It is, therefore, to be hoped that Government will exercise extreme caution in disposing of this case, and that Sir Bartle Frere will bring his extensive knowledge of the Mahratta Royalties to bear upon the inquiry. The Rao Sahib was selected by Tantia Topee to accompany him in his descent upon the Dekkan, as that sagacious leader believed that his very name was sufficient to arm the whole of Maharashtra. From the official report of Capt. Nuttall, we learn that from time to time, during the last four months, he had been given to understand that emissaries of the Nana Sahib, disguised as fakeers, were abroad in that part of India, endeavouring to raise the country. He sent trusty men out, who promised to keep him informed of their whereabouts. About a month since he received intelligence that one of these emissaries had been marked down; that his spies had gained his confidence; that he was evidently one of the principal agents of the Nana Sahib; that he had disclosed the facts that he had witnessed and borne a part in the massacre of many Europeans; that he had been deputed by the Nana Sahib to raise the country; and that he had full powers awarded him by the Nana to raise a force, and grant commissions, &c., &c., but that his real name yet remained a secret. He was further informed that it would be premature to move in the matter just then, and that it would be more advisable to wait until his detectives should have elicited further information on various subjects, more especially regarding other agents, who, they had been told, were working under the orders of the said Madhowrow. A few days afterwards, one of his men arrived, and reported that Madhowrow was in the Barsee district, and that all was ripe for his capture. Captain Nuttall started from his camp on the night of the 22nd of November, and reached Kangaom the next day, where he had directed information to be sent as to the jungles they were in. Late on the 23rd of the same month one of his men arrived and reported that it was "all right," that he (the emissary) had most treasonable documents in his possession, in his own handwriting, and that he had given the men whom Captain Nuttall had sent all "purwannas" for service. Captain Nuttall started early in the morning to the Kangaoni jungles, near where he was lying in a temple. He delayed capturing him that day, as he was most anxious to take him red-handed whilst writing, so that he could not say the documents he had in his possession were forgeries. For this purpose Captain Nuttall sent one of his men disguised to take service with him, and the next morning when he was in the act of writing his "purwanna" he was seized. At first he struggled hard to escape, but seeing the fruitlessness of such attempts, he resigned himself to his fate. He openly maintains that he is a most determined enemy to the British Government, and that he is on this side of India for the purpose of raising the country, and proclaiming the Nana Sahib Peishwa. He states that he left the Nana in the Nepal Hills about three years ago, but Captain Nuttall believes he really left that miscreant much later. From all the information that has been gathered, and from what he states himself, he must be a first cousin to the Nana Sahib. He says his father's name was Rajaram, and that he was brother to Mahadeo Bhut, the Nana's father, and that he (the prisoner) was born at Bithoor, and was adopted by the late Peishwa Bajeerow. He was not, however, so communicative as Captain Nuttall could have desired, although he told the police sepoys that he had, in the hills near Dawer (Nizam's territory), in his service a large number of Ratoors, and hosts of the people in the country about, who were all ready to join, and that he was certain of some regiments rising the moment he displayed his flag. Before the detectives he received on several occasions letters, all of which were burnt after perusal. His letters and papers that he had received from the Nana he destroyed, for the reason, he told them, that once he had been detained for a few hours by the police, but was, luckily, not searched. His communications with the Upper Provinces and over the country were carried on by means of fakeers. Generally verbal messages were sent, seldom notes. In the event of success, the army of Aurungabad and Dowlatabad was to be composed as follows:—

Hoodedar Aleekha Wullud Peerkha, Jemadar Rs. 500
Duffedar 100

The next sunnud, found in his possession, is granted to Govindrow Wullud Soombhaje Naique, residing at Ballaghat, Zilla Dharasoor, village Anjungaom, for his having accepted the post of Hoodedaree in the service of the Government of Row Sahib Bajeerow, Peishwa Bahadoor. He was to select the following officers, under his command; and was to advance with his force upon the Fort of Purrandia:—

Hoodedar Govind Wullud Soombhaje, Naique. Rs. 200
Bhyroo Wullud Soombhaje, Naik ... 30
Sheeroobhaee Wullud Meeyabhaee Puttan, Duffedar ... 30
Shaik Chand Wullud Sooltankhan, Golundaj Luxoomun Wullud Dowgree, Duffedar ... 30
Phurreebhaee Wullud Rajooobhaee, Golundaj 40
Bapoo Kudum, Karkoon ... 50
10,000 Force, at Rs. 10 each, per month ... 10

After collecting this force, if, within eight days, the fort of Purrandia should be taken possession of, the villages of Anjungaom and Purrandia were to be given as an Inamee Jahageer, and, besides, a reward of Rs. 25,000 was to be paid.

The pay of Sowars was to be as below:—

Sowars, 1st Class Rs. 50
Do. 2nd Class 40
Do. 3rd Class 30

As you have sworn by the name of your ancestors, you should kill as many Europeans as you may find, and bring their heads out off before me, a reward for this shall be given as under:—

If European ladies and children are found they must be seized and brought alive. For this a reward of Rs. 12,000 will be paid.

Exceedingly liberal, it will be perceived, is the Rao Sahib with regard to the offers which he makes for the lives of babes and sucklings! Absolutely, if we had not the documents before us, we could scarcely believe that such things could be. The man seems, also, to have been possessed of abundance of hooddees, one of which we reproduce for the sake of hearing the explanations of a Mr. Nana Sunkersett upon the subject, whoever that individual may be. Probably some of our Bombay friends may be able to throw some light upon the subject. At all events, we subjoin the documents drawn on Bombay and Poona:—

F.

Rupees 50,000.

Hooddee of Sunkersett Nana, residing at Bombay, granted by Rungoo Hurree Punt, residing at Dharasew.

G.

Hooddee on Yeknata Balapa, residing at Beer, granted by Rungoo Hurree Punt, Dharasew.

D.

Rupees 40,000.

E.

Rupees 10,000.

Hooddee on the Shah of Daguba Kaley at Nagpoor (Nagpoor) granted by above Rungoo Hurree.

MEMORANDUM.

These hooddees are drawn out by Madhowrow, in his own handwriting, and signed by him, and purport to be for his own use.

It is to be hoped that the gentlemen whose names are so conspicuously mentioned, will come forward with the necessary explanations. The following was the army (on paper) destined to take possession of Poona. It was to be commanded by Shenapatee Guzraj Gungajee, who was to receive the handsome allowance of Rs. 10,000 per month for his services:—

After gathering together this army, Poona was at once to be seized; and this is the manner in which the English people of these parts were to be disposed of, after our troops had been, of course, annihilated. "For this (we are told) a reward of 100,000 rupees will be given to you, and your pay will be further continued. I shall never fail to fulfil this my promise after you have acted upon your words. When we will become masters of the country, the Inamee Jahageers, now in the possession of Ballajee Punt Nathoo and Vinchoorkur, will be ceded to you. If I will not act upon my words, I declare upon my solemn oath that my forefathers and descendants will suffer in hell, &c. If you will kill the Governor I shall give you a reward of 5,000, and if you destroy the Buddee Sahibs a reward of 3,000 rupees will be given. If European ladies and children are found they must be caught and brought alive before me with their noses and ears cut. If you fail in doing this, you will be considered as sinners against God!" Of course, and as failure has been the result, our missionary friends should at once endeavour to bring such promising converts within the fold, as they have been pronounced no longer fit to come within the pale of Hinduism. The army of Sholapoor was to be placed under the command of Shaik Hoossein Wullud Ahmed, and was to consist of 3,000 cavalry and 2,000 infantry. The force was to be organised as under:—

These must be killed, and their heads and hands should be brought before me, otherwise no claim for a reward will be accepted. If the European ladies and children will be caught, and brought alive before me with their noses cut, a reward of Rs. 1,000 will be granted.

There is an air of circumstance about this butchery which would be sickening to dwell upon, were it not that the whole affair seems the wanderings of a maniac, rather than the planned resolutions of a sane mind. With the following extract, which is authenticated with Capt. Nuttall's signature, as a true translation, we must conclude our extracts from the proceedings of this extraordinary trial:—

This Sunnud is granted by Shreemunt Row Sahib Bajeerow Peishwa Bahadoor to Surbajeet Sing wullud Gungasing, residing at Ballaghat, Zilla Dharasew, village Gittoor, on the Aswin Wudya 9, Thursday, Shukla 1784, for his having taken upon himself to select an army to be levied at Ahmednuggur under his command from this date.

In conclusion, we may mention that the Rao Sahib was the companion of Tantia Topce when he menaced the Dokhan in 1858.—Deccan Herald, April 20.

MISCELLANEOUS

MARRIAGES FOR MONEY.—The Satya Dipika and the Rast Gofar, both ably conducted Guzeratee weeklies, denounce the system of marriages for money, which the Banias and Bhattias have carried to an extent which threatens to sap the foundations of society among them. The occasion for some long articles by our contemporaries is an alleged contract effected by a Bhattia for the marriage of his daughter, a very young girl, in consideration of a payment of rupees sixty thousand by the intended son-in-law. There is a dearth at present, says the Rast Gofar, of marriageable girls among the Bhattias and Banias; and as no marriage, whether of a mere child, a youth, or an old man, can be a proper one, unless with a virgin, according to the customs of the Hindoos, the consequence is that marriageable girls are actually sold to the highest bidder, who generally happens to be a fat, old, but rich man. Rich and respectable persons are not guilty of such practices; but those who love money, and are too lazy to earn it, actually set a price upon their daughters. The Satyā Dipakā, differing from its contemporary on this point, states that the practice is common even in rich families. Our contemporaries agree, however, as to the immense mischief which is the result of this alleged sale of marriageable girls. Domestic happiness is a rare thing between husbands and wives united in this manner, while family quarrels lead to constant ill-treatment of the latter, and not unfrequently to suicide. Owing to the great disparity of age when marriages are contracted, old husbands, on their deaths, leave young widows behind, who from that time are doomed to a life of seclusion, misery, and, as is often the case, of unchastity. The parents of the girls are responsible for all these evils, the only panacea for which appears to our contemporaries to be the re-marriage of widows.

SEWAGE OF BOMBAY.—The subject of deodorization and disinfection of sewage is at present engaging the attention of the Municipal Commissioners of Bombay. Staff assistant-surgeon P. G. Hewlett has addressed a letter to the Commissioners, in which he lays before them many valuable suggestions. After detailing at length the nature of the various gases emitted from putrefying animal and vegetable matter, the writer proceeds to show that "in deodorizing and disinfecting sewage, it is requisite to employ some agent which will prevent the decomposition of the fecal matter before these gases are evolved." Such a desideratum is supplied by carbonic acid gas, which is used largely in England with complete success when properly applied. In many towns in England during the Cholera season or when defective sanitary arrangements exist, "the carbonic acid has been applied to the water carts and drains with the happiest results." The Commissioners were so convinced of the importance of the suggestions made by Dr. Hewlett that they lost no time in "experimenting on the sewage of Bombay with carbonic acid, and found the remedy to be most efficacious." Large supplies of the acid, together with detailed drawings and the necessary instruments, have been ordered out from England, and the best thanks of the Commissioners are conveyed to Dr. Hewlett for his "valuable suggestions." Bombay, from all that we can learn, is far superior to Calcutta with respect to sanitary arrangements, and yet our own Commissioners make no effort to improve the drainage of this city. We shall be glad to learn that they propose to follow the example set by the sister Presidency, for the condition of the drains in Calcutta is such that if they are much longer neglected, some dreadful epidemic must inevitably be engendered.

TRIAL FOR FORGERY.—The counsel for the prisoners in the case of conspiracy and forgery, tried before the High Court at Bombay, has moved for a new trial, "on the ground that the evidence did not warrant the verdict of the jury." The presiding judge (Sir Joseph Arnould) remarked on this that "he quite concurred in the propriety of the finding." It was then urged that although by the 24th section of the letters patent constituting the High Court, there was no appeal in criminal cases, still it was left discretionary with the judge, before passing a sentence, to reserve any important point for the consideration of the full Court. The judge replied, "That in a country where evidence could be so easily manufactured, he should be the last person in the world to reverse the verdict of a jury with which he was satisfied." The prisoners' counsel argued, on the other hand, that the High Court held the same position as the Court of Queen's Bench in England, and insisted that "there was sufficient doubt as to the corroboration of the approver's statement to justify the judge in reserving the point." Ultimately it was agreed to defer passing sentence until the counsel for the prisoners had brought the matter before the full Court.

CAPTAIN ISMAEL BEG.—A correspondent at Baroda writes to us as follows:—"Yesterday (April 23) his Royal Highness's Brigade were assembled to witness the expulsion from the service, with ignominy, of Captain Ismael Beg, alias, Kennedy, for committing a rape on the person of a child about five years of age. This Ismael Beg, alias Kennedy, was formerly a lieutenant in the Bombay Cavalry, and was cashiered without trial for anti-Christian habits, he having embraced the Mahomedan faith. He was brought to the parade ground by a guard of troopers, his sentence read out to the troops, and, after divesting him of sword and uniform, expelled the Guicowar's dominions."

BROAD OR NARROW GAUGE.—A difference of opinion exists between the Bombay Government and the Indian Tramway Company respecting the gauge of the proposed line of tramway between Gogo and Ahmedabad, and for which this company is seeking a Government subvention. The Bombay Government demands that this line, which is to serve as a precedent for the construction of all others intended as feeders for the great trunk lines, be constructed on the broad gauge system. The reason given by the chief engineer of the G.I.P. Railway Company for this determination is that the trunk lines should be of the same gauge as the trunk lines, "so that the rolling stock of the latter may be used on the former, and vice versa." By adopting the broad gauge, the Government appears to consider that, in the event of the branch lines falling into their hands at any subsequent time, they could at once be incorporated with the trunk lines, whereas if the gauge were different on the two lines, much delay and inconvenience would arise. The question is esteemed of such importance that the Government of Bombay has referred the matter to the Government of India. The difference in cost between the broad and narrow gauges is £3,000 per mile, and the company have given a pledge to shareholders that they shall not be called upon to pay more than this sum.

BRIBERY.—Nemchund Meelapchund, the opium merchant charged with giving a bribe to a telegraph signaller in the office at Bombay, has been convicted and sentenced to two years' imprisonment, the judge expressing his regret that the law did not empower him to pass a heavier sentence. It will be remembered that this man was the means, about a year ago, of convicting two signallers who had been in league with him for some time, and to whom he had promised a large sum of money for falsifying the Galle telegram conveying the China opium news. On the release of these men from prison they applied for payment of the promised bribe, but were peremptorily refused, and in consequence gave information against their principal, which led to his arrest and conviction. This case affords another instance of the extraordinary facility with which false evidence can be obtained when necessary, and to which the Court alluded in passing sentence. "In addition to the charge itself," the Court observed, "you have succeeded in bribing some of the witnesses who appeared to-day to unsay upon oath what they swore to before the police magistrate."

"UNITED STATES" STEAM-SHIP.—Mauritius news has reached us via Bombay to the 24th of March. The steam-ship United States, of 600 tons, Captain Ganie, from London to Bombay, was run into on the 15th of February by a large American ship, name unknown, in latitude 308 S. and longitude 208 W., carrying away the masts and bulwarks of the steamer. This vessel arrived at Bombay on the 10th inst.—Bengal Hurkaru, April 22.

EXPORTS FROM KURRACHEE.—The Sindian remarks that in 1853 the whole exports from Kurrachee were only Rs. 37,63,107, or Rs. 6,22,434 less than the total value of exports during the single month of last February. This is a gigantic stride to take within one decade, but it is more than paralleled by the progress of Rangoon. The second consignment of Punjab flax—eighteen bales—has been exported by the agent of the Indian Flax Company to Belfast. It is valued at £35 a ton, and is specially exempted from duty.

CHINA.

HONG KONG, April 15.—The news of the fortnight is not eventful, nor, on the whole, is it unsatisfactory. At Peking everything appears to be quiet. Sir Frederick Bruce's administration of British affairs continues to be marked by great ability and foresight, and is such as to command the respect of all who have the interests of sound foreign relations at heart.

From Tien-tsiu we learn that her Majesty's consul Mr. Gibson, who was wounded in an affray with the Nyen-fei rebels, reported in our last summary of news, is out of danger, although still suffering from the wound in his head. The rebels have been driven off from the vicinity of the settlement; their presence had a depressing effect upon the trade of the port.

From Shanghai we have been expecting intelligence as to the success of an expedition of disciplined Chinese which was sent some time ago to the relief of Fochan, known to be invested by the rebels. Nothing decisive has yet occurred. The expedition expended all their ammunition, and were prevented from further action by the want of "bridges"—a want already, on two occasions, disastrous to the Imperial arms at Tai-tsan and Shaou-hsing. Major Gordon, now in full command of the disciplined contingent, has proceeded with a strong reinforcement of men and additional supplies of ammunition. It is to be hoped that he will bring the tardy operations to a speedy conclusion.

From Hankow there is little news of importance. The weather has been unsettled. The tea season will commence soon. Teas are expected to arrive in the middle of May, a week or two earlier than last year. There will likely be a further decrease in the quantity of tea that goes to Canton, as it was clearly proved last season that it entailed a loss to send teas to Canton from the Hoo provinces.

Kiukiang continues to prosper; its reputation for game, however, is falling off. Deer are still occasionally seen in the neighbourhood, but the feathered tribes are somewhat scarce. On the 21st ultimo an armed party of fifty men attacked a Cantonese hong there, and plundered it of four chests of opium and 1,000 taels of silver. The men are supposed to be discharged Imperialist soldiers from Nganking.

The accounts from Ningpo are not very encouraging; no progress has been reported against the Taepings since the capture of Shaou-hsing. The Franco-Chinese troops are said to be too much given to general looting—a practice that will eventually bring disgrace if not disaster upon foreign arms.

No reports have yet reached us as to Admiral Kuper's doings in Japan; there are not wanting indications of a desire to temporise on the part of the Japanese, but nothing is known sufficiently definite to allay the general anxiety as to what attitude they mean to adopt, and what securities for their future good behaviour our Minister means to require, in the event of their showing a desire to treat with us peacefully. In the meantime everything is quiet; the secession of nobles from Yedo still continues, and it cannot be concealed that some grave design is shrouded under that extraordinary proceeding. Two documents, purporting to be translations of native papers, were published in our last issue; they are believed to be genuine productions, and the opinions to be formed from perusing them are unfavourable to the position of American political agents in this portion of the East. The steamer Fiery Cross, recently purchased by the Japanese Government from a foreign firm here, has been lost in a typhoon in the Inland Sea.—Overland China Mail.

SERVICES AT LUCKNOW.

April 15.—No. 31a.—The foll. copy of a despatch from the Right Hon. the Sec. of State for India No. 88, dated Feb. 28, 1863, is published for general information:—

Military.—No. 88.

To H.E. the Right Hon. the GOVERNOR GENERAL OF INDIA in Council.

MY LORD.—With your military letter dated Dec. 22 last, No. 476, you transmit, for my consideration, applications from Lieut. Col. C. A. Barwell and Brev. Maj. T. F. Wilson, C.B., soliciting that the one year's service granted to the officers and soldiers engaged at the defence of Lucknow, may be allowed to count as service towards promotion in the staff corps.

2. I agree with the C. in C. in India and your Govt. that the application cannot be complied with. To concede the point would be to give to these officers an undue advantage.

3. In reply to the inquiry made by your Govt. as to the exact benefits derivable by commissioned officers from the grant of the year's service, I have to inform you that, in the case of such officers, the grant was intended only to apply to service for the retiring pension. I observe it is stated, however, in the letter of the Sec. to your Govt., military dept., to the officg. adjt. gen., dated Dec. 15, 1862, that in the case of the civilians engaged in the defence of Lucknow the year's service has been allowed to reckon as service towards furlough, provided they do not thereby take precedence of their seniors, who may be entitled to, and may desire to take, furlough.

4. I shall not object to the extension of the same privilege to the military officers engaged in the defence of Lucknow.—I have, &c.,

(Signed)

C. Wood.

Court Martial.ENSIGN A. R. HAMILTON, H.M.'s 98TH FOOT.

Head Quarters, Simla, March 31.—At a General Court Martial assembled at Rawul Pindee, on Monday, December 22, 1862, Ensign Archibald Rowan Hamilton, H.M.'s 98th foot, was arraigned on the following charges:—

Charges.—1st. With having, at Peshawur and Rawul Pindee, and between these places, between March 18, 1861, and March 21, 1862, when acting paymaster of the regiment, fraudulently misapplied the sum of Rupees 6,915-10-1, or thereabouts, public money intrusted to him, as paymaster, for her Majesty's use.

2nd. With conduct unbecoming the character of an officer, and to the prejudice of good order and military discipline, in having at Rawul Pindee, on or about April 1, 1862, been drunk on commanding officer's parade.

Additional Charges.

1st. For having, when in arrest at Rawul Pindee, on or about Sept. 28, 1862, left his confinement before being set at liberty by proper authority.

2nd. For conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman, and subversive of good order and military discipline, in having at Rawul Pindee, on or about the night of Sept. 30, 1862, familiarly associated with Private John Hill, 98th regiment, and the wife of the said Private Hill, by receiving them at his quarters, and permitting them to sit near and on the bed on which he, Ensign Hamilton, was lying in the open air in his compound.

Finding.

The Court is of opinion that the prisoner, Ensign Archibald Rowan Hamilton, H.M.'s 98th foot, is—

Of the first charge not guilty, and does acquit him thereof.

Of the second charge guilty.

Of the first additional charge guilty.

Of the second additional charge guilty.

Sentence.

The Court sentences the prisoner, Ensign Archibald Rowan Hamilton, H.M.'s 98th foot, to be cashiered.

(Signed) H. P. DE TRISSIER, Lieut. col., President.

Rawul Pindee, Jan. 12, 1863.

Approved and Confirmed.

(Signed) HUGH ROSE, General, C. in C. in India.

Camp Meerut, March 13, 1863.

Abolition of the Indian Navy.

Marine Dept., Bombay Castle, April 22.—No. 22.—The return of the Semiramis, Constance, and Mahi from Aden permits the final abolition of the Indian Navy, as ordered by H.M.'s Govt.

The reasons for this measure do not touch the high character of that Navy.

The services of the Indian Navy have been most varied, honourable, and useful. It has done successful war services in Burmah, China, and Persia; the surveys made by its officers are of wide-spread utility; and the beneficial results of its repression of piracy and of the slave-trade will long endure.

The same gradual change of circumstances which led to the conversion of the East India Company's Bombay Marine into the Indian Navy has now led H.M.'s Govt. to rely upon the Royal Navy for all naval duties in the Indian seas.

The extinction of such an honourable service, and of the prospects to which its officers looked, must be viewed with regret and sympathy by the Govt. under which they served. These feelings have been expressed by H.M.'s Govt.; they are shared by H.E. the Gov. in Council, and have influenced all the orders for disposal of the officers.

H.E. the Gov. in Council begs Commodore Frushard and the officers of the Indian Navy to accept this renewed assurance of the respect with which the Govt. regards their past services, and of its desire to mitigate, so far as possible, the disappointment attending the change in their career.

At noon on the 30th inst. the broad pendant of Commodore Frushard will be saluted by eleven guns from the battery at Apollie Pier.

The flag of the Indian Navy, long known as "the Company's Jack," will then be hoisted at the Castle flag-staff and saluted by twenty-one guns.

At the close of the salute the Indian Jack will be hauled down, the broad pendant of Commodore Frushard and the pendants of all the Indian Navy vessels in harbour will be struck, and the Indian Navy will cease to exist as an effective service.

Commodore Frushard, on landing from the Ajdaha, will receive a personal salute of eleven guns.

Under the authority of H.M.'s Principal Secretary of State for India, the following honorary promotions on retirement will have effect from 30th inst.:—

To be Captains.

Commanders C. J. Crutenden, W. B. Selby, W. Balfour, H. W. Grounds, A. Foulerton, G. N. Adams, J. Tronson, M. B. Worsley, H. Batt, F. W. Hopkins, R. A. Stradling, G. C. Constable, T. S. H. Twynam, H. A. Fraser, E. Peavor, and H. W. Etheridge.

To be Commanders.

Lieutenants A. W. Chitty, E. Giles, E. F. T. Ferguson, W. M. Pengelly, J. Sedley, C. H. Walker, S. B. Hellard, C. Lloyd, G. T. Robinson, G. T. Holt, A. D. Taylor, C. Y. Ward, P. W. Mitcheson, S. Child, J. G. Nixon, C. E. Brooman, H. H. James, T. E. Lewis, T. W. Aylesbury, W. H. M. Davies, F. Gardiner, G. N. P. Mason, R. W. Whish, W. B. Dickson, A. A. Cookson, A. T. Windus, and J. A. H. Heathcote.

To be Lieutenants.

Messrs. T. R. Rogers, G. C. Seance, J. G. Lakes, J. B. Bewsher, G. L. Lewis, F. L. Seaton, W. H. Ogilvy, F. Warden, H. Ellis, H. Morland, H. Burn, C. P. Wilson, T. M. Lambard, A. H. Hall, C. V. D'Arcy, G. C. Parker, J. Rutherford, A. N. Law, G. L. Bonham, F. Dawkins, W. H. Bruce, J. Brebner, B. C. S. Clarke, C. E. Beddome, and J. G. DuBoulay.

No. 23.—With reference to G. G. O. No. 22 of this date, H.E. in Council directs that, after the 30th instant, the vessels hitherto belonging to the Indian Navy will be borne as supernumeraries of the Bombay Marine.

The present pay and allowances will be continued to the man-of-war crews until discharged.

The dockyard establishments will be maintained until further orders.

Captain Young, C.B., the assistant superintendent and dockmaster, will, as superintendent of the dockyard and of the Bombay Marine, take the control of the docks, vessels, and establishments.

Captain Young will make arrangements for the care of the seamen who are still undischarged.

The Examiner, Indian Navy Department, will continue his functions as examiner, Marine department.

The Deputy-Inspector General of Hospitals for the Presidency Division and Indian Navy will exercise medical supervision of the Bombay Marine, and be called deputy inspector general Presidency division and Bombay Marine.

The Indian naval draftsmen will be called marine draftsmen.

COTTON FRAUDS BILL.

THE Cotton Frauds Bill has at last passed the Bombay Legislative Council, but it is considerably altered and amended since its first conception, and has still to pass the criticism of the supreme authorities in Bengal.
The Bill provides that all cotton adulterated, deteriorated, or fraudulently mixed, or deceptively increased in weight, shall be confiscated.

BOMBAY JOINT-STOCK BANKS.

THERE are already nine banks at Bombay, but it seems that a tenth is required. A joint-stock bank is about to be established there. The promoters of the new company are the Honourable Michael Hugh Scott, Robert Hannay, and Cowasjee Jehanghir, of Bombay. The capital is to consist of five hundred thousand pounds, to be divided into twenty-five thousand shares of twenty pounds each, with power to increase such capital by the issue of new shares to one million pounds.
The head office is to be in London.

BISHOP COLENZO AND YOUNG
BENGAL.

BISHOP COLENZO's attacks upon the "Penta-teuch" are said to have had very considerable effect upon the mind of Young Bengal. A native paper, called the Bengallee, complains of the inconsistency of the English nation, which pretends to love free discussion and yet persecutes those individuals who dare to think for themselves, and frankly express their own opinions. The editor of the Bengallee asks his British readers how they can expect the natives "to forsake all they hold dear upon earth to embrace doctrines about which many eminent men in England are in doubt?"
We think the bishops have grossly exaggerated the danger of Dr. Colenso's writings as far as this country is concerned, because most of his objections have been answered a thousand times before, and are not now urged with any peculiar power of eloquence or logic; but it happens that Dr. Colenso's works on arithmetic are class-books in the Government Colleges of India. His name is familiar to the students as that of a successful author, and now that they hear of the apostate bishop having directed his favourite science against his old creed, the circumstance has created amongst them a very peculiar excitement, and is a subject of especial exultation amongst the educated Hindoo Deists and Free-Thinkers. In this way, the fact of a Christian prelate daring to discourse to the public on what he is pleased to pronounce the "unhistorical" character of the "Pentateuch," must have a very injurious effect upon the missionary cause in India. The natives have already reprinted the works of Tom Paine, and we dare say that we shall soon hear of their having paid the same compliment to Dr. Colenso. The natives are not likely to give credit to the bishop for still retaining some respect for the Holy Scriptures, for they will not understand how a man who rejects so large a portion of the Bible as he does, can look upon the rest of it as the Word of God; and will in all probability attribute to worldly motives his abstinence from an open avowal of wholesale unbelief.

THE BHOORE GHAUT INCLINE ON THE G. I. P. RAILWAY.

By far the most important, most interesting, and most memorable event in India of the present year was the opening of the works on the Bhoore Ghaut Incline. This gigantic and noble undertaking by the Great Indian Peninsula Railway Company was commenced in January, 1852, and completed in March, 1863, at the cost of £1,100,000 sterling, or one crore and ten lakhs of rupees. It was formally opened, with appropriate ceremonies, by his Excellency Sir Bartle Frere, Governor of Bombay, on the 21st ultimo. The Governor's speeches on the occasion (too long for us to reprint) were in excellent taste, and full of generous, enthusiastic, and well-earned tributes of praise to all concerned in this marvellous work, which has triumphed over so many physical difficulties that at first sight must have seemed insuperable. But there are few difficulties really insuperable to Anglo-Saxon energy and skill. This grand scientific conquest, far nobler and more impressive than the bloodiest military victory, furnishes one more substantial and complete reply to the complaint of Burke uttered some four score years ago, and so often echoed by others almost to the present day, to the effect that the English in India had erected "no stately monuments, no hospitals, no palaces, no schools, built no bridges, made no reservoirs, and that were we suddenly driven out of India nothing would remain to tell that it had been possessed, during the inglorious period of our dominion, by anything better than the orang-outang or the tiger." The inhabitants of India, native or foreign, were never much troubled by the presence of orang-outangs, and Sir Archibald Alison, in his incomplete quotation of this passage from Burke, very quietly drops the word orang-outang and puts that of the hyæna in its place. Our sportsmen in India have left but few hyænas, or leopards, or lions, or tigers to tell a tale against us; while the Anglo Indian Government, and many enterprising private companies and independent British settlers of all sorts have cleared vast jungles, and have cultivated, and variegated, and adorned, and enriched the country from Cape Comorin to the Himalaya mountains with profitable and beautiful plantations, and roads, and railways, and electric telegraphs, and bridges, and aqueducts, and canals, and harbours, and tanks, and palaces, and hospitals, and colleges, and schools, and Christian temples. The Ganges Canal, 525 miles in length ("nearly equal to the aggregate length of the four greatest navigable canals in France"), and this Bhoore Ghaut Incline, would alone be sufficient to disprove the sneering remark of men rather less eloquent than Burke, that, if we were compelled to resign our Eastern possessions we should leave nothing behind us but empty beer bottles.

The Bhoore Ghaut Incline is a work of which any country might be proud. The length of the Incline, from the base to the summit, is upwards of 15 miles. The level of its base is 196 feet above the sea, and of its summit 2,027 feet, so that the total elevation surmounted by this Incline is 1,831 feet, the average gradient being 1 in 48, and the steepest gradient 1 in 37 for 1 mile and 38½ chains. The engineers, to whom the greatest praise is due for their exertions on this grand work, so happily completed, are the late Mr. Berkeley, Mr. Graham, the late Mr. Tredwell, and Colonel Rivers (consulting engineer), and Messrs. Anderson and Clowser, the present managers.

Sir Bartle Frere, in his reply to the address from the Great Indian Peninsula Railway Company, said very strikingly—"Were I to tell you that the bulk of so many pyramids was contained in the earthwork and masonry of the embankments, that it would take so many times all the bridges of London to equal the viaducts—or were I to compare the bulk of the stone quarried with the breakwaters of Plymouth or Portland—I could give you but an imperfect idea compared with that which we have all derived from traversing the Incline this day. Nor could any description give to the uninitiated a notion of the difficulties you have had to overcome. Military men who know what it is to organize and feed an army of 10,000 men, may have some knowledge of the difficulties of organizing, feeding, and working a multitude of labourers, averaging for years together 25,000, and rising to the enormous number of 42,000; but most of us must be content with the impression we have this day received, and it is, I am sure, an impression which can never be effaced of that which may, I believe, without exaggeration be described as the greatest work of the kind in the whole world."

Such magnificent and truly useful works as these, connecting so conveniently the capitals of India, cannot but add materially to the strength and security of Government, enlarge our commerce, develop the vast resources of India, preserve public peace and order, advance the prosperity of the people, and increase to an almost indefinite extent the value of our Oriental possessions. We are glad to learn that, in spite of a few exceptional instances of misconduct, the hundreds of Englishmen thrown into immediate contact with the natives on this great railway have by their good conduct and forbearance raised the character of our nation amongst the people, so that the Engineers have had no want of willing Hindu assistance in their arduous work. These poor dark-skinned labourers have well performed that portion of the duty which no white men attempt with impunity under an Indian sun, and it is gratifying to hear that they have been so well paid and well treated that they look upon their railway employers and associates as the best friends they have ever had. Such is the popularity of the railway managers and staff, that the Governor expressed an opinion that if he and the railway company were both equally bent on raising an army, the Government would find most formidable rivals in Messrs. Adamson and Clowser. The multiplication of such Englishmen in India, and the means and appliances of telegraphs and railroads, would soon enable us to laugh at the idea of another mutiny in India being in the slightest degree dangerous to our supremacy.

LORD CLIVE'S FUND.

THE great Lord Clive, who will ever occupy a most important position in the history of British India, left in trust to the East India Company a large sum of money for the benefit of invalided or disabled European officers and soldiers of the Bengal army. The money was to revert to his family should the East India Company at any time cease to have an army in their pay. That event occurred on the transfer of India to the Crown in 1858. Sir John Benn Walsh, the present legal representative of Lord Clive, claims the payment of this money, called Lord Clive's Fund, from the Secretary of State for India. The case was brought into the Court of Chancery some time in 1861, and in December of that year the Master of the Rolls dismissed the Bill with costs, on the ground that this trust fund had passed into the hands of her Majesty, and ought to be still applied to the original purpose, for the pensioners on the fund still existed, and the Crown had taken upon itself all the responsibilities of the East India Company. Sir John Benn Walsh, not satisfied with this decision, appealed to the House of Lords.

Our military readers, of course, know all that they need to know about Lord Clive's Fund, but as some into whose hands this paper falls may now hear of it for the first time, or have but very vague notions regarding its origin, its general character, or its details, it will, perhaps, be as well to say a few words upon the subject.

Lord Clive, whom Pitt called the "Heaven-born general," whom the natives of India called "the Daring in War," whom both Hindoos and Europeans must ever remember as the Victor of Plassey and the Founder of our Indian Empire, after his first administration in Bengal brought home such a princely fortune as enabled him to vie with the richest grandees of England in luxury and magnificence. With this noble fortune he acted nobly. He paid off all his father's debts and enabled him to ride in his own carriage for the rest of his life. He settled five hundred a-year upon his old commander Lawrence, and raised all his poorer friends and relations to a condition of comfort and independence. He is said to have expended in this way at least fifty thousand pounds; and fifty thousand pounds at that time was of nearly double the value of what it is in these days. Every one knows that Lord Clive deposed Surajah Dowlah, and placed Meer Jaffier on the throne of Bengal, and Lord Clive always acknowledged that he owed the greater part of his vast fortune to the gratitude or the fears of the Nawab, who was a mere puppet in his lordship's hands. On one occasion Clive accepted from him a present of twenty lacs of rupees. "It would have cost him but a word," says Macaulay, "to make it forty." In fact, the treasury of Moorsshedabad was at his command; and so, indeed, was that of Fort William. But, though he secured to himself his own fair share of prizes, he took good care of the Company's interests also. Eight hundred thousand pounds sterling in coined silver were sent from Moorshedabad to Calcutta, at the dictation of Lord Clive, for the use of the East India Company.

After Lord Clive, with a small force of 450 Europeans and 2,500 sepoy, had saved the panic-stricken Meer Jaffier from Shah Alum, who, advancing with an army of forty thousand men, had threatened to dethrone him, the Nawab, in the excess of his delight, bestowed on Clive the title of Omrah, or Lord of the Empire, and granted him, for his own life and to the Company in perpetuity, a jaghire or landed estate, south of Calcutta, worth about £30,000 a-year. The Court of Directors questioned the right of Meer Jaffier to bestow this land on their servant for his life; and on Lord Clive's second return to England it was with difficulty that he got the term of the jaghire extended for ten years, but even that guaranteed him the sum of £300,000. At first the Directors had resolved to confiscate it, and Lord Clive had even filed a bill in Chancery against them; but when affairs in India were suddenly discovered to be in a most critical position, and no other pilot was thought fit to take the helm of the empire in the hour of danger, his enemies were overpowered and outvoted, and he was allowed to have everything his own way. He went back for the third and last time to India with all honour and power. On his arrival there he found that Meer Jaffier was dead, and had left him, by will, a legacy of five lacs of rupees. No one could justly question Clive's right to that money; but as he had been so badgered by his countrymen at home about his Indian wealth, and as very stringent orders had lately been issued by the Court of Directors forbidding any of their servants to accept gifts from the natives, he determined not to have a question raised upon the subject—though the rules alluded to might freely be said to apply to presents from the living and not to bequests from the dead. He accepted the money, but made the whole over to the East India Company, in trust, for the relief of invalided or disabled officers and soldiers of the Bengal establishment on their retirement from the service, and for the support of their widows. The new Nawab of Bengal, Syf-al-Dowla, was persuaded to add another three lacs to the Fund, and the East India Company undertook to increase the value of the Fund by an interest of 8 per cent. per annum upon the whole eight lacs.

Lord Clive, it appears, seems to have anticipated the day when the great Indian Empire would pass from the Company to the Crown, and when the Company's army would be no more. He inserted a clause in the deed by which he transferred the money in trust to the Company, to the effect that if the Company should cease to keep up an army in their pay, and have no fleet of ships for carrying on their trade and commerce, that the money should return to himself or his heirs or representatives. If the Company kept up their shipping as traders, after resigning their army on ceasing to be the rulers of India, Lord Clive intended the benefits of the Fund to be extended to the sailors. The Lords have decided that the view of the case taken in the Court below was "radically erroneous," and its decree ought to be reversed, and it was reversed accordingly. The respondent is to pay the costs to the appellant. Lord Clive's five lacs are to be paid over to Sir John Walsh, the present representative of the Clive family, "subject to the payment of such annuities and pensions duly granted by the East India Company under the provisions of the deed of 1770, before the passing of the Act of 1858, and now subsisting, as shall be found payable out of the interest. Of the five lacs of rupees, the appellant, as representative of Lord Clive, is entitled to receive from the respondent the sum of five lacs of sicca rupees, and all of the five lacs not required to meet such annuities and pensions be paid to the appellant."

The pensioners now on Lord Clive's Fund need be under no apprehension of losing their small means of subsistence. If we understand the decision of the Lords rightly, no part of the original sum or the interest of it will be paid to the representative of Lord Clive until all existing claims are duly provided for.

By the regulations for the admission of pensioners on Lord Clive's Fund, every officer must swear that he does not possess any real or personal property beyond a fixed and very moderate amount. The fund, indeed, is chiefly intended for the destitute; and those who have served long enough to be entitled to the regular pension from the State are not permitted to have any share whatever in the benefits of the Fund. Widows are obliged to swear that their husbands did not die possessed of more than a certain sum, which is fixed at rates proportioned to the ranks of the several officers at the date of their death. The allowances from the Fund are greatly lower than the regular pensions. A captain, for instance, who has served his time has a pension of ten shillings and sixpence a-day, but from Lord Clive's Fund he obtains but five shillings a-day. His widow draws half that sum. If a disabled captain possesses two thousand pounds of his own, he is not entitled to the benefit of Lord Clive's Fund, though he may have a large family to support.

As the Crown, on taking possession of India, accepted all the then liabilities or responsibilities of the late Company, it cannot be doubted that even if the law should fail to secure the rights of all legitimate claimants on Lord Clive's Fund, no one but the Government will be a serious loser by Sir J. B. Walsh's gain. As the Fund was established at a period when the Indian army was wretchedly ill paid, and the condition of that army is altogether changed and improved, and there are now regular pensions allowed which were not in existence when Lord Clive's Fund was founded, it is not likely that the same institution will be continued after present claimants are provided for, so that officers who now enter the Indian service will understand that Lord Clive's Fund will be to them but as a thing of the past.

SIR JOHN BENN WALSH V. THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA AND THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—MAY 21.

The noble and learned lords present this morning were the LORD CHANCELLOR, LORD BROUGHAM, LORD WENSLEYDALE, and LORD CHELMSFORD.

Their lordships this morning delivered judgment in this singular case, relating to the donation of upwards of £80,000 by the first Lord Clive to the East India Company for the formation of a fund for officers and men in their service.

The Lord Chancellor said: In the year 1770 that great man the first Lord Clive formed the design of establishing a pension fund for the relief of such European officers and soldiers in the service of the East India Company as might be disabled while in the service, and of the widows of those who should fall in their service. He seemed to have foreseen that the territorial possessions of the company would increase, and that they would require at all times European troops for the maintenance of their possessions. He accordingly had embodied in his deed the principal motive that influenced him, and the object that he sought to obtain—namely, to induce European officers and men to enter into the service of the East India Company. But he had probably some misgivings about that which the world afterwards saw with admiration—the power of a few ordinary traders in Leadenhall-street to enlarge and establish and to rule dominions of such vast extent, including so many millions of the human race. Accordingly, he provided for the possibility of the Company ceasing to employ European officers and troops in their military service. He probably calculated that the time was not far distant when the Imperial Government would be required by necessity or by expediency to enter itself into the government of the territorial possessions of the East India Company, reducing that Company to its original position of a trading corporation. In order to accomplish this, Lord Clive, being possessed of a large sum of money, amounting to five lakhs of rupees, which he had lent to the East India Company upon its notes, induced the Nabob of Bengal to advance for a similar purpose another three lakhs of rupees, and the entire sum of eight lakhs, together with interest thereon amounting to £24,000, was handed over in effect by Lord Clive to the Company upon the terms that they should be bound to provide an annual sum, equal to the interest at 8 per cent. upon the eight lacs of rupees, to be applied in furnishing pensions to disabled and retired officers and soldiers and the widows of those who had fallen in the manner prescribed by the deed. The cardinal question on which this case appeared to turn was the ascertainment of what was really the trust fund created by the deed. The Master of the Rolls had treated it as a trust fund which had a substantive and independent existence, and which was capable of being dealt with as such, and had been transferred by a recent Act of Parliament, and which was now in a separate and distinct state of existence and investment, subject to the trust which his Honour supposed to have been declared or continued by that Act of Parliament. The Lord Chancellor could not concur in that view of the effect of the deed, or of the transaction which it embodied. There was no trust fund so far as the principal was concerned. The East India Company incurred no obligation to set apart or to keep any part of their revenues in a distinct form or mode of investment; the only trust fund was the annual interest which the company was bound to provide and to apply to the object of the trust. The duration of the trust was, upon the face of the deed, perfectly clear—it was to continue as long as there were objects of the trust. The objects of the trust were equally apparent upon the face of the deed; they were the European officers and soldiers in the service of the Company disabled by age or by the accidents of the service, and the widows of those who died in that service. Therefore, so long as those cestui que trusts continued, so long had the trust duration. The next point which was observable in passing, and which followed immediately from what he took leave, with the greatest deference, to denominate the original misapprehension of the case upon which the decree appealed from was founded, was the position laid down by the Master of the Rolls, that the appellant's bill must not be regarded as if it were an action of covenant brought by the representative of Lord Clive upon the covenant contained in the deed, but it was to be treated as if it were in the nature of a suit for the repayment or re-transfer of the trust fund. On the contrary, it appeared to him (the Lord Chancellor) the suit occupied in the eye of a court of equity that precise position, and possessed the character which an action at law would have had if it had been brought upon the company. The obligation of the East India Company was not an obligation in the nature of a re-transfer, which might be the subject of a claim for re-petition, but it was a common personal contract entered into by the East India Company, not to pay out of any specific fund, not to render back any definite trust security, but out of its general revenues, if a certain event should happen, to repay to the representative of Lord Clive such a sum of money as should be equal to the value of the five lakhs of rupees, that being the property which had been the subject of the original donation by Lord Clive. If that were the nature of the case the question that would arise upon the deed was a simple one—namely, had that event occurred which gave birth to an action of demand upon the covenant? That event was expressed in the covenant in the following way:—If the united company, after the year 1784, should cease to employ a military force in their actual pay and service in the East Indies, and also ships for carrying on their trade and commerce, they shall," &c. There were two events mentioned in that covenant—one, about which there was no controversy, occurred on the passing of the Act of 1833, when the East India Company ceased to be possessed of ships for carrying on their trade and commerce, and ceased to be a trading and commercial company. But the other event did not occur until after the passing of the Act of 1858, when they ceased to employ a military force, because their troops were taken from them, and they were disqualified from employing any military forces in their actual pay and service in the East Indies. It had been faintly argued at their Lordships' bar that the thing contemplated by the deed was a voluntary act of the East India Company, and that the operation of the Act of Parliament, being in the nature of a proceeding vis major, could hardly be regarded as coming within the meaning of the covenant. He, however, apprehended that that was an erroneous position, and that their Lordships had no right to limit by any such form as that suggested by the argument, the natural meaning and effect, of the deed. In all probability Lord Clive contemplated the ceasing of the Company to employ a military force in the very manner in which it had happened—namely, by the intervention of the Home or Imperial Government. But the Act of Parliament requiring the East India Company to discontinue to employ a military force could not be considered in the light of a tort or wrong, and therefore the Company must be considered to have properly, duly, and in a manner consistent with every obligation ceased to employ a military force. Therefore, looking at the deed alone, they would have no difficulty in coming to the conclusion that the appellant was entitled to the sum of five lakhs of rupees. Although the five lakhs of rupees were blended in the general funds of the East India Company, yet it seemed good to Parliament in 1833 to declare that all their debts and liabilities should be made chargeable upon the revenues of India, and therefore this contingent liability must be supposed to come within the words of the Act, and will have to be satisfied out of the general funds of India. In that condition of things the Act of 1858 was passed, and the Master of the Rolls came to the conclusion that the covenant must be considered as a trust which that Act had transferred. He had already commented upon that position, which followed as a necessary consequence upon the original erroneous assumption in point of law and fact that the distinct trust fund transferrable by the Act, which there was not, as he had already stated. There was not a word in the Act of Parliament which in any way affected the trust; and even if the Legislature had expressly enacted that the officers and soldiers serving in India and their widows were still to retain the advantages secured to the company's troops under the deed of 1770 it would not in the slightest degree have affected the claim of the representatives of Lord Clive to the five lakhs of rupees when the events contemplated by the covenant had happened. His conviction, therefore, was that the view of the case which was taken in the Court below was radically erroneous, and ought to be reversed. He submitted the following declaration for their Lordships' approval:—"Declare that, subject to the payment of such the annuities and pensions duly granted by the East India Company under the provisions of the deed of 1770 before the passing of the Act of 1858, and now subsisting, as shall be found to be payable out of the interest of the five lakhs of rupees, the appellant, as representative of Lord Clive, is entitled to receive from the respondent the sum of five lakhs of sicca rupees. Refer it to the judge in chambers to ascertain what annuities or pensions are now subsisting, and what proportion ought to be paid out of the interest of the five lakhs of rupees, and that all of the five lakhs not required to meet such annuities and pensions be paid to the appellant. The respondent to pay to the appellant the costs up to and including the hearing before the Master of the Rolls, and reserve further consideration of subsequent costs."

The other noble and learned lords having concurred,

The decree of the Court below was reversed, with costs, accordingly.

LORD CLIVE'S FUND.

One of the least known, perhaps, of Sir Walter Scott's novels is the "Surgeon's Daughter," though the story is told with characteristic power, and the scene laid in a country of peculiar interest. Many readers, however, will doubtless have a lively recollection of the tale, and to these we need offer very little explanation of the extraordinary case just brought by appeal to the House of Lords, and there decided. The novel turns on the devices employed for drawing "Europeans" into the service of the East India Company, and the trial turned entirely on a provision made by the great Lord Clive for recruiting this service in a more eligible way. Whatever may be thought of India in the present day, and whatever might have been the visions opened by its name a hundred years ago, it is certain that in the days of Clive the service of the Company was regarded with anything but predilection. The higher and more lucrative places were eagerly shared by a few privileged families, and here and there a more humble adventurer would "shake the pagoda-tree" to good purpose, and return home with fabulous wealth and exorbitant pretensions. But in the eyes of the public the service was a desperate one. India was then thought so far off, and was a country so little understood, and invested in popular imagination with such strange and fearful attributes, that few cared to go there except on some distinct and powerful attraction. Mere enlistment in the Company's service was considered a far more desperate step than enlistment in the Royal army, and recruiting was carried on upon a system which in Sir Walter Scott's pages appears little better than kidnapping. Even the officers felt themselves in a subordinate and but half-recognised profession, with only equivocal rank and disputed position to recompense them for life-long exile in a distant region and fatal climate. With these facts before his eyes, Lord Clive, who understood India and its affairs better than any other man, established in the year 1770 a certain fund for the support of officers and soldiers disabled in the Company's service, and the widows of such as should lose their lives in it. His motive in thus acting he put distinctly on record in the deed itself. He wished "to induce fit persons to enter the service, and encourage the bravery of the soldiery employed therein;" and these results he thought to promote by the prospect of pensions. The method of proceeding takes us back to days and names which now seem almost mythological. Every student of Indian history will recollect a certain Meer Jaffer, "Subahdar," Governor, or "Nabob," as he is styled in this deed, of the province of Bengal under the Great Mogul. This Meer Jaffer, after playing a prominent part in the scenes of those times, died at the beginning of the year 1765, having bequeathed to Lord Clive a very handsome legacy. The bequest represented the various contents of an Oriental Treasury. It consisted of three lakhs of "rupees," one lac in "gold mohurs," half a lac in "jewels," and another half lac in "money." These five lakhs, computed to be worth upwards of £80,000 in British currency, Lord Clive paid into the Company's Exchequer at Calcutta, and stipulated by indenture between the Company and himself that the Directors should appropriate the interest of the money to the purposes described above. But he did something more than this. Gazing into futurity, he foresaw the day when a Company might no longer exist to be served either by soldiers or sailors, and the deed therefore included a condition that if ever the Company should cease to employ a military force and ships for carrying on their commerce, then the five lakhs of rupees, subject to the satisfaction of existing interests, should be returned to him or his representatives. It seems almost incredible that this contingency should now actually have come to pass, and the fulfilment of the condition have been exacted, yet so it is. Sir John Walsh, the legal representative of Lord Clive, has sued her Majesty's Secretary of State for India as representing the old East India Company, and did on Thursday last obtain a judgment for the recovery of the five lakhs of sicca rupees taken from the hoards of Meer Jaffer ninety-eight years ago.

Two pleas were urged against the suit. The first was that the "service" of the Company, strictly speaking, expired in 1833, and that Sir John's claim, therefore, which should have been prosecuted at that time, was now void by the Statute of Limitations. This argument, however, was over-ruled, and it was held that the contingency specified by Lord Clive did not occur in 1833, but in 1858, at the transfer of India from the Company to the Crown. The second plea was at first sight plausible, but not to be sustained upon close inquiry. It was urged that though the East India Company had expired, the Crown occupied its place, and that the officers and soldiers of her Majesty's Indian forces were genuine representatives of that very class for whose benefit the provision was originally made. The trust, in short, had been transferred with the transfer of everything else, and its execution had simply devolved on a new set of authorities. But is it true that at the present time any European troops in India do really occupy the exceptional position of those for whom Lord Clive designed to provide? It is as clear as possible that his intention was to do something for the advantage and encouragement of a service to which the advantages of a Royal service did not attach. He desired to provide some compensation for the disabilities under which the Company's troops laboured, and to make up for the drawbacks which their peculiar position involved. He would no more have provided these funds for a Royal army than he would have shared them with a Royal regiment. When once the military forces employed in India formed part of the regular service of the kingdom, and stood on the same footing as other forces, the necessity for Lord Clive's subvention ceased, and the time which he anticipated must be held to have arrived. The "Company has ceased to employ either soldiers or seamen, and though soldiers and seamen are still employed on Indian service, the employment is no longer that which Lord Clive contemplated, nor the service that for which he provided this private recompense and encouragement. Her Majesty's Indian army requires no such compensation for professional disadvantages as was due to the "Europeans" in the pay of the Company a hundred years since.

The Lord Chancellor paid Lord Clive the compliment of supposing that the contingency which he had in view was exactly that which actually occurred—namely, the intervention of the Imperial Government, and its assumption of a dominion too great to be left to a company of merchants. Perhaps that was really the case; but, if so, Clive probably looked for an earlier return of his money. It is not unlikely that he thought the company could not long occupy the position to which he had raised it; whereas, in reality, it became infinitely more powerful than he had ever known it before the time came for its extinction. We may say, indeed, that the company's troops had long ceased to be in much need of Lord Clive's benefaction before the old "service" was exchanged for that of the Crown. The curious part of the case is that the condition of revocation, after being so long unfulfilled, should have come into operation at last at a time when the annals of a most eventful century separate us from the days described. The year 1770 is no very remote period, and yet, if the interval is measured by the events which it brought to pass, the date seems of extraordinary antiquity. In reality, the termination of this trust is no more than the termination of a ninety-nine years' lease, but it was a trust established by the founder of our Indian empire for purposes incidental to the weakness of its infancy, and it is now brought to an end by the establishment of that empire on the foundation of assured and undisputed dominion.—Times.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "TIMES."

SIR,—Your readers are already aware that by the decision of the House of Lords overruling that of the Master of the Rolls the representatives of the great Lord Clive are enabled to appropriate the sum of £50,000, which the latter, not being enabled to hold himself, made over to a fund in behalf of the widows and children of deceased Indian officers.

I am not aware whether this point—viz., the inability of Lord Clive to accept the sum in question for himself—was brought to the notice of the House of Lords, but the fact undoubtedly is so, and it is thus described by Mill:—

"Other acquisitions of Clive came subsequently to view. Notwithstanding the covenants executed by the servants of the Company not to receive any presents from the natives, that Governor had accepted five lacs of rupees during his late residence in Bengal from the nabob Nujem ul Dowla. It was represented, indeed, as a legacy left to him by Meer Jaffer, though all indications pointed out a present to which the name of legacy was artfully attached. At any rate, if any sums might be acquired under the name of legacies, the covenants against receiving presents were useless forms. Lord Clive represented that upon the first intimation of this gift his resolution was to refuse it; that he changed his mind upon reflecting of what importance it would prove as a fund for the benefit of invalided officers and soldiers in the Company's service; and that he afterwards prevailed upon Syeff ul Dowla, the successor of Nujem ul Dowla, to bestow three lacs more for this excellent end. The Company sanctioned the appropriation, and to this ambiguous transaction the institution at Poplar owes its foundation."

Query, do the Earl of Powis and his relatives imagine that by their successful suit they have promoted "the excellent end" of their great ancestor in behalf of

WIDOWS AND ORPHANS?

CLAIMS OF THE WIDOW OF THE LATE SIR JOHN INGLIS.

Short as memories are in this generation, the defence of Lucknow is never mentioned or remembered without a thrill of national pride. It was the greatest deed of a war which was remarkable for great deeds of heroism, and it was the cause of other great deeds the lustre of which has somewhat obscured that of the defence itself. Had Lucknow not held out as it did, there would have been no occasion for Havelock's victories, and the relief of it by Lord Clyde could never have become a part of history. That it did so hold out, and that constancy and discipline were maintained unbroken among its defenders, is admitted on all hands to have been mainly due to Sir John Inglis. Ample justice was done from the first by the Governor-general and the Home Government, no less than by the public, to his "enduring fortitude and persevering gallantry;" but we believe that the military profession alone can fully appreciate the skill and resource manifested in those three eventful months of the siege. For this splendid piece of service Colonel Inglis, as he then was, was raised to the rank of Major-General, and made a Knight Commander of the Bath. It is with no wish to provoke invidious comparisons, but solely in order to show how different is the pecuniary value of such promotion and of the recompense sometimes given to heroes, that we here quote the precedents of Williams and Havelock. Sir William Williams's defence of Kars was a feat in many respects similar to Sir John Inglis's defence of Lucknow, though it must be recorded, in fairness to the latter, that it was not equally successful; yet certainly no one felt that the hero of it was over-rewarded by a baronetcy with a pension of £1,000 a year attached to it. The command of the garrison at Woolwich and the command of the troops in Canada were additional marks of her Majesty's favour. To the widow and son of Sir Henry Havelock, who can hardly be said to have relieved Lucknow, though the name of that city is appended to the baronetcy, were awarded respectively similar pensions of £1,000 a year, amid the applause of the whole nation. We are far from saying that the inferior honours bestowed on Sir John Inglis were a shabby requital of his deserts, but we wish to point out that they were inferior, and not only inferior, but—what is of greater importance—far more precarious. Having been made a Major-General he was afterwards appointed to the command in Corfu. Had he lived he might here, perhaps, have saved a considerable sum in the course of time, but his health was shattered by his Indian service, and he unhappily died of an Ionian fever a few months ago, leaving a widow and five children, to whom a sixth was added but a week since. The worth of his commission having been lost by the very fact of his promotion, a share of prize money amounting to less than £200, a widow's pension of £140 a year, and an allotment of £25 each for all the children so long as they are under age, is all the acknowledgment that remains to the representatives of a man to whom our Indian Empire owes so much.

Now, the question is not whether this does not pain our feelings, but, simply, whether this is right. There are many brave men who have fallen in their country's service after exertions not less heroic, though more humble, than those of Sir John Inglis, and whose widows may have at least an equal claim on the score of compassion to the national bounty. When we select this as an exceptional case, demanding the attention of the Government, we do not speak of compassion, but of equity. Unless it can be shown that Sir John has never received what he had a right to expect, and what the English nation, from the Queen downwards, intended to give him, we should be ashamed to plead on behalf of Lady Inglis. We regard this as a remarkable example of the injustice which the system of rewarding public benefactors by offices tenable for life may occasionally work. Where it does work such injustice it is surely the part of the Government, and, if necessary, of the Legislature, to step in and redress the hardship which would otherwise be suffered. All that is required, or could properly be asked, is that the widow of Sir John Inglis should be placed in the same position which would have been unanimously and most cheerfully conceded to her if her husband's premature death could have been foreseen.—Times.

BOMBAY, BARODA, AND CENTRAL INDIA RAILWAY.

The half-yearly meeting of this company was held on Friday, May 22, at the offices, Liverpool-street; Lieutenant-Colonel French in the chair.

Mr. Baynes, the Secretary, having read the notice convening the meeting, the report, an abstract of which appeared in our last, was taken as read.

The Chairman, in moving its adoption, stated that the net amount received from the working of the line from February, 1860, to the 30th of June, 1862, was £28,648, being 42·70 per cent. of the gross receipts, and this sum had been paid over to the Government in India in reduction of the guaranteed interest. During the half-year ending the 31st of December last the net receipts amounted to £22,673, being within £6,000 of the total amount of net receipts previously obtained. That, he thought, was very satisfactory; for while the net profits amounted previously on the average to 42·70 per cent., the net profits for the past half-year amounted to 57·37 per cent. of the gross receipts. The gross receipts for the half-year ending the 31st of December amounted to £39,575, the expenses to £10,901, and the net receipts to £28,674. The gross traffic receipts were at the rate of 12s. 9½d. per train mile, the expenses at the rate of 5s. 5½d. per train mile, and the net profits on the working at the rate of 7s. 4d. per train mile. The whole of the net receipts, from the opening of the line to the end of last year, amounted to £31,332, and it had been paid over to the Secretary of State for India, which he thought was exceedingly satisfactory.

Mr. Hartridge, deputy chairman, seconded the motion for the adoption of the report, which was put and carried unanimously.

The Chairman said he had been away during the past twelve months in India. He trusted that before the next half-yearly meeting they would have a full report from their consulting engineer as to the progress of the works and other matters relating to the undertaking. The country on each side of the railway from Bulsar to Ahmedabad was one of the most productive in India. On the whole length of the 185 miles they would not find any portion of it unfit for cultivation. There were not five miles of the whole distance that had not been under the plough. As far as the eye could reach, right and left, it was one mass of cultivation. Oude had been called the garden of India, but from Bulsar to Baroda was quite equal, if not superior, to Oude. No country could be richer or more productive. There were large towns and villages on the line. The 185 miles from Ahmedabad towards Bombay were certainly as rich, if not richer, than any other part of India. The towns had above 100,000 inhabitants, and there were villages of 5,000, 10,000, and 25,000 inhabitants. A cotton mill had been opened at Surat, and another was about being established at Ahmedabad. Roads were wanted from the villages to the railway, and they expected a great deal of through traffic when the line from Bassein to Bombay was completed. When they got into Bombay they would have their terminus in a city of eight hundred thousand inhabitants. He had received a letter from Colonel Kennedy, their consulting engineer, who had been over the line, and was well pleased with the manner in which the bridges and other works had been executed, and was of opinion that they could not have a better staff of engineers to carry on the works. Although an engine would probably run from Bombay to Ahmedabad in June next, they could not open the whole line for traffic before next year, because the earthworks would require to be consolidated by having two monsoons to pass over them. The bridges were almost completed, but the earthworks had been delayed by the Government stopping the works when there was a financial panic several months past, and thousands of men were sent away in consequence. In reply to a question, he stated that £13,000 a mile would complete the line.

Mr. Hartridge and Mr. Wilde, the retiring directors, were re-elected, and also Mr. Goodchap, the retiring auditor.

CALCUTTA AND SOUTH-EASTERN RAILWAY.

The half-yearly meeting of this company was held on Tuesday last, at the offices, Gresham-house, Old Broad-street; Mr. J. Borradaile in the chair.

The report stated that the bridge over the Palle had been finished, and that the first carriages passed over the line on the 22nd of January last. On the 10th of February the first vessel since the opening of the line arrived to load at the port. Her cargo, of about 350 tons, was conveyed over the rail from Calcutta to the Mutlah, and her loading was satisfactorily completed. Several other vessels from European and Indian ports were known to be on their way to the Mutlah, and the number might be expected to increase rapidly as the facilities of this new channel of communication with Calcutta became known and appreciated. The partial settlement of the embankment across the old bed of the river had prevented the official opening of the line, but the means of traffic throughout were practically completed. The screw pile jetty had been despatched direct to the Moolah, and had probably reached its destination by this time. It would enable vessels to transfer their cargoes direct into the railway waggons, for delivery in a few hours at Calcutta. The cost of the jetty was estimated at £12,000, but there was every prospect that it would prove a profitable outlay. Owing to the want of roads to connect the stations with the populous districts adjoining the line, the inhabitants were unable to obtain access to them during the last rains, and the receipts per train mile during that period consequently fell off more than 30 per cent. There was every reason, however, to expect that the feeders so urgently required would be completed by Government before the ensuing monsoon.

The Chairman, in moving the adoption of the report, congratulated the shareholders that after eighteen months' delay they had got the Pinallee bridge completed. The subsidence in the embankment over the river mentioned in the report had ceased, and he believed that the line had been officially opened on the 15th inst. There was every prospect of a large traffic during the next cold season, and that the revenue would at last meet the expenditure. They had received no advice as to the materials for the jetty having arrived, but its cost had been added to capital. He could not say much about the traffic, owing to the want of roads to the railway. There was an extension line proposed, but it appeared the Government could not give a guarantee on the outlay, although they were disposed to give a subsidy. The directors had suggested that it should form one enterprise, and have a guarantee. The proposed line would open up a large amount of traffic, and if carried out as suggested it would have a separate capital. More capital would be required to finish the main line, but he could not then state the exact amount.

Mr. Marshman seconded the motion for the adoption of the report.

In reply to a question by Mr. Adams, it was stated that the estimated amount of additional capital was £80,000, but it was thought better to say £100,000, which would raise the capital to £500,000.

The report was adopted, and Mr. H. H. Thomas and Mr. J. Borrdaille, the retiring directors, were re-elected, and also the retiring auditors.

The proceedings concluded with a vote of thanks to the chairman and directors.

EAST INDIA IRRIGATION AND CANAL COMPANY.

The directors of this Company state in their report that the contract between the Government of India and the Company has been duly ratified by both parties, and an earnest desire has been exhibited by the Government of Bengal to carry out its provisions in a liberal and enlightened spirit. The surveying and levelling operations over the greater portion of the extensive territories embraced by the contract have been prosecuted by the Company's engineers with an energy and effect deserving the highest praise. An elaborate system of irrigation, navigation, and drainage works, admirably suited to the exigencies of the country and the purposes of the company, has been ably planned in all its main features by the chief engineer, Colonel F. H. Rundell. An important line of canal (the Oolaberiah), about seven and a-half miles in length, communicating with Calcutta, and connecting the Hooghly and Damoodah rivers, lately constructed by the Government of Bengal, and suited to form the termination of the company's tidal line from Balasore to Calcutta, and also of their high level canal from Cuttack to Calcutta, has been transferred to the company upon equitable terms, and was to be opened for public traffic during the times of high tide on and after the 1st inst., the necessary transfer of powers as to levy tolls having been delegated by Government to the company. The construction of the locks necessary to render this Oolaberiah Canal navigable at all times has been commenced, and they will probably be completed by the conclusion of the current year. An existing line of water communication of about nine and a-half miles in length, known as the Banka Nulla, connecting the rivers Roopnarain and Huldes with Calcutta, and intended when improved to form a further portion of the company's tidal canal to Balasore, has also been transferred to the company, and is doubtless at this time open for traffic, the company's agents receiving the tolls. There is, therefore, now about seventeen miles of water communication opened for traffic in the hands of the company. Large quantities of materials and stores are being collected at Cuttack, near the site of the proposed "anicut," also along the intended canal from Midnapore to Calcutta, and on the line of the tidal canal from Balasore, and every preparation has been made to insure vigorous and continuous constructive operations after the expiration of the present rainy season. The village of Jobra, near Cuttack, and other contiguous land necessary for the company's head works and workshops, as well as for the main "anicut" across the Mahanuddy, the Kajoree, the Beropa, &c., has been made over to the company, and those works have been planned and marked out ready for construction. Two vessels laden with tools and machinery were despatched from England early last month. Effective assistance has been throughout promptly afforded to the chief and executive engineers by the local Government and their officers. The system of works now under consideration consists of a high level canal for irrigation and navigation from the city of Cuttack to the port of Calcutta, passing close to the principal towns on its route. A series of works for supplying the Deltas of the Mahanuddy, the Brahmany, the Byturnee, and the Soobanreeka, and the adjoining districts of Hidjellee, Midnapore, Burdwan, &c., with irrigation and means of water transport; a main navigable tidal canal from Balasore, in the Bay of Bengal, to the river Hooghly, near Calcutta, accommodating the chief places on its line; and the improvement and opening up of the Mahanuddy River by means principally of a canal, in length about one hundred and thirty-five miles, for navigation and irrigation, commencing at Puddunpore and terminating at Dholapore. A considerable amount of work has been executed. To render these works fully effective and capable of supplying irrigation and navigation throughout the year it will be necessary to store large bodies of water in the upper portions of the several rivers which intersect the country embraced, and search is now being made for the most favourable sites. The directors assure their proprietors that, so far as investigation has been carried, it has tended to confirm the very favourable anticipations entertained at the outset, and to show that the undertaking of the company will prove successful and amply remunerative. The audited accounts in India up to the 31st of October last, and in England up to the 31st of December last, show that £114,340 had been then received, and £17,927 expended, leaving a balance of £96,413.

MADRAS IRRIGATION AND CANAL COMPANY.

The report of the directors states that the right to construct and develop the entire scheme of works originally selected for the company has been secured upon advantageous terms. They are to raise such further capital as may be found desirable, under conditions of which the following is the substance, viz. :—

1. The guarantee of 5 per cent. of the Secretary of State for India, already given, upon a sum of £1,000,000, is to continue in force, and to apply specially and solely to the now existing capital of £1,000,000 as held by the present shareholders.
2. Out of the net returns which may be derived from the irrigation supplied from all works constructed by the company an annual amount equal to 5 per cent. upon the sum of £1,000,000 is to be received in the first instance by the company, and is to represent the current year's interest guaranteed by the Secretary of State, which sum will be paid to the holders of the existing guaranteed shares. 3. Out of the balance which may remain of such net profits from irrigation an amount equal to 5 per cent. upon all additional capital which shall have been raised beyond the present guaranteed £1,000,000 is to be retained by the company, and will be paid to the holders of unguaranteed shares. 4. The residue of such net profits from irrigation, as far as it will extend for that purpose (after the payments, before described, of 5 per cent. upon the entire capital of the company), is to be applied in liquidation of all such interest upon the present guaranteed £1,000,000 capital as the Secretary of State may have previously advanced. 5. When such last mentioned arrears of interest shall have been liquidated, the company are to receive, out of the balance of such profits from irrigation remaining after payment of 5 per cent. upon the whole capital, a sum sufficient to represent a further 7 per cent. upon such capital, and making, with the previous 5 per cent., 12 per cent. thereon. 6. The ultimate residue of the net profits from irrigation, after the company shall have received 12 per cent. therefrom, is to be divided equally between the Government and the company; and, 7. The whole of the net returns derived from tolls and other profits of navigation are to belong exclusively to the company; subject, however, to a lien thereon to meet any deficiency in the profits from irrigation to cover the current interest upon the guaranteed £1,000,000, should any such arise. A contract embodying this arrangement is now in course of settlement by the legal advisers of the Government and the company, and will, it is hoped, be completed and executed within a short period. The shares representing the fresh capital will be offered to the existing shareholders pro rata. The price to be charged for water supplied for irrigation from the company's works, has been for the present fixed at four rupees (8s.) per acre for the first crop. The anicut at Soonkasala, and the first 17½ miles of the main canal, are by this time finished; the aqueduct over the Hindry has been so far executed as to allow the passage of a body of water sufficient to irrigate a considerable extent of land; the five miles of canal which immediately follow upon the aqueduct have been completed, and along those five miles there exists some land available for irrigation; in the next 21 miles of the main canal some heavy rock cutting and embanking have yet to be executed. The 12 following miles, from the 43rd to the 54th mile, of the main canal is now complete, or nearly so; thence to the commencement of the Mittacondal cutting in the 72nd mile the work has, with the exception of some intervals of rocky excavation and empty embankment, been executed, which, with the Mittacondal cutting itself, will be finished by the end of the year. From the 72nd to the 103rd mile the excavation is in hand; from the 103rd to the 148th mile the plans and estimates have been for some time past awaiting Governmental approval; the plans and estimates of the main line from the 148th to the 240th mile at Somaishwarum, in Nellore, are in course of completion; the execution of the Somaishwarum anicut has commenced, and, in all probability, by this time the whole of the remaining works in Nellore are under construction. The entire line from Soonkasala to the sea at Kistnapatam in Nellore has been finally determined by the chief engineer, and the greater portion now is actually under construction, while the remainder will be so shortly. The selection of sites for the storage of water to maintain irrigation and navigation throughout the year is still under investigation. Up to the 31st of December last the total receipts amounted to £661,141, and the expenditure to £250,442; leaving a balance of £410,699.

MISCELLANEOUS.

ALTERATION OF POSTAGE OF LETTERS TO INDIA, CHINA, AUSTRALIA, MAURITIUS, &c., via MADRASELLES.—On the 1st of June next, and thenceforward, the whole of the postage upon the letters forwarded, via Marseilles, to the East Indies, China, Australia, or any place to the eastward of Suez, will be charged by the British scale of weight, instead of, as at present, by the British scale for the British inland and sea postage, and by the French scale, advancing by steps of a quarter of an ounce, for the French transit rate. The following will be the amount chargeable upon such letters from the date specified:—Addressed to India, Ceylon, Mauritius, Australia, Tasmania, or New Zealand, not exceeding half an ounce in weight, 10d.; above half an ounce and not exceeding 1oz., 1s. 8d.; above 1oz. and not exceeding 2oz., 3s. 4d.; above 2oz. and not exceeding 3oz., 5s.; every ounce after the first, 1s. 8d. Addressed to Penang, Singapore, Hong Kong, China, Java, Labuan, Japan, Borneo, the Moluccas, or the Philippine Islands, not exceeding half an ounce in weight, 1s. 4d.; above half an ounce and not exceeding 1oz., 2s. 8d.; above 1oz. and not exceeding 2oz., 5s. 4d.; above 2oz. and not exceeding 3oz., 8s.; every ounce after the first, 2s. 8d.—By command of the Postmaster-General, ROWLAND HILL, Secretary. General Post-office, May 23, 1863.

EASTERN BENGAL RAILWAY.—The directors of this company in their report congratulate the shareholders on the satisfactory completion of the whole line from Calcutta to Kooshtee; and on the success, as a commercial undertaking, which has since attended the working of both the goods and passenger traffic. The works were commenced on the 14th of April, 1859, and the last portion of the line, three miles in length, was delivered to the company in the commencement of 1860. On the 29th of September, 1862, 45 miles of the line, from Calcutta to Rhanaghat, were opened for passenger traffic only. On the 15th of November following the whole line of 110 miles, from Calcutta to Kooshtee, on the Ganges, was opened throughout for general traffic. The Government of Bengal have expressed their approval of the manner in which the officers of the engineering staff of the company and the agent of the contractors have performed their several duties. The Government of India, in a public despatch, referring to Mr. Purdon, the chief engineer of the company, acknowledges "the services he has rendered to the country by the skill with which he has laid out and directed the works of the Eastern Bengal Railway;" while, at the same time, Messrs. Leslie, Prestage, and Granville, engineers under him, are assured, "that the Government of India is fully sensible of their meritorious services;" and Mr. Henfrey, the agent of the contractors, Messrs. Brassey, Paxton, and Wythes, is informed "that his successful prosecution of an undertaking of such magnitude as this railway, under circumstances so novel to English contractors, entitles him to the hearty approval and congratulations of the Government." The gross traffic receipts from the 10th November last, when the whole line was opened, to the end of the year (five weeks) amounted for passengers to Rs. 46,682, and for merchandise to 10,204 rupees; together, Rs. 56,886. The receipts from the end of the year to the 11th of April last (fifteen weeks) amounted for passengers to Rs. 136,401, and for merchandise to Rs. 50,649; together, Rs. 187,050. The maintenance of the way and works up to the month of November next will be borne by the contractors. The directors state that they have every reason to expect a very large traffic at Kooshtee, through the resort of steamers to that port instead of Calcutta. The capital account shows a total expenditure of £1,285,727, leaving a balance of £114,272.

DRAFTS ON INDIA.—The biddings for 30,00,000 rupees (£300,000) in bills on India took place on Wednesday, May 20, at the Bank of England. The proportions allotted were, to Calcutta 16,70,000 rupees, to Bombay 12,00,000 rupees, and to Madras 1,30,000 rupees. The declared minimum price was as before, 1s. 11d. per rupee on Calcutta, and 1s. 11d. on Bombay and Madras. The applications within the limits were for upwards of 100 lacs. Tenders on Calcutta at 1s. 11d. will receive about 28 per cent.; on Bombay 1s. 11d., about 31 per cent.; and all above these prices in full. Those on Madras will receive in full.

DEATH OF THE HISTORIAN OF LUCKNOW.—On the 8th instant, suddenly, at Leamington, Martin Gubbins, Esq., E.I.C.S., aged fifty years, the historian of Lucknow. Mr. Gubbins had never recovered from the shock both to mind and body produced by the horrors which he experienced during the siege of that city.

THE ORIENTAL TEA COMPANY.—The directors of the Oriental Tea Company (Limited) have notified that, difficulties having arisen as to the completion of the purchase of the estates referred to in the prospectus of the company, they have resolved to return the deposits in full. At the same time, it is intimated that they "hope still to make arrangements for the purchase of the estates, which they are informed are more extensive, by two hundred and fifty acres of tea plant, than the quantity originally stated in the prospectus, and on which the purchase-money was calculated."

FALSELY PACKED COTTON.—We alluded some time since to the stringent measures that were being adopted by the Bombay Government with a view to check the evil of packing rubbish in the bales of Surat Cotton, so seriously detrimental to the interest of importers, as well as spinners; for the former, who have no means of knowing whether this is the case or not till the bales are opened by the latter, have immediately to grant redress, with the remote contingency of being able to recover their loss on the other side. Nor is this all, for in the period that might elapse between the sale of the cotton and the discovery of the fraud, there may be room for a serious decline in value, and the seller might thus be placed at a further disadvantage. With the view to protecting sellers on this point, a table, it appears, is affixed to the bales of Surat cotton that no allowance will be made after they pass the scales. To this spinners take objection, on the ground that it acts injuriously upon their interests, and in the course of the present week a meeting of that body was held in Manchester, with a view to rescinding this stipulation. Great complaints were made at the meeting of the stones almost invariably found in some descriptions of Bombay cotton, but this is well known to arise from the nature of the soil on which such cotton is grown, and not to a system of false packing, and so thoroughly is this understood in Manchester that the price of such cotton suffers a proportionate depreciation at the time of sale. Whatever rule the Liverpool brokers may make for the protection of their principals will, as a matter of course, only be made upon principles of fairness and equity; for their high position, obtained, as it is, by acting upon these principles, forbids the idea of their being guided by selfish or unworthy motives. One fact will show the high honour with which their business is conducted, and that is, that in all their transactions no interchange of written contracts takes place between them, and yet in no single instance has it appeared that the contracts have not been faithfully carried out. To their principals, of course, whether buyer or seller, each broker sends a contract note; but between the brokers themselves no such document passes, nor has a necessity for it ever yet been discovered. If this is not the essence of honour, it may be inquired, where are we to look for it? The spinners have only, through an appointed organ, to address the Committee of the Cotton Brokers' Association, in regard to any rule that the latter may adopt to which the trade may take exception, to have their objections fully and fairly discussed, with the certainty that justice will be done to all parties. As it is at present, we question if any case of false packing, fairly shown, would fail to meet with redress. That there is a degree of cunning and cupidity in the Asiatic native, in the mixing or adulterating of cotton, cannot excite the least surprise, for in other articles besides cotton, and other countries besides India, adulteration is not only in full activity, but in some instances is the chief source of profit to the manufacturer. It appears that this season there has been an unusually large export of cotton from Burmah, chiefly to Calcutta for Bombay, where it is used with the Bengal fibre to adulterate good Darwhar and Surats.

MR. EPHRAIM MOSELY'S IMPROVEMENT in the CONSTRUCTION of ARTIFICIAL TEETH, GUMS, and PALATES, on an INDIA-RUBBER BASE, are secured by Letters Patent, dated December, 1852, whereby the continual outlay of new teeth is avoided, alterations from the absorption of the gums, or any other cause, being easily remedied, and the first outlay no greater than for ordinary kinds. The extraordinary results of this application may be briefly noted as under:—It consists of one continuous piece of Prepared India-rubber. The Artificial Teeth present an uniformly even surface to the action of the tongue, preventing lodgment of food and all secretions, so much complained of in the present system. No gold or any other metal being required, all springs, wires, and fastenings are wholly unnecessary; sharp edges are avoided, a greatly increased freedom of suction is supplied, a natural elasticity hitherto wholly unattainable, and a fit perfected with the most unerring accuracy, are secured; while, from the softness and flexibility of the agents employed, the greatest support is given to the adjoining teeth when loose or rendered tender by the absorption of the gums. The acids of the mouth exert no agency on the prepared india-rubber; and, as it is a non-conductor, fluids of any temperature may be retained in the mouth, all unpleasantness of smell and taste being at the same time provided against by the peculiar nature of its preparation.

FIRE DEPARTMENT.

The Company now stands, in point of revenue, seventh on the list of fire offices in the United Kingdom.

Insurances granted against fire at home, in the colonies, and most foreign countries.

FOREIGN RISKS.—The Directors, having devoted great attention to this branch of insurance, are enabled to offer unusual advantages as regards rates of premium and conditions, and a discount is allowed to merchants and others effecting their own and correspondents' insurances.

LIFE DEPARTMENT.

(REDUCED RATES FOR THE EAST INDIES AND CHINA.)

The Directors have recently adopted a new system of Rates for the East Indies and China, by which the insured, instead of being subjected to a heavy extra premium during the years of his residence within the Tropics, has the option of throwing the same over the whole currency of his insurance, by paying an unchanging rate, which it will be seen is very little higher than that charged for residence in Europe.

The following are specimens of the new Rates for civilians:—

EAST INDIES AND CHINA.

FIRE! THIEVES!! FIRE!!! C. H. GRIFFITHS having purchased nearly all the best quality of Fire-proof Safes from the International Exhibition of 1862, including those made by Messrs. Perry, Chatwood, Rhodes, and other eminent makers, is enabled to offer them at half the original cost. The patented improvements of the latter maker render it an impossibility for fire to take any effect under any circumstances of time and place. In consequence of the increasing demand for these essential and valuable repositories, which no house of business, or, indeed, private house (where plate, books, and documents are kept) should be without, in these hazardous and dangerous times, C. H. G. has taken additional premises, 3, Pentonville-road, opposite the Angel, Islington, where he also intends to keep a variety of Second-hand Safes by those eminent large makers, Milner, Price, Morlan, &c., at half the price of new. Sketches, with prices, free by post. 23, Cannon-street West, St. Paul's, London; and opposite the Angel, Islington.

CROSS & BLACKWELL, Purveyors to the Queen, SOHO-SQUARE, LONDON.

MR. HOWARD, Surgeon-Dentist, 52, Fleet-street, has introduced an entirely new description of ARTIFICIAL TEETH, fixed without springs, wires, or ligatures. They so perfectly resemble the natural teeth as not to be distinguished from the originals by the closest observer. They will never change colour or decay, and will be found superior to any teeth ever before used. This method does not require the extraction of roots, or any painful operation, will support and preserve teeth that are loose, and is guaranteed to restore articulation and mastication. Decayed teeth stopped, and rendered sound and useful in mastication. 52, Fleet-street. At home from Ten till Five.

TENDER and DECAYED TEETH STOPPED with ANODYNE CEMENT, which instantly allays the most violent pain, and fills up cavities, however large, and answers where every other kind of stopping has failed. Prepared only by Mr. ALFRED JONES, Surgeon-Dentist to their late R.H. the Princess Augusta and Duchess of Gloucester, the late Louis Philippe, and the ex-Royal Family of France, 64, Grosvenor-street, Grosvenor-square. At home from 11 till 4. No connection with any person practising in the same profession.

TEETH and PAINLESS DENTISTRY.—Messrs. LEWIN MOSELEY and SONS, 30, Berners-street, Oxford-street, W., direct attention to their GUM-COLOURED ENAMELLED BASE FOR ARTIFICIAL TEETH. GUM, &c., specially commended at the International Exhibition—Class XVII., No. 3,556. Single Teeth, from 5s.; Sets, from Five Guineas.—For the successful result and efficacy of their system, vide "Lancet."

KEATING'S PERMANENT INSECT DESTROYING POWDER.

For which a Prize Medal was awarded to the Producer at the International Exhibition, 1862.

THIS POWDER is quite harmless to animal life, but is unvalued in destroying Fleas, Bugs, Flies, Cockroaches, Beetles, Gnats, Mosquitoes, Moths in furs, and every other species of insect.

SPORTSMEN will find this an invaluable remedy for destroying Fleas in their Dogs, as also Ladies for their Pet Dogs. It is perfectly harmless in its nature, and may be applied without any apprehension, as it has no qualities deleterious to animal life.

Sold in packets 1s., 2s. 6d., and 4s. 6d. each, or post free for 14 or 36 postage stamps, by THOMAS KEATING, Chemist, 79, St. Paul's Churchyard, London, E.C.

Take notice each genuine packet bears the above name and address. See "The Field," October 7th and 9th, pp. 263, 283, and 294.

SARSAPARILLA.

WILKINSON'S (late BRIDGE'S) ESSENCE OF FLUID EXTRACT OF RED JAMAICA SARSAPARILLA is appreciated for its Purity, and marked superiority, daily prescribed by the Faculty for Impurities of the Blood, Affections of the Liver, Constitutional Debility, Attenuation of Body, as an Alterative Medicine at the Changes of the Seasons, and for freeing the system from the effects of Mercury.

In India and the Colonies it is extensively used to prevent taking complaints incidental to Tropical Climates, and as a renovator of the system after Sickness invaluable.

"A superior preparation, that may always be relied on."—Sir Astley Cooper.

"We are in every respect satisfied with it."—Lancet.

"We recommend your Sarsaparilla as the best."—Medical Review.

"Literally, in consequence of much debility, &c., subsequent to Cholera, I have freely used 'Bridge's Sarsaparilla' myself, with complete benefit and success."—J. Poett, F.R.C.S.

Sold in pints, half-pints, and quarter pints. One pint is equal to eight pints of the ordinary preparations.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.—The public are cautioned against cheap preparations of Sarsaparilla, which, instead of being what they profess, are nothing but a decoction of common herbs, sweetened with molasses, and flavoured with American Winter Green. The genuine has "Thos. Wilkinson (late Bridge and Co.), 270, Regent-street, London," engraved on each bottle.

AGREEABLE SEIDLITZ POWDER in one bottle, protected by a case with measure and spoon included. This preparation is highly recommended, not only as a Mild Aperient, but to allay Fever, Thirst, &c.

AROMATIC TINCTURE OF QUINIDINE for the prevention of Fever, Intermittent or Remittent Ague, and other effects of Malaria. No person exposed to the influence of or predisposing cause of Fevers should be without it, for if taken in small doses daily the system will become so thoroughly impregnated with its principles as to be rendered proof against all attacks of Contagion or Malaria. Sold in pints, half-pints, and quarter-pints.

The above articles prepared only by Thos. Wilkinson (late Wilkinson, Bridge, & Co.), 270, Regent-street, London, W.

THE WATER CURE IN CHRONIC DISEASE.

BEN RHYDDING is one of the most complete and most comfortable Establishments in Europe for the reception of PATIENTS and VISITORS. PRICHARD'S AROMATIC STEEL PILLS stand unequalled for restoring vigour to weak and relaxed constitutions, and have been proved to be the best medicine ever offered to the public. To those who are suffering from languor and exhaustion occasioned by a residence in hot climates, these Pills will be found particularly beneficial. They give energy to the muscles and nerves, strength to the stomach, and completely renovate the system, so that the patient is astonished at the effects produced.

Prepared by W. PRICHARD, Apothecary, 65, Charing-cross, London. In boxes 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., 4s. 6d., and 11s. May be had of all Medicine Vendors.

KEEP AWAY THE DOCTOR is an old saying. People follow the advice, and ensure a good state of health by the simple and cheap process of taking PARR'S LIFE PILLS, which may be used with confidence in all cases of sick headache, indigestion, bilious, liver, and stomach complaints, habitual costiveness, nervous affections, &c. In most cases the sensation of illness vanishes after two or three Pills have been taken. May be obtained of any medicine vendor, in boxes, 1s. 1½d., 2s. 9d., and in family packets 11s. each.

RUPTURES.—BY ROYAL LETTERS PATENT.

WHITE'S MOC-MAIN LEVER TRUSS

is allowed by upwards of two hundred medical gentlemen to be the most effective invention in the curative treatment of HERNIA. The use of a steel spring, so hurtful in its effects, is here avoided, a soft bandage being worn round the body, while the requisite resisting power is supplied by the MOC-MAIN PAD and PATENT LEVER, fitting with so much ease and closeness that it cannot be detected, and may be worn during sleep. A descriptive circular may be had, and the Truss (which cannot fail to fit), forwarded by post, on the circumference of the body two inches below the hips being sent to the manufacturer.

MR. JOHN WHITE, 228, Piccadilly, London. Price of a Single Truss—16s., 21s., 26s. 6d., and 31s. 6d. Postage 1s.

" Double Truss—31s. 6d., 42s., and 52s. 6d. Postage 1s. 6d.

" An Umbilical Truss—42s., and 52s. 6d. Postage 1s. 10d.

Post-office Orders to be made payable to JOHN WHITE, Post-office, Piccadilly.

NEW PATENT.

ELASTIC STOCKINGS, KNEE CAPS, &c., &c.—VARICOSE VEINS, and all cases of WEAKNESS and SWELLING of the LEGS, SPRAINS, &c.—They are porous, light in texture, and inexpensive, and are drawn on like an ordinary stocking. Price 4s. 6d., 7s. 6d., 10s., and 16s. each. Postage 6d.

JOHN WHITE, Manufacturer, 228, Piccadilly, London.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—When formidable

fevers and other contagious complaints are prevalent Holloway's purifying Pills are the best correctives of the system, and the surest cleansers of the blood. No one should permit any disordered action to continue when it can be so easily rectified by these Pills; even one day's delay may bring bitter cause to rue that slight neglect. There can arise no danger from taking Holloway's medicine, and no difficulty can occur in administering it to the young and delicate; clear and definite instructions envelope each box. To feel that the body is out of order is sufficient warranty for taking these Pills, which will prevent or arrest diseases even when doubtful, complicated, or obscure.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

WE have thought it right to make room for the whole of Sir Charles Trevelyan's long speech upon the Indian Budget, for it is one of overwhelming interest. Nothing else was thought or talked of in Calcutta for some days after its delivery. Though the natives have been greatly disappointed in their too confident expectation that the hateful Income-tax would be wholly and at once abolished, the general feeling is one of triumph and exultation. It is, indeed, a matter of well-founded pride and pleasure that our Indian Empire should have so rapidly recovered from the deplorable and apparently helpless and hopeless condition to which it was reduced by the enormous loss and expenditure of the last great mutiny. The enemies of England exulted in our terrible embarrassments, and fancied that though our valour had subdued the rebellion, we had certainly not the skill or the means to shake off any considerable portion of the dreadful load of public debt. But without the imposition of any very burthensome additional taxes, without a single invasion or annexation, by the honest and judicious application of those financial principles which have made England what she is, the labours of three English financiers in succession, within a marvellously brief period, have raised India to a state of monetary prosperity, superior to every condition in her past history, and far surpassing the expectations of the most sanguine of her well-wishers. We need not here enter upon details of Sir Charles Trevelyan's Budget, as every important information on the subject is included in his own most able explanation. It is certain that his success will thoroughly establish his reputation as a Public Officer, and give him a high place in British Indian history. We are glad to see that he has paid generous and graceful compliments to his predecessors. Though Sir Charles Trevelyan owed his appointment to Sir Charles Wood, he honestly testifies that Mr. Laing after all was right in the controversy with the Secretary for India. Mr. Laing calculated that the last year would close with a surplus of £179,814, and the amount was actually larger than his successor's estimates for this year, or £936,925.

At a meeting of the Legislative Council of Bengal, on the 25th April, the two new members, Messrs. Brown and Jennings, were called to the table, and took the customary oaths. The main business of the day happened to be the consideration of the several clauses of the Calcutta Municipal Bill. Mr. Brown was silent, but Mr. Jennings, whose appointment has caused so much criticism on the score of his position, inasmuch as he is rather a trader's agent or subordinate than a trader on his own account, delivered his maiden speech. One question of importance before the Council was, whether the chairman of the Corporation should be elected by the votes of the Corporation, or be appointed by Government, who would in all probability confer the post on the chief commissioner of police. Mr. Jennings seemed to lean on the occasion towards the "Powers that be," and gave it as his opinion that the appointment could not be in better hands than those of the Government; and he could not, he said, refrain from expressing his satisfaction at the evident desire evinced by the Government to meet the interests of the town. Mr. Jennings will not, perhaps, much please his fellow-citizens by this complimentary tone of address to the authorities, or his readiness to leave so important a post as that of the head of the municipal corporation to the disposal of Government. He ought to have remembered that civil rights are not mere matters of courtesy and compliment, and that laws intended to be permanent should not be moulded to suit immediate and personal interests, or with any feeling of deference, or respect, or goodwill to the Cabinet of the time, for the good governors of to-day may be succeeded by very bad ones to-morrow. Mr. Peterson looked a little further a-head, and, proceeding on general principles, objected to subjecting the Municipal Corporation to a Government authority.

Lieut. L. D. A. Jackson, who was tried at Mooltan for causing the death of his servant by a cruel beating, has been convicted of aggravated manslaughter, and sentenced to penal servitude for life. It is a terribly severe sentence, considering that it was clearly not the officer's intention to kill the man, but it was deemed necessary to make an example of him; for the readiness with which too many Englishmen, when enraged, inflict personal chastisement upon "a nigger," and the feebleness, and delicacy, and timidity of Asiatics, compared with our sterner and stouter race, are strong reasons why those who cannot protect themselves should be protected by the law. It is expected that Lieut. Jackson will be sent to Maulmein, or Singapore.

H.M.'s 21st Hussars at Muttra is believed to be in what is called "a very unsatisfactory condition," that is to say, full of discord. Four officers are under arrest, and Major-general Wheeler, C.B., is investigating the matter. It is said that the attention of Lord Mark Ker was drawn to the state of the regiment as it passed through Delhi on its way to Muttra.

The telegraph line between Karachi and Gwader has just been opened for communication. This undertaking, which was completed in about eleven months, has telegraphic communication between Bombay and Calcutta, and Bombay was connected in only one month more. The line between Kurrachee and Gwader is about three hundred miles in length.

The directors of the Bank of Bombay have raised the rates of discount 2 per cent. all round.

The Governor of Bombay is at Mahableshtar.

Sir Robert Montgomery has gone to Jummo to visit Runbeer Sing on a political mission.

The Government of India has granted a jagheer to the captor of Mogul Beg, with remission for one generation of the Government claims upon the estate.

Mr. Cawasjee Jehangier, surnamed "Ready money," an eminent and philanthropic Parsee merchant of Bombay, has within the last few months contributed more than £30,000 to two hospitals and the Elphinstone College and University buildings, all public works of catholic usefulness for the benefit of people of all countries, religions, and creeds; and his last gift is £750 to the trustees of St. Thomas's Cathedral, to erect a fountain opposite the western entrance to the church. The gift is bestowed in the following words:—"All my dearest associations, from my schoolboy days till now, are connected with this neighbourhood (the Cathedral); and I feel that I should be wanting in gratitude to Heaven, which has blessed me here with long life and prosperity, if I did not use every opportunity to do good to my fellow-citizens, by improving that part of my native town which I have always loved as my birthplace and my home."

His Excellency Sir Hugh Rose seems determined not to let the unfortunate Priestly affair fall into oblivion, and to leave an impression on the public mind of India that he is a little too vindictive and unforgiving. He has ejected Major Gordon from the Quarter-master General's Department on the ground that he voted for the expulsion of Colonel Priestly from the Bengal United Service Club. Sir Hugh must have been vexed to find that this "ejection" was not regarded as a degradation, for the Lieutenant Governor of the North-West Provinces has since appointed Major Gordon to his own personal staff.

Lieutenant Layton has been shot by a native supposed to be mad. The man is in custody.

The Friend of India still maintains his opinion that the Nana is alive in the Nepal Hills, and urges the Government to employ Captain Nuttal, who captured Mahadeo Rao, to hunt down the Nana. It is said that the Nana's general, known to the natives as Lall-poorie, is supposed to be somewhere near Cawnpore. The lakh of rupees placed on the Nana's head, one might suppose would long have tempted some associate of his to betray him, if he were still a living man.

There is such a plethora of capital all over India just now, that speculators, taking advantage of this state of things, are starting all sorts of joint-stock companies, hotels, horse-marts, &c., &c., &c.

FINANCIAL STATEMENT

BY THE

HON. SIR C. E. TREVELYAN, K.C.B.

30th April, 1863.

Mr. Laing estimated that there would be a surplus in the year 1861-62 of £239,896. The Secretary of State was of opinion that two sums had been improperly omitted from the charge side of the account, by the insertion of which the surplus was converted into a deficit of £595,513. The actual result is that there was a deficit of £150,628 only, which we may hope is the last of the long series of Indian deficits.

The financial year 1862-63 opens a new era. Mr. Laing estimated that there would be a surplus at the end of the year of £179,814. The Secretary of State again objected that certain omissions and deductions had been made, by the correction of which the estimated surplus of £179,814 was converted into a deficit of £284,086. The result is that, after providing for the whole of the expenditure, there is a clear surplus on the current year 1862-63, which terminates this day, of £697,168, according to the Regular Estimate,* which has since been increased, by reductions in the Home Charges and Guaranteed Interest, to £936,922.

REVENUE OF 1862-63.

I will now explain how the Revenue of 1862-63 has turned out, as shown in the Regular Estimate, compared with the Budget Estimate of that year and with the actual receipts of 1861-62.

"Land, Sayer, and Abkaree" show an improvement of £304,000 over the Budget Estimate, and a decline of £39,555 compared with the actual receipts of 1861-62. This last, however, is not a fair comparison, for in 1861-62 there was a double receipt, arising from the adoption for the first time of the salutary financial rule of carrying to account all the receipts of the year as revenue of the year instead of holding payments in advance in deposit until the next year; and there was also a much larger sum obtained from the sale of Khas Mebals in 1861-62 than in 1862-3. When these allowances are made, the year 1862-3 shows an increase of £646,423 under Land, Sayer, and Abkaree compared with 1861-62.

"Income-tax" has exceeded the Budget Estimate by £206,700, which is due partly to the fact that there has been a large collection of arrears of the 2 per cent. rate, which was repealed from the 1st of August last, and partly to a better management of the assessment.

"Customs" show a falling off of £85,007, compared with the Budget Estimate, and of £188,639 compared with the actual receipts of the preceding year. This is caused by the paralysed state of the trade with England in cotton piece goods and yarns, which yields half our Customs duties exclusive of salt. Out of a total amount of duty of £2,151,505 received in 1860-61 (excluding salt), £1,193,401 was for piece goods and yarns.

"Salt," on the other hand, shows an increase of £282,800 over the Budget Estimate, and of £774,419 over the actual receipts of 1861-62. As this is an article of annual consumption, and the price of the commoner kinds is not liable to much variation, the effective demand for it is a good test of the circumstances of the community.

The "receipts from opium" have surpassed the estimate by £1,550,000. Even this is not all, for the last opium sale of the year has since taken place, and the total receipts from all sources are expected to exceed £8,000,000, which will raise the surplus over the estimate to upwards of £1,700,000. The causes of this remarkable result are, that the price of Bengal opium was estimated at Rs. 1,200 a chest, while the average price per chest actually raised has been Rs. 1,429, and that passes were taken out for a larger number of chests of Malwa opium than had been expected. The receipts from opium in 1861-62 were £6,359,269.

"Stamps" are £317,100 below the estimate, and £160,317 below the sum realised in 1861-2. The amount received from stamps in 1861-2 was abnormally large. It arose from the Limitation Act, which came into operation in January, 1862. There was a great rush to get cases instituted previously to that date, and many debtors who were unable at the time to pay, gave fresh bonds on stamped paper, admitting the justice of their creditors' claims. The indigo and rent disputes in 1861-2 also contributed not a little to the Stamp Revenue. In the Punjab and Oude, fees called "Tulubana" for serving processes in the Civil Courts were charged at so much per cent. on the amount of the suit. These were subsequently paid in stamps, but early in 1862 the plan of paying in cash was resumed, and the surplus is carried to a local fund for the improvement of the judicial establishments of the province.

* The "Regular Estimate" is closed in March, and it generally contains eight months' actual, and four months' estimated expenditure. Opium, owing to the sales taking place at Calcutta, is brought up nearer to date.

The other branches of revenue call for no remark.

The total gross revenue of 1862-63 is £45,105,700, which is £2,134,500 more than the Budget Estimate, and £1,276,228 more than the actual receipts of 1861-62. It is a favourable indication of the progress of India that the revenue is habitually underestimated. The growth is so rapid as to outstrip every calculation which it is considered safe to make.

Excluding opium, the remaining branches of revenue yielded £584,500 more than the Budget Estimate, and £214,503 less than in 1861-62. This was chiefly owing to the falling off that has been noticed in Customs and Stamps.

EXPENDITURE OF 1862-63.

The first point deserving of notice in the expenditure of 1862-63 is that the charges connected with the Salt Revenue have been less by £169,100 than the estimate, and by £90,431 than the expense actually incurred in the preceding year. These are the first-fruits of the contraction of the Government salt manufacture in Bengal. There was a saving of £175,000 in consequence of the abolition of one Government agency and of the consolidation of two other agencies into one.

The increase under "Electric Telegraph" from £162,600 to £380,000 is only nominal. It arises from the value of stores expected from England having been included only in the latter account, and from the transfer from Public Works of the construction charges.

"The Army" shows an increase of £266,000 arising from too sanguine a view having been taken of the rapidity with which certain military reductions would be made.

Of the £500,000 for "Education, Science, and Art," £100,000 remain unexpended. The sum of £146,458 was added to the regular estimate of the preceding year to make the grant up to £500,000; but as the local administrations were not prepared for so large an immediate extension of their operations, the money has not been spent.

The increase of £43,700 under "Superannuations" is one of the consequences of reduction of establishments; and the increase of £42,900 under "Interest" arises from the interest on the loan from the Maharaja of Cashmere, and on the sum funded for the Mysore Princes having been included under this head.

The total expenditure in India in 1862-63 is £37,228,900, against an estimated sum of £36,329,400; but to this last must be added £366,300 for loss by exchange, which was not provided for, and the real comparison, therefore, stands as follows:—

Add loss by exchange	366,300
	£36,695,700
Regular Estimate	37,228,900

Excess of expenditure over the Budget Estimate £533,200

The total expenditure in India in 1861-62 was £37,245,756, and there is therefore a decrease of expenditure in 1862-63, compared with the preceding year, of £16,856. These results are satisfactory, inasmuch as they show improved accuracy in estimating the expenditure and the absence of any increase in it.

The net expenditure in England is £5,292,397, which is less than Mr. Laing's estimate, corrected by the additions which Sir C. Wood directed to be made to it (making a total sum of £5,491,432), by £199,035. This arises from reduced expenditure at home.

The sum paid at home for guaranteed interest on railway capital, less net traffic receipts, is £1,647,478, against a Budget Estimate of £1,500,000.

The gross expenditure in India added to the net expenditure in England, including railways, amounts to £44,168,775; and deducting this from £45,105,700, the gross revenue of India, there remains a net surplus of £936,925 of income over expenditure for the year 1862-63. This result is more favourable than that shown in the regular estimate, because, as has been already stated, information was subsequently received of reductions having been made in the home charges and guaranteed interest.

I now proceed to my estimate of the expenditure of the coming year 1863-64.

ESTIMATED EXPENDITURE OF 1863-64.

Under "Allowances, Refunds, and Drawbacks," the sum taken is less than the expenditure of the two last years, chiefly because those years included a considerable sum for Licence-tax repaid.

"Land Revenue (including Forest) and Abkaree" shows an increased charge of £124,500, caused by the different establishments employed to revise the assessments preparatory to the concession of a permanent settlement of the Land Revenue.

The cost of collecting the Income-tax has diminished from £121,043 in 1861-62 to £76,400 in 1862-63, and it is estimated at only £51,400 in 1863-64. This is, perhaps, as low as it can be reduced. It amounts to a charge of a little more than 3 per cent. upon the estimated produce of the tax.

The charges connected with the Salt Revenue show a remarkable downward progress. In 1861-62 they were £646,931; in 1862-63 they were reduced to £556,500; and in 1863-64 they are estimated at only £293,100, being a diminished annual expenditure of £353,831 in two years. In 1861-62 the Salt Revenue was collected at the rate of 14·201 per cent., including the cost of manufacture. In 1863-64 it is estimated that it will be collected at the rate of 5·425. The steps by which this great economy has been arrived at will be hereafter explained. It is enough to say at present that it is owing to the cessation of the Government manufacture of salt in Bengal, with the help of a diminished charge of £25,000 at Madras.

The increase under "Electric Telegraph" arises from the causes which have been already noticed in reference to the expenditure of 1862-63, viz., to the value of stores from England and the cost of construction being included in the estimate. Provision has also been made for the formation of several new lines of electric telegraph.

It will be observed with regret that the charge for the "Army" has again risen from £12,466,000, at which, according to the regular estimate, it stood for 1862-63, to £12,646,900 for 1863-64. This addition of £180,900 is the result of a balance of increases and decreases. The chief causes of increase have been, 1st, the Bengal Native Infantry was much below its establishment last year, but it has now been brought up to full strength. This accounts for £80,000. 2nd, The Reserve Stock of Ordnance Stores having been largely drawn upon during the last two years without replenishment, the demands are £150,000 in excess of last year. 3rd, The practice of charging every disbursement to the year in which it occurs having been extended to the military accounts, there will be a difference of about £80,000 to be provided for between the arrears at the beginning and end of the year; and 4th, Six European regiments have to be relieved this year against one last year, involving a further increase of £70,000 or £80,000, after allowing for volunteering.

On the other hand, several measures of reduction have been adopted. There is one regiment of European Infantry, and one Local Corps (the Pegu Battalion) less. Eleven troops of European cavalry are in course of gradual absorption; and the establishment of twenty-four regiments of Native Cavalry has been diminished by thirty-six men each. As the strength of the Native Cavalry regiments was below their establishment, the effect of this last arrangement has been rather to save future increased expense than to make any immediate reduction.

Although the establishment of the Army, as now fixed, is not to be revised until the changes which will be made by the railways and other means of improvement in progress shall have been more fully developed, much may be done to reduce the annual expenditure by a careful manipulation of administrative details without impairing either the interests of the officers or the efficiency of the service. On the contrary, both are often promoted by well-devised economical arrangements. The necessity for action of this kind in reference to the Indian Army is very urgent. In so vast an establishment, many and often well-founded applications for increased expenditure are made from various quarters; and if these are not met by a pervading spirit of economy, ready to avail itself of every opportunity of effecting an unobjectionable saving, the expenditure must go on creeping upwards till public attention is called to the subject. This single item of my estimate equals the average cost of the British army, and to this has to be added £2,213,000 more of Indian military expenditure, included among the Home charges. The great interests of our nation in India require that the estimate for the Indian army should at least undergo the sifting to which the War-office estimate is subjected before it is laid before Parliament.

The "Indian Navy" has disappeared from the accounts, having been dissolved under instructions from the Secretary of State, and the protection of the Indian and adjoining seas has been entirely committed to her Majesty's Naval Force; but "Marine Charges" continue to occupy the next place to the "Army," because they are chiefly incurred in paying for the conveyance of troops and stores. The Estimate for 1863-64 is less by £193,000 than the Regular Estimate of 1862-63, and by £379,193 than the actual expenditure for 1861-62. This is caused by the employment of hired and contract vessels in the place of vessels belonging to the Government, and by the arrangements in progress for transferring the Government dockyards to private companies.

The provision proposed for the public works expected to be carried on in 1863-64 is as follows:—

It was ascertained by a careful analysis of the grant for the preceding year, 1862-63, that, of the aggregate amount of £4,260,000, the sum which had been appropriated to works of public improvement was £2,380,000. It is proposed to make a similar appropriation for 1863-64, and to add to it a reserve fund of 10 per cent., or £238,000, to be held in hand by the Supreme Government to be applied to meet any special cases of cotton roads or other works which cannot be provided for out of the proportion of the sum of £2,380,000 allotted to the local governments and administrations.

In order that the local governments may work on confidently from year to year, following out consistent plans, maintaining establishments in proper proportion to the work to be done, and preserving satisfactory relations with contractors, it is necessary that the appropriations should not only be large but steady, or, in other words, that they should vary as little as possible from year to year. At the same time, it is desirable that means should exist of supplementing local deficiencies, and of accelerating any works, the early completion of which is of special public importance. Both these ends will be attained by the arrangement proposed.

The appropriation for civil buildings and ordinary repairs and other military works will be the same as last year, that is, £570,900 for the former, and £650,000 for the latter.

The sum assigned this year for building new barracks was £50,000; but a necessity exists for constructing permanent barracks for our European troops at central strategic stations which are certain to be permanently held, and it is proposed to appropriate £300,000 to this object during the ensuing year. This also will be held in hand by the Central Government to be allotted as circumstances may require, according to arrangements which have been carefully considered.

The charge for "Railway Supervision and Cost of Land" in 1862-63 was £132,500, and in 1863-64 it is estimated at £182,500; and the loss by railway exchange in the two years is respectively £366,300 and £294,600.

Lastly, another sum of £380,000 from the proceeds of the Income-tax will be divided among the different governments and administrations for the purpose of carrying on local works.

The aggregate amount of all these grants for public works for 1863-64 is £4,995,100, which is an increase upon the corresponding grants of this year of £466,300. Judging from past experience, it is very unlikely that the whole of this sum will be spent within the year, and, excepting only the appropriated 1 per cent. from the Income-tax, savings from any part of this large grant will be available to supplement any other part.* In the extremely improbable event of the whole being spent and more being wanted, we have a surplus in reserve derived from an outside estimate of expenditure and an inside estimate of revenue, which may be drawn upon to any extent required. This Government desires that it may be clearly understood that any funds that can be expended with advantage on cotton roads, on works of irrigation or navigation, or on any other useful works, will be granted during the ensuing year. There will be no difficulty as far as money is concerned. The only limit will be the impossibility, in particular cases, of getting value for the outlay.

Beside the preceding grants, an old local fund balance amounting to £58,700, which had long been due to the Government of Bengal, has been appropriated to the construction of railway feeders.

*See the Tabular Statement of the Grants for Public Works in 1862-63 and 1863-64 in the Appendix, page vi.

the plans and estimates of which had been previously prepared. Post Office and telegraphic constructions, which were included in the grant for Public Works in 1862-3, have been provided for in the Departmental Estimates in 1863-4 to the amount of £183,400. The total sum appropriated for Public Works in 1863-4, therefore, amounts to £5,237,200, and including Guaranteed Railways, to £9,237,200.

"Salaries and Expenses of Public Departments" show a diminution of £22,600, and "Law and Justice" an increase of £154,700. This arises from the pains that have been taken to keep the ordinary Civil Establishments within proper limits, and the disposition which exists to make every necessary addition to the Judicial Establishments. The consolidation of the Supreme and Sudder Courts into united High Courts has caused a considerable additional expense.

The total estimated charge for "Police" is £2,280,000, being an increase over this year of £180,000. This arises from the extension of the new police to Bengal Proper, which was the last province remaining to be brought under the new system. The transition period is always an expensive one, and this was especially the case in Bengal, where twelve police battalions and the old Thannadaree police had to be put down, while the constabulary police, which was to supersede them both, was being set up.

As the large reduction of the native army has been rendered possible by the extent to which the civil duties previously performed by it have been transferred to the new police, the two must be viewed in relation to each other. I agree with those who are of opinion that with proper economy, £12,000,000 may be taken as the standard of the expense to be incurred in India for the military force of all arms, even supposing it to be maintained at its present establishment, and that £2,000,000 is a sufficient allowance for the police. In order to keep the expenditure within due limits, it is indispensably necessary that there should be only one military, and one civil force. The permission to employ "guards," or any other protective force not included in the army, or in the organised police, would at once give scope to the former practice of making discretionary miscellaneous charges. Efficiency, as usual, goes hand in hand with economy. It can be secured only by concentrating attention on the military and police forces, dealing with each according to its special conditions.

The new Indian police is now in a state to be effectually acted upon by a searching revision. At the commencement of such an organisation the officers employed do not know what their real requirements are; and if the establishments first set up are permitted to go on long without scrutiny, the difficulty of bringing them back to a just standard is much increased. Colonel Bruce, who has already acquired much valuable experience, will be employed during the ensuing year as commissioner for investigating and reporting upon the police forces of Northern India in concert with the inspector-general of each force, and such other officers as may be appointed for the purpose by the local governments.

Although the assignment for "Education, Science, and Art" is £38,400 less than the Budget Estimate for this year, it is £61,600 more than the sum likely to be expended according to the Regular Estimate. Even so, it bears no proportion to the magnitude of the object. But national education is not merely an affair of money-grants. To deserve the name, it must be supported by the contributions and co-operation of the communities concerned. What is chiefly to be desired, therefore, is a natural growth and interior expansion according to the circumstances of each province. The object is, not uniformity, but progress and efficiency; and there may be virtue even in variety, because more is likely to be accomplished, on the whole, when each government is left to follow the bent of its own wants and inclinations, and because there is a positive advantage in the experiment being tried in different ways. The different local governments by which the administration of India is carried on have a great deal to learn from each other. An elaborate system for education of the upper and middle classes has been successfully worked out in Bengal, while in the North-West Provinces and Madras much progress has been made in laying the foundation of a really popular system. Large local funds are already expended on education, and the school fees and other incidental receipts arising out of the application of the grant are similarly appropriated. The duty of the Central Government is to be ready to sustain and encourage every well-directed effort to promote the education of the body of the people in every part of India, and liberal grants will, I trust, never be wanting to supplement in due proportion the funds locally raised. If, in the course of next year, any well-considered plans are brought forward which cannot be provided for from the grant of the year, a further appropriation will be made out of the savings of other grants, if there should be any, and if not, out of the general surplus of income over expenditure.

There is an increase under "Political Agencies and other Foreign Services" of £25,200 over this year, which is chiefly occasioned by the presents to be given during the Governor-general's tour.

Under "Superannuation and Retired Allowances" an additional sum of £7,500 has been taken to provide for the increased demands for compensation likely to arise from the extensive reductions in progress.

It will be seen with satisfaction that the charge for Interest on the Debt, after increasing for several years, has received its first check, and will be less next year than this by £77,000, while there is an increase of £50,000 in the receipts on account of interest.

This Government has the advantage of having three real sinking funds.

The first of these is the proceeds of the sale of waste lands, and of the redemption of fixed rent-charges, both of which, according to the instructions of the Secretary of State, are to be applied to the payment of debt. As the same principle is applicable to all sums derived from the sale of real property yielding, or capable of yielding, revenue, the local financial officers have been directed to make returns of the sums available for investment on this comprehensive footing. No investments have yet been made from this fund.

The second is the sum authorised to be invested in Government securities from the coin and bullion received from notes within the limit of the smallest amount which experience has proved to be necessary for the monetary transactions of the country. That limit has been fixed for the present, by Act xix. of 1861, at four millions sterling, but the sum which it has been considered proper to invest up to the present time is only one million.

The third is the surplus of the cash balances beyond the amount required to carry on the expenditure. I shall return to this point when I have to speak of the estimate of cash balances for the ensuing year. One million sterling has been lately applied from the surplus of the cash balances in the extinction of debt held in this country, and three millions have been remitted to the Secretary of State, over and above what was wanted to meet the home expenditure, to enable him to operate upon some portion of the Indian debt held in England.

Neither of these three sinking funds is directly derived from the produce of taxation. To impose, or continue taxes to pay off debt, is a measure of doubtful policy; but when, from any cause, capital accumulates beyond what is required for current purposes, instead of spending it as income, it ought to be employed in extinguishing debt in order that there may be no diminution of the capital stock of the community.

As investments made from the waste lands fund and the surplus cash balances result in a final extinction of debt, the interest saved will appear in the estimates and accounts in the form of a diminished charge. The investments from the currency deposits, on the other hand, are held in trust to meet a possible but extremely improbable demand for the payment of Government notes; and the sum annually received for interest from this source will, therefore, be credited as revenue, leaving the principal available for re-sale if necessary.

The total estimated expenditure in India for 1863-64 is £37,525,300, which is £296,400 more than the Regular Estimate for 1862-63, and £279,544 more than the actual expenditure for 1861-62. The Estimate for 1863-64 exceeds the Estimate for 1862-63 by a larger amount, but the true comparison is, not with the expectation which the Budget Estimate of 1862-63 held out, but with the near approximation to actual fact afforded by the Regular Estimate of the same year. The increased expenditure in 1863-64 is caused by additional appropriations for public works, the greater part of which are of the nature of a highly reproductive investment. In other respects the expenditure has been kept below its previous level.

I shall now review the estimated revenue of 1863-64.

ESTIMATED REVENUE OF 1863-64.
"Land Revenue" is taken at £19,384,500, or £45,500 less than the sum expected to be realised in the current year. It falls short by a much larger sum of the amount credited in 1861-62; but it has been already explained that there were incidental receipts in that year, the greater part of which cannot recur. The Estimates for the Land Revenue are made by the different local governments long before the end of the preceding year, with a liberal allowance for a possible failure of the harvest; and the consequence is that, as the harvest never fails in the same season all over India, the Estimates are almost always under the mark. For this reason alone I am persuaded that the Estimate for 1863-64 is a very moderate one. There are, however, still more potent causes. The high prices of agricultural produce strongly stimulate the extension of cultivation, which is attended in the Madras and Bombay presidencies and some other quarters with a direct proportionate increase of the Land Revenue. But everywhere, except where the Land Revenue has been already permanently settled, the hope of obtaining that great boon furnishes a powerful additional motive. In order to prevent any undue sacrifice, it has been determined that the claim of the Government against an estate is not to be fixed until it has been cultivated up to a fair average, leaving only the usual proportion of waste land for pasture.

I have long been of opinion that a well-considered arrangement for fixing the Land-tax would, besides indirectly augmenting other sources of revenue, increase the productiveness of the Land-tax itself.

The Government can, under no circumstances, demand more than a moderate assessment. When, therefore, the cultivation has nearly reached its maximum, our obvious policy is to fix the assessment, and to trust for the further improvement of the revenue to the outlay of capital and the accretion of wealth, which are the natural results of permanency of tenure, besides diminished expenses of collection and certainty of receipts. Thus the country becomes divided between estates, the assessment of which has been fixed, and estates which the owners are endeavouring to cultivate up to the point which will qualify for its being fixed, and it is difficult to say which condition is most conducive to the increase of the revenue.

The interests of the revenue are also deeply concerned in the sales of waste land being made in the manner most convenient to intending settlers. Every difficulty will be obviated if the practical course which experience has dictated at Ceylon be adopted, i.e., that, instead of leaving intending settlers to go through a series of embarrassing and expensive formalities, pains are taken to survey and mark out beforehand the most suitable allotments with a view to their being put up to auction at fixed periods after full information has been given to all concerned. A suggestion has been already made to this effect, and matured instructions will shortly be issued.

I have commented on "Land Revenue" as it stood previously to a slight change which has been made in the form of the accounts. The next head was "Seyer," an obsolete Arabic word, which has the same meaning as "miscellaneous." It has latterly been composed of a variety of items connected with the Land Revenue, of which the revenue derived from the forests has been the most important. The progress of improvement has given a value to the forests which they never had before, and it has been determined to give increased attention to their conservation and management, and to constitute the revenue derived from them a separate head in the public accounts. The other miscellaneous items of Land Revenue which appeared under "Seyer," have therefore been added to Land Revenue, and what remains has been denominated "Forest Revenue."

The "Abkaree," or excise upon spirits and intoxicating drugs, is estimated at something less than the expected receipts of this year. The plan of letting the privilege of selling spirits and intoxicating drugs at such prices as local monopolists think most for their advantage, is giving place in several parts of India to that of "Sudder Distilleries," or a fixed excise upon the manufacture. Whatever may be the relative measures of these two plans in their bearing upon public morality, the "Sudder Distilleries" have not, so far as the experiment has been tried, been favourable to the revenue. The subject will be fully investigated.

The "Assessed Taxes" call for no remark. As the Income-tax year is from August to August, one quarter of the 2 per cent. duty on incomes below £50 a-year was included in 1862-63, whereas the collection of 1863-64 will be entirely confined to incomes above £50.

It has been already stated that the continued depression of our "Customs" revenue is caused by the long stagnation of the piece goods trade. The prevailing opinion is, that a revival is not at present to be expected, and in deference to it, I have taken "Customs" at about the sum realised in the present year. I myself take a more sanguine view, the reasons for which will be hereafter adverted to.

"Salt" is estimated at £61,900 above the receipts of this year, which is a moderate allowance for the growth of the consumption from the improvement of the circumstances of the people and of the means of communication with the interior, and for the increased quantity likely to be sold in Bengal in consequence of the cessation of the Government manufacture and the disposal of the remaining stock.

On all main points I concur with the view taken by Mr. Laing in his remarks upon the "Opium" Revenue in his last financial statement. We have gone on calling the Opium Revenue "precarious" long after the contrary has been demonstrated by actual experience. It is anomalous, but it is not precarious. It rests upon precisely the same basis as the excise upon spirits in England, with this difference, that the spirits are consumed by her Majesty's subjects while the opium is consumed by the subjects of the Emperor of China; but the Chinese will no more go without opium than it is to be feared certain classes of our fellow-subjects will forego the use of spirits. The idea of the Chinese becoming independent of us by growing their own opium is a mere chimera. The cultivation has been permitted in China for several years with the result that the demand upon India for opium has been continually increasing. India has been bountifully dealt with in the great division of labour established by nature. She has an advantage over all the world in producing indigo, salt-petre, opium, and some other things. The Chinese, on their part, are more likely to increase their cultivation of tea and silk than of opium. Even if the quantity grown in China was largely increased, Bengal opium is so much better than the native product that it would still be sold as an article of luxury, like Manila or Havannah cigars.

No doubt the cultivation of opium in China would increase if the market were not supplied with a sufficient quantity of Indian opium. In Bengal we make a quantity in each year as nearly approaching 50,000 chests as we can. In other parts of India opium can be freely manufactured and exported subject to a pass duty, and the annual quantity is gradually rising to another 50,000 chests. The wants of the China market, therefore, appear to be sufficiently supplied.

The moral justification of the Opium Revenue also follows the parallel of the Home Excise upon spirits. Is it best to check the consumption of opium by placing the highest possible tax upon it, or, by leaving the cultivation and export entirely free, to give to the Chinese the means of unlimited indulgence in their favourite drug? There is only one other alternative, which is, without taking any revenue from opium, to maintain an army of preventive officers in the interior and round the coasts of India, to secure the entire cessation of the cultivation. Indeed, we could not stop there, for there are other intoxicating drugs in common use in India and China which are more injurious than opium, and, if opium were prohibited, the increase in these truly brutalising stimulants would call for their suppression also.

In 1861-62 Mr. Laing estimated Bengal opium at Rs. 1,748 a chest. The average price of the year was Rs. 1,614 a chest, and at the end of the year there was a surplus on Bengal and Malwa opium, over the estimate, of £251,708.

In 1862-63 Mr. Laing estimated Bengal opium at Rs. 1,200 a chest. The average price of the year was Rs. 1,429 a chest, and there is likely to be a surplus of upwards of £1,700,000.

Bengal opium has been estimated by me at Rs. 1,250 a chest, which would give a total sum of £8,290,000 upon the expected crop on both sides of India. The sum for which I have actually taken credit in my Budget Estimate is £8,000,000, which is less than opium will yield this year.

The causes of the recent low state of the "Stamp" revenue have been already explained. I expect that it will revive next year, but I have taken the estimate on the supposition of its continued depression.

"Post-office" shows no increase. This revenue is derived from voluntary payments made in return for advantages expected to be received, and it therefore depends upon the manner in which the department is regarded by the public.

An increased receipt is expected from the "Electric Telegraph," in consequence of the new lines which are about to be opened.

The increased receipts under "Law" and "Justice and Police," arise from the circumstance that large municipal contributions towards the expense of the police, which were previously carried to local funds, have now been credited as revenue.

Of the £350,000 which are the estimated receipts from "Marine," about £150,000 are from pilot dues and other ordinary sources of income. The remaining £200,000 will be from the sale of ships and marine stores; but, owing to the abolition of the Indian navy and to the substitution of freight and contract for Government vessels, and the transfer of the Government dockyards to private companies, the receipts from this source are certain greatly to exceed the amount named.

The diminution in "Miscellaneous Military Receipts" is owing to several causes. Retrenchments not finally upheld, and consequently not actually receipts, have been to some extent included heretofore. During this last year there has been a considerable realisation on account of remounts sold to officers, which was an exceptional measure and will not recur. The actuals of 1861-62 also include a large amount of arrear receipts, chiefly recoveries, the result of more effective audit.

The total amount of Revenue estimated by me for 1863-64 is £45,306,200, which is only £200,500 more than, according to the Regular Estimate, will be actually realised in 1862-63. Indeed, when the increased receipts from opium, of which information has since been received, are taken into account, my estimate of the revenue, of next year, is less than the actual receipts of this year. In the absence of any extraordinary unexpected check before the end of April, 1864, there must be a progressive increase of the public revenue, taken as a whole, which will carry the receipts beyond the figure at which I have taken them.

How much reason there is to expect a sustained progress will be seen from the following statement of the annual revenue since the mutiny:—

1859-60	39,705,822
1860-61	42,303,234
1861-62	43,829,472

Regular Estimate for 1862-63 45,105,700

From these it will be seen—

1st.—That the increase in 1862-63 over 1858-59 is £9,044,912.

2nd.—That the average revenue of the three last years exceeds that of the three first years by £4,389,520.

3rd.—That the aggregate increase in four years upon the income of 1858-59 is £27,301,076; and 4th.—That there has been an average annual increase in each succeeding year of £2,730,107.

The net expenditure in England is estimated by the Secretary of State at £5,347,300, which is more than the expenditure of 1862-63 by £54,903. This is caused by increased payments for the Persian Gulf Telegraph, and for the site and construction of the India-office. As the object of the first is to establish direct telegraphic communication with England it stands in no need of explanation; but as regards the second, I may mention that the plot of ground in London where the Foreign-office and other buildings stood has been allotted for public offices, and that the Foreign-office and India-office divide the Park frontage, and pay for the ground and building, which is all one design externally, according to the space they take. Therefore, England only pays exactly as England does, both for ground and building.

It is estimated that the Home Military Charges will be £143,000 less in 1863-64 than in 1862-63, including a diminished payment of £50,000 to the Imperial Government for her Majesty's troops serving in India. Having during many years assisted in the settlements of the home charges of her Majesty's troops serving in India, I have had painful experience of the public inconvenience arising from the attempt to adjust such periodical accounts upon a consideration of the infinite variety of fluctuating and perplexing details into which they ramify, and am able to say that a great improvement has been made by substituting the principle of an average rate per man. The rate adopted up to the close of this financial year was a provisional one, founded upon the average of a period when the recruiting arrangements were conducted on a very economical footing, and the matter is to undergo further investigation.

The guaranteed interest on railway capital less net traffic receipts, is estimated by the Secretary of State at £1,617,825, which is £117,825 more than the Budget Estimate of 1862-63, and £192,745 more than the actual charge for 1861-62.

The total expenditure which has to be provided for 1863-64 is, therefore... £44,490,425

The estimated surplus is £815,775

The Secretary of State, being strongly impressed with the public importance, in the present state of India, of expediting the construction of reproductive public works, and especially of roads subsidiary to the new railways, or opening direct communications with the coast, authorized, by a despatch, dated, August 30 last, the appropriation for this purpose of any sum that might be required out of the cash balances, not exceeding £3,000,000 sterling. The resources of Indian finance have proved greater than they were at that time expected to be, and we have been able to make, out of the revenue of the year, ample provision for all the public works of every kind that can be carried on within the year, leaving a clear surplus, after doing this, of upwards of £800,000. It is a matter of congratulation that the Secretary of State's object has been accomplished without the necessity of departing from the good old rule of English finance, that the whole of the expenditure of the year should be provided for out of ways and means raised within the year, leaving a surplus of income besides to meet contingencies. To use Lord Elgin's words, the exhibition of a surplus "tangible, palpable, and incontrovertible," at the present turning point of Indian finance, is a matter of much public moment, and if we had drawn upon our cash balances for any portion of our current expenditure, some doubt might still have remained on this point. The Secretary of State has since directed six millions sterling to be remitted to England from the cash balances for the payment of debt. The matter has thus been replaced on its right footing. Our available capital is to be employed in extinguishing permanent charges upon revenue, and every demand of the year is to be met, as heretofore, from the surplus of income over expenditure.

Before I enter upon the disposal of the surplus, I must express my grateful sense of the cordial assistance I have received from all the public departments, and from the chief officers in every part of India; but there is one obligation which I wish especially to record. The Hon. Mr. Drummond, the late financial secretary, not only gave me the invaluable aid of his excellent judgment and mature knowledge of Indian finance during his tenure of office, but after his appointment as Lieutenant-governor of the North-West Provinces, he remained at Calcutta with the Governor-general's consent, solely for the purpose of assisting me in a task which I should have found heavy, indeed, without his help.

One article now charged with an import duty of ten per cent. is a material of industry so essential to the development of the great works upon which the future of India depends, that it is proposed to charge only a registration fee of one per cent. upon it. I, of course, refer to iron. The loss of revenue will not be great; for after separating ironmongery and cutlery, which are used for domestic purposes, and will still be chargeable with the ten per cent. duty, much the largest portion of the remainder is imported for the construction of railways, and is either added, together with the duty upon it, to the capital of guaranteed companies, the interest of which is made good out of the public revenue, or is entirely exempted from duty under a privilege lately conceded to companies more directly based upon the principle of private enterprise. Out of a total value of £1,087,464 of iron imported at Calcutta in 1862, £542,608 was for rails alone; machinery, into which iron so largely enters, is on the free list.

Keeping the duty on spirits at its present rather high rate, it is proposed that the duties charged on beer and wine should be lowered. Besides sharing the burden of the general high prices with the native community, Europeans pay heavily for articles of consumption peculiar to themselves; and now that the artisans and others in narrow circumstances are resorting to this country in large numbers to assist in carrying on public works and industrial undertakings of various kinds, it is desirable that they should get their European supplies with as little additional cost as possible beyond the necessarily heavy charges of freight from England and conveyance into the interior.

The duty on beer, the most wholesome of stimulants and the best suited to this climate, is at present two annas or three pence per gallon. It is to be reduced to a registration fee of one anna.

The duty on wine was reduced by Mr. Laing from an uniform rate of Rs. 2 a gallon to R. 1 upon wines of less value than Rs. 12 per dozen; and Rs. 2 upon all of a higher value. This arrangement has not answered the object intended, for in the ten months ended on the 28th February last only Rs. 16,493 was paid at Calcutta on wine of less value than Rs. 12 a dozen, while Rs. 1,84,683 was paid on wine above that value. It is proposed that every kind of wine should be charged a duty of R. 1 a gallon, which will be equal to an ad valorem duty of about 13 per cent. Several inconveniences arising out of the present discriminating duty will thus be avoided, and the importation of wholesome wines will be encouraged.

The total loss of revenue from these reductions of duty, making the necessary allowances on iron arising out of our connection with the railway companies, may be estimated at £50,000. The reduction of duty will take effect from the 1st May, 1863.

Of the three great war taxes originally proposed, the Income-tax alone came into operation; and, by subsequent legislation, incomes less than £50 a-year were exempted, and the assessments first made were accepted until the tax expires in August, 1865. It is satisfactory to the Government that the state of the finances enables them, to a certain extent, to anticipate that period, and they propose that one per cent. of the Income-tax shall be remitted from the 1st August next. From that date, therefore, the duty upon incomes will be three, instead of four per cent.

The annual sum thus remitted is £380,000; but, as the Income-tax year is from August to August, one quarter of the one per cent., or £95,000, will come within the financial year 1863-64, and the actual loss in that year will therefore be only £285,000; and adding to this the estimated loss of £50,000 from the remission of Custom Duties, the diminution of revenue will be in all £335,000.

The estimated surplus of income over expenditure, after making ample provision for public works and every other object, has been shown to be £815,775; and deducting from this the above-mentioned sum of £335,000, the final surplus is £480,775.

It will be seen from the estimate of cash balances in the Indian Treasuries that, after taking seven millions sterling out of the cash balances for the payment of debt—that is, one million paid off in India, three remitted this year to the Secretary of State for the payment of debt at home, and three more to be remitted for the same purpose next year—it is expected that the cash balance on the 30th April 1864, will still amount to fifteen and a-half millions sterling.

After a careful study of the cash balances, I have come to a decided opinion about them. Their extraordinary increase has not arisen from a surplus of income over expenditure. This is simply impossible, because till now we have had no such surplus for many a long year. It arises, in the first instance, from our having borrowed five millions more than we wanted, the proof of which has been worked out by Mr. Drummond. Then, there is prize money; service funds; suitors' funds; local funds of various kinds; trust funds; deposits; Mr. Wilson's appropriated one per cent. from the Income-tax, a large portion of which remains unspent; the increasing trade receipts from, and the diminishing expenditure on, railways; and the action that has been taken in curtailing advances on account, and consolidating outlying balances. Our cash balances are like the French institution of the Pot-au-feu, into which everything not required for immediate consumption is thrown, with the result that there is always an abundant mess in reserve for the family. It is a characteristic of the cash balances that they are constantly ahead of the estimates made of them, partly because the estimates are based upon the status quo, whereas the balances are continually in process of accretion; and partly because public officers generally estimate for the full amount they can by possibility spend, and there is therefore always a balance left of unexpended credits. Beginning from this year, a surplus of income over expenditure will help to swell the balances.

The great item of so called "debt" must not be confounded with the genuine National Debt. It is an omnium gatherum of every possible description of account, current, trust, and local fund. It has long been the bête noir of Indian Finance, and we propose to make a real settlement of it by instructing our financial officers to scrutinise all the items of it, in concert with the officers of the local governments, and to divide them into two categories.

The first of these will contain all funds which are properly local—I mean those in this respect to which the local governments or municipalities are entitled to exercise their own discretion—and all trust funds for which they are responsible. These will be finally placed to the credit of the local governments, subject only to an annual account to be rendered according to a prescribed form of the expenditure of these local funds, and an estimate of the manner in which it is proposed to expend them during the ensuing year. This slight supervision seems to be required by the relation in which the Supreme Government stands towards the local governments, and it is also necessary for the guidance of the Supreme Government in making grants from the general revenue.

The other category will include those funds which, by whatever name they may be known, are really public funds applicable to public purposes. These were very numerous, for almost every office had one or more private purses of this kind which it filled with all sorts of odds and ends, and employed in defraying public expenditure not included in the Budget Estimate. Various receipts have also been appropriated, from time to time, to particular public services according to a mistaken principle of finance, which has been superseded at home by the principle of having only one Consolidated Fund, from which all payments are made. All receipts and payments on the public account will hereafter be carried to Revenue and Charge, and it will then be seen what the Public Income and Expenditure really are.

Thus, by separating one part and incorporating another, we hope to reduce "Debt" to smaller proportions, and to establish a stricter responsibility in the application of the various sums of which it is composed, while, at the same time, a solid foundation will be laid for a self-sustained municipal action. But, although the account will be cleared, and the administration will be improved by this process, the cash balances will not be diminished. The Supreme Government will still be the general purse-holder, and will take care that the surplus of the cash balances is invested for the public benefit.

It may be asked in England why no reduction is proposed in the duty on piece goods. The English merchants in India, who have better means of information than their countrymen at home, have not applied for any such reduction. They are aware that, as the duty of five per cent. ad valorem is charged on a valuation which was fixed when prices were about half of what they now are, it really amounts only to 2½ per cent. They also know that one argument which has been urged at home with a show of reason has proved to be without foundation. The so-called protective duty on the native manufacture has utterly failed to afford protection. The native hand-loom weavers have been prostrated by the blow which staggered Manchester. Having no capital of their own, nor any charitable friends to help them, they have gone down before the excessive price of the raw material, and the excessive stocks of the manufactured article held by English houses, and have emigrated, or gone upon the railways and other public works, or have given themselves up entirely to agriculture. The great majority, like our own old hand-loom weavers, were half agriculturists before; and their recent absorption in the agricultural class has been a benefit both to England and India. Such are the wonderfully productive powers of the soil and climate of India, that agriculture must always be her staple industry. Another long step has been taken in this direction. The insufficient supply of rural labour and high price of grain and exportable produce have received some mitigation; and when Manchester sets to work again, she will find her rival local manufacturers converted to an unexpected extent into ready-money customers. There has been occasional severe distress, particularly where the manufacture was carried on for general sale at marts, but, on the whole, it is a remarkable proof of the healthy, progressive state of India, that the transition has been got through with so little difficulty. The Government has not been called on for any assistance, and the only subscriptions raised have been for Manchester.

It was shown in Colonel Baird Smith's report that the stagnation of the cotton trade in India must be attributed, first to the lowness of the stocks caused by the commercial difficulties in England in 1857-58; and 2nd, to the large speculative shipments made, in addition to the usual supplies, to take advantage of the high prices arising from the preceding cause. Upon this state of things came the war in America, which, threatening to cut off the supply of cotton, induced the proprietors of goods held in India to instruct their agents to demand an equivalent advance in price to what had taken place in Europe. Shippers, believing that the native dealers and consumers would be compelled to pay the price asked, also continued to make nearly the average shipments. But the native dealers, being aware of the large stocks held in Europe, and of the consequences to be expected from the sudden cessation of the civil war, would not speculate at present prices, and the native consumers did not like to give 50 or 60 per cent. more for their clothes than they had been accustomed to do. This unusual combination of large stocks with high prices was the cause of the depressed state of the trade. The 40, 50, and even 60 per cent. advance of price paralysed the trade, and not the nominal 5 per cent. duty, which, for the reason already explained, had become in reality much less.

A further advance of price of about 20 per cent. has lately taken place in consequence of an unexpected demand on the part of the native dealers. India will give almost as much help by taking off the manufactured article, and thus enabling Manchester to offer a good price for the raw material, wherever it is to be had, as by furnishing the raw material itself. This great population never had so much money. They have waited a long time for cloth to get cheaper; but, seeing that it does not, and that neither they nor their wives and daughters can go on longer wearing their old clothes, they have begun again to buy.

All that is possible is being done to increase the supply of raw cotton. If Government became a producer or a trader in the article, private producers and traders would have to retire from the competition. The power of the Government, therefore, is limited to protecting everybody engaged in the trade, to enforcing the strict performance of every lawful contract, and to facilitating the conveyance of cotton to the coast. All this is being done without stint. Funds will, as I have said, be forthcoming for making cotton roads to any extent consistent with the possibility of execution on reasonable terms. The difficulty is, not money, but labour and superintendence. The laches of ages cannot be repaired in a single generation; still less in a year or two. We must not repeat in India the mistake made in Ireland, by not distinguishing between the ultimate capabilities of a country after its resources have been developed, and the improvements which are immediately practicable. The soil and labour of India are so largely engaged in producing indigo, saltpetre, opium, oil seeds, fibres, and other exportable commodities, besides this last urgent demand for cotton, that she can with difficulty meet all the demands upon her. We are too much accustomed to look upon India as an inexhaustible fund, to be drawn upon ad libitum. She ought rather to be regarded as a bank, the many pressing claims upon which can be answered in full only by making the most of every available resource.

I have carefully considered whether the plan which has been adopted of late years in England, of confining Customs duties to a limited number of principal articles of import, might with advantage be extended to India. Whether duty be levied on many articles or on few, all must undergo the usual examination, partly for statistical purposes, but chiefly because, unless all were verified, it would be impossible to know which were liable. Nothing, therefore, is gained by limiting duties to a few articles, either in saving expense of collection or in exempting the trade from interference. The Customs duties in India are collected in a manner which scarcely admits of simplification, and no complaints are heard. India is such a vast and imperfectly developed country, that articles which hardly appear in one part exist in abundance in another, and entirely new staples occasionally spring into life in answer to some unexpected demand or discovery. Under such circumstances, our policy should be to levy a wide-spread but moderate duty, so as to give free scope to trade in time of peace, and to cherish the increase of a fund which would be our first financial reserve in time of war. A consolidated Customs Act has lately been passed, which comprehends every regulation relating to the subject, except the tariff.

I promised to notice separately the change which has taken place in the Salt Revenue of Bengal. The monopoly which was established by Lord Clive in 1765, for the purpose of substituting sufficient salaries for the presents and other irregular gains which had up to that time been received by the servants of the company, has, after passing through a modified state of existence, come to an end before it had quite completed a hundred years. A Select Committee of the House of Commons in 1836, recommended that the import trade of salt should be thrown open, and that the Government should confine itself to a monopoly of the local manufacture, and should sell its salt at the cost price, with the addition of a modified fixed duty which was to be equally charged upon Government and upon private salt. This plan was adopted, and the Government soon after permitted salt to be made subject to an equivalent Excise duty.

Since that there has been a constant struggle between the Government manufacture and the private trade. The long exclusion of foreign salt had given rise to a caste feeling in favour of Bengal salt, which, however much it might be mixed with earthly particles, was preferred by the natives to the purest and best Cheshire salt; and the latter was even adulterated to make it look like Bengal salt. At last, Cheshire salt was delivered at a price which overcame the prejudice against it, and it began to sell freely throughout the Lower Provinces of Bengal in places in which no salt of the kind had ever been seen, and in which its exposure to sale would hardly have been tolerated in former years by the ignorant villagers. Its conquests are not likely to end here. As the whole available carriage on the North-West frontier has been engaged to meet the pressure of the cotton trade, the importation of salt from that quarter has fallen off, and Liverpool salt is sent far into the interior, by rail and river, to supply the void. This is another instance of the unlimited confidence that may be placed in the self-adjusting capacity of trade if it is really left to itself.

The rapid increase of the sales of private imported salt, and the corresponding decrease of the sale of Government salt, will be seen from a table submitted by me.

As it gradually became apparent that the private trade might be relied on for the necessary supply of salt, the Government withdrew from the manufacture. At the beginning of the present financial year the Chittagong agency, and the Tumlook and Hidgelee agencies were united into one; and in February last orders were issued entirely to discontinue the manufacture, by closing each salt pan as soon as the first advances of the season had been worked off.

The charges of manufacture were diminished last year by £175,000, and this year there has been a further reduction of £237,500. This is not all saving, because the expenditure was of the nature of an advance, recoverable by the sale of the salt. Nevertheless, the Government was permanently deprived of the use of a large average sum of money, and it is better, for many reasons, that the public revenue should be collected on delivery of the manufactured article over the side of a ship, than by an elaborate system of advances, manufacture, and sale, absorbing time and money which can be ill spared from the really necessary purposes of government.

The clearing of the forests and the draining of the swamps at the mouths of the Ganges were seriously interfered with by the salt manufacture. Large tracts had to be kept in a half-submerged state to promote evaporation, and a portion of the Sunderbunds was maintained in a state of nature to grow fire-wood to boil the salt. As it is not to be expected that private persons will take up a losing business from which the Government is retiring, the accelerated improvement of these important suburban districts may be confidently looked for. The Moolungees, or labourers in the salt pans, are like the weavers, already half agriculturists, and the demand for their labour, as such, will be increased by the salt lands being given up for cultivation. The prices of agricultural produce are so high that every resource should be made available to increase production.

The remaining Government stock of salt consists of 8,018,161 maunds, or 294,545 tons. When the Government undertook to supply Bengal with salt it was necessary to keep a large reserve stock in hand; but now private trade has shown itself perfectly capable of supplying not only Bengal Proper, but other extensive countries in the interior besides; and the sources of supply are so varied that they cannot be cut off. The importations from Liverpool, however much they may have increased of late years, are backed by still more extensive home resources. Independently of the salt range in the Punjab, and the Sambhur and other salt lakes in Rajputana, which have vast areas of supply, an unlimited quantity of cheap salt can be made in the Chilka Lake, on the frontier of Bengal and Madras, and on every part of the Coromandel Coast. In the Run of Cutch, ready-made salt in any quantity can be had for the carting.

Besides the waste of public money caused by the locking up of so large a capital, by the gradual melting of the salt, and the heavy cost of warehouses and establishments, the existence of such a stock is a constant cause of disturbance to the private trade. As the Government has now entirely and finally abandoned the manufacture of salt, and only seeks to recover its advances by the sale of its remaining stock, the engagement not to sell at less than cost price may be considered to have terminated with the exceptional state of circumstances which gave occasion to it. According to my view, the Government might, with perfect fairness and consistency, after giving due notice, sell by auction from time to time certain limited quantities of salt till the whole was exhausted. The quantity to be brought forward should have reference to the average sales of the last four or five years of open warehouses and fixed prices, and the upset prices should not be less than the ruling price of Liverpool salt added to the fixed duty. All this is for future discussion; for the present there will be no departure from the practice of selling at cost price.

At the present rate of wages, the highest salt duty paid in British India amounts only to an insignificant charge upon the earnings of an ordinary labourer. This tax is levied in a manner free from inquisition, and with less expense and greater certainty than perhaps any other that could be devised. The Salt-tax and the Excise upon spirits and intoxicating drugs, amounting together to about seven and a quarter millions sterling, are contributed by 150 millions of the people of India, and these taxes stand in the place of the 40 millions sterling paid by the 30 millions of the British Isles upon their food and tobacco.

Among the other advantages conferred upon the people of India by the introduction of railways, the reduction and equalisation of the price of salt is not one of the least. At Madras a short branch line runs into the centre of the depot, and it is remarkable that out of 1,229,780 maunds of salt sold at the depot from April, 1861, to November, 1862, 1,000,887 were sent by rail into the interior.

It has truly been said that, after a quarter of a century of exhaustive efforts, beginning with the Afghan war and ending with the mutiny, the want of India is repose. But it should not be the repose of indolence. The change should be rather from the destructive arts of war to the reproductive arts of peace. The present is a golden opportunity which should be improved to the utmost, for we know not how soon the existing tranquillity may be interrupted. War does not consume according to rule and measure. Everything else must yield to the necessity of self-preservation.

As the financial system is the heart of the body politic, upon the healthy state of which the power of meeting the demands both of peace and war depends, our first attention should be directed to it. The foundation of a sound financial system on the English model has been laid broad and deep by my predecessors. The organic changes have been successfully made. What remains is to extend the application of those principles throughout the whole field of income and expenditure, so as to remould the entire system into one consistent whole.

With this view arrangements have been made for a thorough revision of all the public establishments on the plan of that which has been in continual progress at home since Sir James Graham commenced his reforms at the Admiralty more than thirty years ago. For some of the more critical investigations two of the ablest financial officers of her Majesty's Government will be united with the best man whom the Indian Department actually under revision can produce. In other cases the remoulding will be effected by carefully-selected Indian officers only. The object will be, not economy in the vulgar sense, but the attainment of the highest degree of efficiency, which is alone consistent with true economy. To get rid of unnecessary processes, to ascertain the number and description of persons really required for the effective transaction of business, and to determine the best classification and scale of remuneration, is the end proposed. Moderate establishments, well worked and well paid are indispensable to a healthy state of the public service.

In the present condition of the public service in India a searching revision on these principles must be productive of the happiest results. Although we have been overtaken by a demand for labour which requires that every available man should be restored to production, the practice in most departments still is to have a multitude of unprofitable, ill-paid subordinate native servants who prey upon the public without yielding any adequate service in return. As their wages were fixed when the expenses of living were not half what they are now, they have the same excuse for abuse of power as the English civilians had before Lord Clive's reforms. Increase of pay must, therefore, go hand in hand with diminution of number and proper securities must be taken for the admission only of well-qualified persons into the public service. The inadequacy of the pay of the subordinate judicial establishments has long been a public scandal, and it is highly to the honour of the respectable class who fill these appointments that there have not been more instances of malversation. At the same time so many judicial and magisterial arrangements have been made of late years on different principles, that a re-cast of the existing heterogeneous establishments, especially in Bengal Proper, is indispensable for the purpose of restoring harmonious action, and the result will, by no means, be always an increase of expenditure.

After the public establishments have been thus re-adjusted, the further modifications which the change of circumstances will from time to time require, should be made on a consideration of the annual Budget Estimates. The value of this periodical review, in the opportunity it affords of pruning excesses, supplying deficiencies, and adapting the public expenditure to the actual exigencies of the public service, is incalculable; but the "Budget System," as it is here called, is an instrument of portentous power; and when it is neglected and left in the hands of interested subordinates, it is capable of fearful abuse. Painful symptoms of this have appeared in a few of the Estimates which it has been my duty to review, while in other cases they have been prepared with as much fidelity and exactness as the best of our English Estimates. These inequalities will, no doubt, be corrected as the great importance of the operation by which the public expenditure is fixed for the ensuing year becomes better understood. This operation is the foundation of our financial, and has a very important bearing upon the efficiency of our administrative system.

The other great work of peace, for which this interval of tranquillity should be utilised to the utmost, is the construction of necessary civil and military buildings, and the formation of roads, railways, canals, and other means of assisting the productive powers of the country. In respect to some of these, the active agency of the Government is indispensable; but as regards the great bulk of reproductive works, it is important for all concerned that our real position should be understood.

The primary business of Government is to protect life and property, and to enable all classes of persons to pursue their respective industries and enterprises without molestation, and with as little burden of taxation as possible, and the time and strength of the Government and its officers are severely taxed to perform even this indispensable duty in a tolerably efficient manner.

To conduct all the undertakings which are required to support the industry of a country forms no part of the functions of the Government. This rather belongs to the society itself, acting through various modifications of the principle of association. In England, which is far ahead of all the world in this respect, the Government has nothing to do with the matter. In Ireland the practice was to depend upon the "Castle" for everything; and when the system of grants, either avowedly made as such, or disguised under the name of loans, led to serious abuse, the "Board of Works" was instituted, from the scientific, systematic action of which everything was expected. Then came that terrible teacher the famine. Ireland threw herself without reserve upon the Board of Works, which was supported by all the money and all the agency which England could furnish; and, when it all broke down, people began at last to perceive that the task was beyond the strength of any Government, and that nothing short of the united efforts of the whole society, of which the Government was only the organ and representative, would suffice. Since that, the "Castle" and the "Board of Works" have been allowed to contract within their proper spheres; and, under a system of awakened private industry and enterprise, Ireland has begun to blossom like the rose, and to be a source of strength and credit to England, instead of being her "greatest difficulty."

This is a true illustration of our present position in India. In the absence of all private enterprise, the Government undertook to do what it could; and, although its hands were overburdened, they were not "torpid." This first era of Anglo-Indian public works has been illustrated by the genius of Arthur Cotton and Proby Cautley, and by the self-denying exertions and well-directed talent of many other officers less known to fame. Public opinion, however, soon became painfully sensible of the insufficiency of these means to the end proposed; but, being still possessed with the motion of the unlimited nature of Government resources, a clamour rose, both in India and England, against the "Department of Public Works," as before in Ireland against the "Board of Public Works." Have we still to learn that to furnish a worthy industrial outfit for such a country as India is beyond the power of any Government? In the prosecution of such undertakings the Government is limited by the amount that can be annually spared out of the produce of the taxes after provision has been made for the primary and necessary provisions of Government; for the result is the same, whether appropriations are made out of current incomes, or loans are raised the interest of which has to be paid from the same source. The rapid growth of the charge for guaranteed interest for a few Trunk Railways shows that if this scheme was extended to all the public works of the country, the burden could not long be borne. Then the agency which can with advantage be worked by Government is subject to strict limits. It is limited to what can be effectively superintended by a single chief. These bounds have been already passed, and hence the numerous imputations, too often well founded, of mismanagement or abuse on the part of the subordinate local officers. It is impossible for any Government to exercise an effectual control over public works of all kinds simultaneously going on in almost every part of a great continent which exceeds the whole of Europe, without Russia, both in area and population.

According to the English practice, the capital available for carrying on public works in India would be commensurate with the entire capital stock of the society at large, and the agency would be extended to the whole of the professional classes supported and superintended by the classes which, although not professional in this sense, are accustomed to deal in a business-like manner with undertakings of every description. It would be even more than this, for India would be backed by all the capital and professional skill of England. Such is the wonderful annual accretion of English wealth, drawn from all the four quarters of the world, that if the English people can once be induced to regard India as a field of investment, as South America was once regarded by them in the time of speculative loans, and as North America was for a much longer period, and with much greater practical results, India would rapidly become more to England than any person has yet imagined. The rapidity with which England was covered with railways shows in how short a time great works may be executed on this principle; and in this case we should profit by the experience of England, and avoid her mistakes. Although the Government cannot itself execute all the works that are required by a country like India, it may, with great public advantage, exercise a general supervision, by bringing the experience of the whole to bear on every part.

To manage this transition in the manner most for the benefit of society has been one great object of Lord Elgin's Government. To pass at once in all cases from entire Government support to the entire absence of it would be overshooting the mark. It does not follow that the Government should give no assistance at all for the future because it has in some cases given too much heretofore. The military and political objects for which the Government guaranteed the capital to be expended on certain main trunk lines of railway have been accomplished, while the inconveniences of the system have become painfully apparent. For this has been substituted an arrangement under which any help that may be necessary is given without impairing the motives which are the mainspring of private enterprise. A specific grant-in-aid is made, while the entire profit and loss, together with the unrestricted management, are left with the railway company. The grant-in-aid is either greater or less, according to the special circumstances of each undertaking; and, according to the same circumstances, it assumes various forms—being sometimes given in the shape of the concession of an existing road upon which the rails may be laid—sometimes in that of a new earthwork constructed for the purpose—sometimes of a single sum paid, once for all, at so much a mile—and sometimes of the promise of an annual payment for so many years; while, in other cases, only the land is given.

As experience increases, it becomes more apparent that the assistance required from the Government for the successful prosecution of railway enterprise in India has been greatly over-estimated. My own opinion is that there is no country in the world where, with common prudence and exertion, railways can be made with greater advantage. The opening of the East Indian Railway to Benares has been followed by a stream of traffic with which the railway managers, with their present means, are totally unable to contend; and when the gap between Benares and Allahabad has been filled, the stream will still more overflow its banks. What is wanted is, not Government assistance, but English capital and skill, and above all, experienced and able railway management. The circumstance that certain trunk lines have been made with the aid of a Government guarantee, has led to a fallacious idea that branch lines cannot be made without it; but numerous lines of railway may be made between populous cities and through highly-cultivated districts, which, although branch lines in reference to the guaranteed trunk lines, would be themselves trunk lines of no mean importance in relation to their own independent provinces.

Again, there is a great country in the interior of India occupied by the native States, where, owing to the absence of engineering difficulties, railways may be made at a cheaper rate than the cheapest English agricultural lines; while, owing to the marked difference of natural capabilities, an extensive trade is carried on between the salt and grain producing regions on one side, and the great Gangetic Valley, with its abundant supplies of tropical produce, on the other. As we go on, we shall get entirely out of the leading strings of Government assistance, and all that will be expected will be that the State through which the railway passes should provide the land. If the railway will not yield the ordinary rate of profit without a subsidy from the Government, it can only be made at a loss; and there are so many lines in India which would undoubtedly yield a profit, if properly made and managed, they should at least have a priority of construction. One most important element in the comparison between the relative prospects of the guaranteed railways and of those which will be made by private enterprise, is the substitution of private thrift and attention to details, for the careless, wasteful management which, constituted as human nature is, must be the consequence of assured profits and dependence upon others.

A similar change is in progress in marine affairs. The Indian Navy has been dissolved, and the protection of the coasts of India has been transferred to her Majesty's Naval Force. Arrangements are in progress for disposing of the expensive sea-going and river steamers hitherto in use, and employing, under fixed contracts, the lines of passage and freight steamers which have been established along the coasts of India. The large Government dockyards at Bombay, Calcutta, and Rangoon have been the chronic cause of a profuse public expenditure, which home as well as Indian experience proves cannot be effectually controlled. These establishments, with all their machinery, buildings, and stores, will be transferred on suitable terms to private companies, constituted for the purpose of improving and working them in the interests of the trade of the respective places, subject only to the condition that ships belonging to her Majesty shall have the priority of their use at the rates charged to private persons. The shipping belonging to or frequenting the ports of Calcutta, Bombay, and Rangoon has so increased of late years that it stands in need of support and assistance of this kind as much as the shipping of London, Liverpool, or Glasgow, and the public finances will gain, not only by saving the expense of the dockyards, but by the encouragement which will be given to commerce.

Having now performed to the best of my ability the responsible duty of explaining the state and prospects of the finances, and having shown how impossible it is that plans for the public benefit can bear their expected fruit without the hearty co-operation, not only of the official body, but also of the independent mercantile community, I conclude by expressing a fervent hope that God will enable us to give effect to these good designs by granting us a continuance of peace, and by putting into the hearts of all a spirit of mutual confidence and goodwill.

CASUALTIES AMONG THE SHIPPING.

Very nearly a month has elapsed since we felt it our duty to pass some rather severe strictures on the homicidal covetousness which allows ships to go out to sea that are little better than so many floating coffins. The very serious charges we implied, rather than made, naturally attracted the attention of our contemporaries, who one and all appeared to be of opinion that we had spoken too hastily and from the impulse of the moment. Convinced in our own mind that we had not at all overstated the case, it became incumbent upon us to gather together some substantial facts to justify our aspersions, and to show that we were neither beating the air nor fighting with wind-mills. This task, however, was by no means an easy one in a community, every member of which appears to entertain a mysterious horror of responsibility. Insinuations, indeed, may be obtained to any extent, of every hue and shade from the lightest grey to funeral black, but facts, figures, and dates are quite another thing. Then, every man becomes afraid of his neighbour, and seems to think that all the world is a-gaze and eager to hand him up to his superiors as a betrayer of official secrets, and a caterer for that vulgar institution, the public press. At last, however, by picking up here a little and there a little, by putting line to line, and dove-tailing various odd scraps of reliable though oral information, we have succeeded in collecting sufficient data to justify us in calling upon the Government to institute a searching inquiry into the customs and practices of this port. The first result of such an investigation would be the discovery of the fact, that there are at least fifty vessels, with an aggregate tonnage of 32,000 tons, sailing out of the port of Calcutta with all the privileges of really first-class ships, but which have long since been condemned by sworn surveyors as unsafe and unfit to go to sea. A few of these, perhaps, have been so extensively repaired that they are almost as good as new, but the majority are certain to founder in the first gale they encounter. And not only are valuable cargoes and still more valuable lives entrusted to vessels that may almost be said to hold together by accident or sufferance, but even good ships are strained and rendered unsafe by being immersed to such a depth that they lose all buoyancy and power of rising on the wave. Instead, therefore, of passing beneath the hull and lifting her up bodily, the sea breaks on board the inert mass, sweeping clean her decks, and breaking up her timbers as if it were a house built of playing cards. After a time we read under the head of shipping intelligence that the William and Mary left such a port on such a day, and was never more seen or heard of. That simple announcement embodies the plot of a ghastly and horrible tragedy, the terrors of which are unrelieved by hope. The experienced skipper and his hardy crew, from the first behold and read their death warrant in the darkening clouds, and know too well that no exertions on their part can save them from their impending fate. The storm bursts over their heads, the heavy-laden bark receives a weight of waters upon her deck, the rotten timbers gape and part, a shriek, a wild, vain tossing of arms on the surface of the waves, and all is over. The wind howls their dreary requiem, and the storm rushes on to seize another prey. Never more will the William and Mary appear as a 1 on Lloyds' register. Never more will the merchant, making haste to be rich, pile cask upon cask, bag upon bag, in her hold, until the water-mark is lost sight of, and the ship has got ready to sink but certainly not to float. Never more will the sworn surveyor reach forth his hand for the price of blood, and pass as seaworthy the vessel he must know in his heart is only fit for firewood. And worst of all—never more will the wife, the mother, or the child behold their loved relatives, those brave, hard-working men cut off in the prime of life, a sweet-savoured offering to Mammon, in whose unhallowed worship more innocent blood has been poured forth than was ever shed in honour of Moloch or of Kallee. Far be it from us to charge any merchant, any shipowner, any surveyor, with a deliberate design or wish that the vessel they send to sea should never reach her destination. The merchant, indeed, is chiefly to blame for his apathy, his sublime indifference as to what becomes of his goods after they are once shipped, consigned, and insured. But the shipowner and the surveyor cannot be altogether acquitted of a lurking consciousness that the ship which they declare to be seaworthy and sound, is scarcely fit for river navigation. It is an indisputable fact that ships are seldom, if ever, broken up in this port. After being sold for £3 or £4 per ton they are patched up, surveyed, and turned out as first-class ships, an insurance upon which any respectable office will gladly accept—the more easily, perchance, that insurance offices in this city are represented only by agents. But how, it will be asked, is it possible that a sworn surveyor, a Christian, and an Englishman, would give a first-class certificate to a vessel he knew to be undeserving of one? We confess that it is rather difficult to answer that question. Were they natives, the usual course would be to insinuate that they received “a consid. ration” for neglecting their duty, and seeing only with their employers’ eyes. But no such insinuation may be made against respectable Europeans, who are all God-fearing, honourable men, slaves of their conscience, and scornors of pelf unworthily obtained. It only remains, then, to charge them with ignorance and appeal to Government to take steps to prevent the shameful and sickening loss of life and property that now disgraces this port. We demand that a strict inquiry be made into all the circumstances connected with the total loss of the Annie Archibald, the Janet Willis, the Nugget, the Martha, the Mooltan, the Tropic Bird, the Sedgemoor, the Futtle Rohoman, the Blue Jacket, the Turon, the Elizabeth, the Lalla Rookh, the John Wood, the Waverley, the Arethusa, the David Begg, the Reindeer, the Thomas Sparks, and the many other ships sailing from Calcutta, that have run aground or foundered within the last eighteen months. Some of the above-named vessels, we are aware, were quite worthy to be placed in the first-class, but there is too much reason to believe that they were so deeply laden as to have become unmanageable. In too many cases the entire crew disappeared with the ships in which they had so unwarily embarked. Not a few of the vessels named in the above list were condemned many a year ago, and yet contrived to obtain first-class certificates. It is no uncommon thing too, we are assured, for skippers who remonstrate with their employers on overloading their ships, to be either removed from their command or to be served with a warning that such will be the result of their fastidiousness if any further objections are urged. And so “men must work and women must weep,” and their corpses may strew the shore or sink into the depths of the sea, while their wives and their little ones mourn and starve and look in vain for their coming; and while shipper and shipowner, insurance agent, and surveyor, make good cheer and gladden their hearts, subscribing liberally to public charities, respected and esteemed by their neighbours, and finally laid in the grave in the sure and certain hope of a joyful resurrection. And all this time a paternal Government folds its arms and looks on complacently, smiling a Pecksniffian smile, for does it not compile columns upon columns of statistics? Does it not employ an army of scribes to make entries upon entries? Does it not use the reddest of red tape? Does it not arrange its papers in the tidiest fashion, and place them in the neatest and snuggest of all possible pigeon-holes? But for all that the wail of the widow and the orphan go up to Heaven, and the earth and the sea cry aloud by reason of the innocent blood that is daily poured out like filthy water.—Bengal Hurkaru, April 18.

MISCELLANEOUS.

SHOCKING OCCURRENCE.—MURDER OF MR. LAYTON.—We yesterday received from Almorah a letter containing the following paragraph:—“On the 25th inst., Mr. Layton, of the Artillery, and three companions, left this (Almorah) for the Snows. On entering a village of the name of Bagesur, 28 miles from Almorah, a madman rushed out of a house and shot Mr. Layton through the chest, killing him on the spot. One of Mr. Layton’s friends immediately fired at the lunatic, and hit him rather hardly with shot. He has been looked upon as a harmless lunatic for the last ten years. Mr. Layton’s remains were brought in this morning, and are to be interred to-morrow morning. The lunatic is now in the Almorah jail. We hope he will be kept where he now is for the remainder of his life; for who nows but that having tasted of artillery blood, he might, like the tiger, pant for more, come down to Meerut, run a muck, and make Colonel Hayshe his first victim.—Mofussilite, May 1. A shocking occurrence has taken place in the neighbourhood of Almorah, an officer named Layton, of the Artillery, having been shot dead by a lunatic at Bagesur. The particulars of this painful event are given in the following letter:—“There is seldom any news to send from this place, but yesterday we were all startled by hearing that a Mr. Layton, of the Artillery (what brigade I don’t know), had been murdered at Bagesur (a village 28 miles from Almorah). This evening the intelligence only proved too true, as Mr. Layton’s body was brought into the station, accompanied by three of his friends. The party were on their route to the Snows, and it seems that, when Mr. Layton and party were going into Bagesur, a madman stepped out of a house and shot Mr. Layton dead, the ball passing through his chest. The man was formerly a bearer of our commissioner, and has been looked upon for the last ten years as a harmless lunatic. After the madman had fired at Mr. Layton, one of Mr. Layton’s friends fired at the lunatic, and hit him well with shot. The lunatic is in the gaol here; and Mr. Layton is to be buried to-morrow evening. I cannot hear of any provocation having been given either by Mr. Layton or any of his party to the lunatic.”

LIEUTENANT SADDLER.—We regret to hear from Cheera Poonjee of the death of Lieutenant T. R. Saddler, 28th N.I., late of the 49th Madras N.I. He died of cholera on the 12th instant. The deceased was an officer of considerable merit, and had done good service all through the North-Eastern disturbances, having especially distinguished himself by capturing the leader of the Cossyah rebellion, for which, and other services, he received the thanks of Government. It is indeed a pity that this young officer should have been cut off from an honourable career, and his death is a serious loss to the Government, especially as he would have been most useful in the police appointment recently given him.—Englishman, April 22.

COLONEL PATON, appointed Quarter-master General of the army by his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, pending approval and confirmation in England, has been summoned by electric telegraph to leave the Presidency for army headquarters, and leaves immediately to take over charge from Major-General Becher, C.B.; Major H. Garden, Assistant Quarter-master General at the Presidency, goes out of the department under the operation of the five-year order; and Captain P. Lumsden, at present Assistant Quarter-master General, Peshawar division, is appointed to succeed Colonel Paton as Deputy Quarter-master General of the army. We believe that Captain Norman succeeds Captain Lumsden as Assistant Quarter-master General.—Englishman, April 20.

MAJOR CAULFIELD.—The death of Major John Palmer Caulfield, which took place at Benares on the 14th or 15th of May, will call forth many a sincere expression of sorrow and regret. The deceased officer was in command of the 1st Regiment of Hudson’s Horse, and was marching up-country from Julpigoree to Cawnpore, and had reached Benares, when he was attacked and carried off by small-pox. Major Palmer was the eldest son of the late Major General Caulfield, Chairman of the Court of Directors, and was universally loved and respected both in his own service, and by a numerous circle of non-professional friends and acquaintances.—Id.

THE SCHOONER “SPHYNX.”—COCHIN, April 24.—A telegram received by Messrs. Regnaud et Fils of this place, from Colombo, intimates the strange disappearance of the schooner Sphinx, which left the Mauritius for Cochin with a consignment of specie, consisting of 3,700 sovereigns, and a large quantity of other cargo on board. When she left the Mauritius she was commanded by Captain Puren. Having run short of provisions and water she touched at Colombo. The telegram is sent in the name of Duverge, who was mate when she left her first port, but now assumes the command of the vessel as captain. No mention is made of the former captain.

MEDICAL COLLEGE IN LAHORE.—Sir Robert Montgomery lately presided at the close of the third session of the Lahore Medical College, in which there are 59 students. The College has given a great impetus to the study of English, it has awakened an interest in scientific pursuits, and it has been of practical benefit to the city of Lahore, in providing, during the epidemic of cholera last year, a number of trained men. A new hospital is being built. The number treated in the present building, so ill-adapted for the purpose, was 8,950 last year, or 1,430 more than the previous year. Next July, 30 men will pass their final examination for native doctor, and two years hence the college expects to send out fully educated sub-assistant surgeons. We believe the Punjab authorities are anxious to give the college as fully equipped an establishment as that of Bengal. This would be premature, but the Punjab and North Western Provinces ought to have one perfect Medical College for both, as soon as the railway is completed. Agra would be the best place.

INDIAN CONTRACT SYSTEM.—An Indian contractor receives an advance, makes away with it and, in an answer to remonstrances, is the very humble slave of the employer, but does not carry out his engagement. A civil suit is filed, and is, after long delay, decided in favour of the planter, who then discovers that the contractor’s effects are nil, or have been ostensibly assigned to a relation. In England, says the Spectator, the remedy would be applied by the county courts which would amerce the defaulter in balance due, plus damages, plus costs. And what then? How is this amount to be recovered? If the contractor has not disappeared altogether his property is certainly available for the satisfaction of the claims. And what property! Three brass and half a dozen earthen vessels, a spade and a plough worth two rupees put together, and a pair of bullocks worth perhaps fifteen rupees. Such as the property is, however, the ryot must be a very poor specimen of his class, if he has omitted to guard it from attachment. We venture to say that, within a week of the time that the pressure had once been applied by a small cause court, every contractor in the neighbourhood would have made over his property by a fictitious deed, but with all the forms of law, to some female relation. Still there is the defaulter in person, and if he does not pay he must go to prison—that is to say, that the planter will have the privilege of supporting him in idleness for such a time as the law directs, while, as he is a victim in the contest between European settler and native, his family will be supported by the neighbours. The civil gaol possesses no terrors for an Indian ryot. A planter might try its effects once on one defaulter, but he could not try the experiment on hundreds at the same time. Experience unhappily shows that extended dealings might at any moment be stopped by a wholesale default carried out by organised combination. Witness the 3,000 defaulters imprisoned in the Jessore gaol, in July, 1861. Did much effect follow from this example of the majesty of the civil law?—Friend of India.

RELIGION OF THE SIKHS.—In a paper read before the Lahore Missionary Conference, the Rev. W. Keene, B.A., gave some interesting information regarding the Sikhs. The teaching of Nanak, their founder, is at variance with the popular belief of the Hindoos on the Godhead idol-worship caste and the immolation of the Hindu widow. The writers of the Granth acknowledge only one Creator, styled “Katarpurkh.” At present some of the Sikhs, although they do not discard the teaching of the Granth, have returned to the belief of many creators; and since the taking of the country by the English, several have gone back to idolatry. Of caste Nanak says:—“What power has caste? Know the truth. It is as poison in the hand; eat it, and you die.” The ancient Sikhs ate together in common. To do so with those of a different creed, and also with Muzbee Sikhs, was, however, never their practice. In the time of Ranjit Singh indiscriminate marriages were not contracted; but Brahman Sikhs married with Brahman Sikhni, and so with the other castes. Now, the Sikhs do not even eat in common, much less contract indiscriminate marriages. Nanak assails Suttee in the following lines:—"Those women are not called Satis who burn on the funeral pile. Nanak says those are Satis who die from the blow of separation." As the influence of Nanak's teaching was for good, so was that of Govind for evil. He abused the principles of Nanak to lay the foundations of Sikh independence; but, in so doing, he roused the very worst passions. To the Locdiana mission we are indebted for a grammar and a most valuable dictionary of the Punjabi language. At different times thirty-nine works in the Sikh have issued from the vernacular press. The indefatigable Carey translated and published the whole of the New Testament, and the Old Testament up to the 40th chapter of Ezekiel, besides a few small tracts, in the Punjabi language. In the 32nd Punjab Infantry of Muz-bee Sikhs the Church Mission have some forty converts, men, women, and children. Mr. Keene holds that Nanak's tenets, where understood and believed, must dispossess the mind of many gross prejudices, which have taken hold of the Hindu. His spirit of toleration, too, cannot be without good effect.

BENGAL PLEADERS.—The Chief Justice of the Bengal High Court will commit a mistake, we believe unwittingly, if the rule is passed that no one shall be allowed to begin to practise in the court as a pleader who is above thirty-five or under twenty-five years of age. The minimum may be fair, but to fix such a limit as thirty-five years will exclude all retired civilians from the bar. This we look on as a calamity. Under the new Civil Service rules the majority of civilians will take their pensions after twenty-five years' service, or about the age of forty-eight. They are then in the prime of their years and experience, and might form the nucleus of a Mofussil bar which would do more to aid our judges and purge the courts of corruption than anything else. Yet by this rule they will be excluded from a career in which they could do good service to the State. We cannot suspect the Chief Justice of emulating Sir Charles Wood in his suspicions of the integrity of the service. We do not imagine that he fears that judges would be influenced by pleaders once civilians and still their friends. Even were this probable the presence of civilian pleaders on either side in a case would prevent it.

NEW STEAM PACKET.—In the beginning of last year we mentioned that Messrs. Buyers and Riach, shipwrights of this place, had entered into a contract with Mr. Cores de Vries, to build a steamer for his line of mail packets in Netherlands India. The agreement, we believe, stipulated that the vessel should be finished within a year from the time of its being commenced, and the builders appear to have kept to their engagement very well, as the vessel, which is to be called the Singapore, was launched on April 20. Owing to the tide not being so high as was expected the vessel did not get fairly afloat. The Singapore is about 600 tons in burthen, 186 feet extreme length, 24 feet in breadth, and 16 feet in depth. She is constructed of teak and other durable woods, is copper fastened, and is pronounced, by those capable of forming a judgment, to be well and faithfully built. She will be completely fitted up in Singapore with everything but engines and rigging, which will be supplied in Java.—Singapore Free Press.

MADRAS.

CHARACTER OF THE COORG.

We question if there is so much of the real soldier in the Coorg as he generally gets credit for. He is certainly a first-rate marksman with his gun, and, with full confidence in his own ability in this respect, would obstinately defend a post where he could shoot under cover; but we doubt if he would come up steady in open field to give or take cold steel. One can generally judge pretty accurately of a man's fighting qualities from the sort of weapon he wears. Look at the dirk of the Rohillah or the bitchon of Hyderabad, and it will at once strike one that such weapons were made for mortal combat, whereas the Coorg gullie is but a gaudy woodman's knife—a thing to clear the forest path, or chop sticks to cook one's dinner on a pinch.

The dress of the Coorg is simple and graceful. That of the men consists of a turban, and white cotton or coloured cashmere gown, in shape similar to an English dressing gown. The gown fits quite close to the body, extends downwards a little below the knee, and is secured at the waist by a shawl, to which is attached the Coorg knife. The women wear a cloth, which leaves the shoulders somewhat exposed. Caste, although recognised, has not by its rules so fettered the minds and bodies of the Coorgs as it has those of their neighbours of the plains. At a not very distant period of the past, nothing was more dreaded or hated by a Coorg than a Brahmin, especially if he came from Mysore; but now their priest or highest caste ape the manners and customs of the Brahmin, even putting on the sacred cord. Notwithstanding this the people generally have still an intense dislike of the Brahmin in power, and a recent proposal to introduce that sacred element into the public offices caused great excitement; and there cannot be a doubt that such an experiment would be most imprudent. The inferior castes are chiefly farmers, tradesmen, labourers, and slaves. Start not, gentle reader! at the word slave, for in spite of our boasted charter of freedom, and of our morality, poetry, &c., slavery does exist in this part of her Majesty's dominions. It is, however, a very mild form of that cursed institution, for the Coorg slave is so sua sponte, having, after a trial of the joys of liberty, voluntarily returned to the old state of bondage. During the years of his strength the slave gets for his labour clothing and food sufficient for himself and his family, and when too old to work his wants are also cared for by his master. Simple, and ignorant of any better condition, he remained quite contented with his lot until the arrival of the coffee planter, when coming into contact with his coolies he began to learn the true value of labour and the use of money, and to feel the degradation and misery of his bonds. Of late many have absconded, and there is therefore nothing that the proud poor Coorg dreads more than the approach of the coffee planter with his axes and coolies. At present, from desertion and other causes, slavery is on the decline, and in a few years will calmly breathe its last. Several planters on first entering the country, in hopes of obtaining cheap labour, and also out of pity for the poor slaves, induced some of them to desert their old masters and enter their service; but this was found a disagreeable and ineffectual mode of securing their freedom, as the irate Coorg might at any time pounce on the slave, and drive him back as he would a stray buffalo. All runaway slaves therefore now take care to leave the Coorg country. A gentleman who had employed some of them on his estate told me that, when they first entered his service, they had no idea of the value of money, or how to provide for their own wants, but had to be cared for like children. How different this from the saucy sharp-witted coolies of Mysore in Coorg, one of whom, on receiving a present of a rupee from us for some little service, at once clucked it up to ascertain if it was a good one, and then calmly walked off, without even making a salam! All Coorgs, and especially the lower orders, are very dirty in their habits, neglecting the sanitary ablutions of their neighbours of the plains. As to the state of their clothing, it will be sufficient to say that dhobies are all but unknown in Coorg.

The Coorgs are a very lazy race, rarely performing any manual labour, and fostering the silly pride that it would lower their dignity to engage in any other toil than the fatigues of field sports. Indeed, but for the wonderful fertility of their rice fields, they must long ago have suffered from the want of the bare necessities of life. At present the prices of provisions are so high and advancing so rapidly, that they soon must work for their bread, or if not become beggars or emigrate. Drunkenness has become very common, and is being followed by the usual consequences. —Madras Times.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE LATE LIEUTENANT COLONEL OUCHTERLONY. —It is with feelings of deep sorrow, which we share with all who knew him, whether in public or in private life, that we record the sad event of the unexpected and premature death of one of her Majesty's most valuable military officers of this presidency; a man who, for nearly thirty years, had energetically devoted his great natural abilities, his large scientific acquirements, and his vast fund of general information, together with his physical capacity, wholly to the service of the State.—We allude to Colonel John Ouchterlony, of the Madras Royal Engineers who died at Ootacamund on the 29th of April, in the plenitude of his mental strength, but exhausted otherwise by the incessant efforts of a mind which over-taxed his bodily powers. His death was caused immediately by fever, which might have been surmounted by a more robust and less strained frame, but was really attributable to the self-sacrifice that we have mentioned. His whole heart was thrown into the discharge of his duty, no matter what it cost him personally, and like many other of the best servants of Government, he has paid the penalty of his devotion; a penalty which has to be partaken by those to whom his services are now lost for ever. He was one of those sagacious and resolute men, whom India can least afford to lose at present, when a great future is dawning on her, and the loss of whom cannot be really estimated, until the want of him shall have been proved by sad experience; because there be so few like him. He died as became him, in harness, striving up to the last to carry out great schemes of public utility, which, had he lived a few years longer, would have produced large fruits of advantage to this country, in the promotion of whose interests he had laboured so long and so well. It is not for us to attempt just now any review of his professional career, but we trust that our pages will shortly be adorned by a worthy notice of the modest yet important services of one who adorned the distinguished corps to which he belonged. We shall not venture to say more than a few words of his private character, because we might be betrayed into the expression of personal feelings unsuited to a newspaper. Nor is it necessary that we should do anything of the kind, because all who enjoyed the privilege of his acquaintance even,—and much more of his friendship,—will have anticipated the warmest tribute of affectionate respect to his memory that we could offer, if the tidings of his death have reached them, or will pay that tribute of their own accord, should these few lines convey the first intimation of the general loss that has been sustained. Unblemished in every relation of life, he was highly esteemed by all who knew him, and loved as a brother by those who knew him best.—Athenæum, May 20.

THE RAJAH OF MYSORE.—Is the Rajah fit to govern Mysore or is he not?—on the answer to that question hangs our course of action. The first view we have of "Maharajah Mysore Kistna Rajah Oodiaver Behauder" is when, in 1793, on the death of his father, the titular ruler whom Tippoo kept in confinement, he was expelled from the palace with all his family, and, being an infant of two years, cried bitterly for his toys. In 1799 we exhumed him from obscurity, and bestowed on him the province now called Mysore, giving him as his Minister the famous Poorneah, who managed so well that when the boy came of age he found nearly three millions sterling in the treasury. In a short time it was dissipated. He surrounded himself with hordes of the most worthless retainers. Soon the annual revenue of more than half a million was insufficient for their rapacity. As in Oude, he let out Talooks to the highest bidder; he made his pipers, buffoons, and pimps amils and foudars of districts, and our Resident was overwhelmed with complaints of extortion and oppression. If the latter remonstrated, secret agents were sent to Madras to intrigue and misrepresent his motives. Sir T. Munro personally warned the Rajah, whom we had made the ruler of these millions, and for whom we were responsible, of the consequences, and received a promise of amendment, but after two years things were worse than ever. The British Government is long-suffering—it shows itself to be so at present, in the case of Hyderabad; but when the subsidy failed it was time for us to step in. In vain did the Rajah struggle to avert the blow which came in 1832, resorting even to the lowest intrigue till he received a warning which terrified him into quietude, at a period so late as 1838. If in the prime of his years—and he had as a youth the reputation of ability—he showed a signal incapacity for ruling, what confidence can our Government have, charged as it is with such solemn responsibilities, that at the advanced age of seventy he may be safely trusted with the reins of power? Mere impotency is no reason for yielding to his solicitations. From 1838 to the departure of General Cuthbert he was quiet, if we except his addresses to Lord Dalhousie, when that nobleman passed through the country to the Neilgherries. Now he is surrounded by a vast herd of retainers, who, though miserably paid, remain faithful to him, because they excite him with the hope of a restoration to power. He is at least £400,000 in debt, although his income has averaged £140,000 annually, being made up of a pension of £35,000 and the fifth share of the net revenue, which is now double what it was in his early days. A surplus has accumulated of a million sterling, derived from the people and held by us in trust for their good, after paying the Rajah and his parasites their enormous share. The restoration of the Government of Mysore is nothing less than a shameless proposal to give the money of the people to pay for the debauchery and idleness of the Court, and to let an army of the lowest Asiatic oppressors, such as even Oude did not know (for there were landed gentry there) loose upon the country. By no compromise whatever, such as Sir C. Wood is said to contemplate, will this result be avoided. The people themselves dread it.—Friend of India.

LAND IN TRAVANCORE.—Travancore is certainly the most intelligent of our feudatories, thanks to the enlightened action of the Dewan Madava Rao, and of the heir apparent, Prince Rama Vurmah, both accomplished English scholars. Travancore would be still more forward in progress, and lose many of those purely idolatrous and social evils which hamper it, if Mr. Fisher, the Resident, would cling less to his policy of non-interference. Oude only too plainly shows that this policy is the sure precursor, as it is the provoker, of annexation. Mr. Maltby, his predecessor, more truly recognised his function as that of the guide and adviser of the well-meaning Rajah. The following proclamation is not only of interest to coffee planters, whom the Rajah is anxious to attract, but it forms an instructive commentary on the retrogressive land policy of the Indian authorities in England. Land is offered free of assessment for four years, and at twelve annas an acre annually thereafter.

BOMBAY.

FALL OF KHELAT.

The territories of his Highness the Khan of Khelat have long been in a state of semi-rebellion—a rebellion which has only been prevented from breaking out by the great personal influence which Major Henry Green, C.B., the Political Agent of the Khan of Khelat, has been able to bring to bear on the principal chiefs of the country. It unfortunately has chanced that the Khan has obstinately refused to listen to any advice which has been given to him, or to be induced to believe that the only method of governing his chiefs and people was by a liberal and conciliatory line of conduct towards them. He has foolishly persisted in believing himself to be under British protection, and that, therefore, no evil could befall him from any quarter, as a consequence of any act of which, in his caprice or tyranny, he might choose to be guilty.

In March last, during the absence of the political agent on other duty, the Khan assembled his principal chiefs for the ostensible purpose of making another attempt at conciliation; but, as he had frequently done this before, and no satisfactory arrangement had been come to, they appear to have placed very little faith in his protestations of good-will towards them; nevertheless, they assembled at his bidding, at Gundava, in the province of Cutchee; and, whether the event that followed was preconcerted or not, is yet a mystery.

On the evening of the 14th of March he was taking his usual evening ride, and, when nearly opposite the camp of his chiefs, he received three sword cuts, delivered by his cousin, Shere Dil Khan, who formed a portion of his escort, and who, after the perpetration of the above-named act, fled for protection into the camp of the assembled chiefs; the latter immediately mounted, and, accompanied by Shere Dil Khan, marched to the village of Gajen, the property of Sirdar Taj Mahomed, Zehree, the most powerful chief in Beloochistan, as well as the most bitter enemy of the Khan. No attempt appears to have been made on the part of the Khan's followers to secure the assassin, or to pursue the chiefs, who, having passed the night at Gajen, proceeded next morning unmolested to Dadur, and from thence addressed a respectful letter to the British authorities, stating that they had been driven to seek redress for their wrongs, by having recourse to violence, but hoped to be permitted to remain on good terms with the British Government.

They then marched via the Bolan Pass to Mustang, and are now before Khelat.

The only mischief committed at Dadur was the appropriation of the Khan's grain, and the levy of a tax of one rupee upon each Bumtiah. No Cafilas have been plundered, nor have any excesses been committed by the chiefs or their followers.

His highness the Khan has recovered from his wounds, and having collected as many men as he was able has marched towards his capital; unfortunately he has rendered himself so unpopular, that very few chiefs of any note have joined him. It is, however, to be hoped that even now matters may be amicably arranged, and that his highness seeing and understanding that the British Government will not make enemies of a whole nation, in order to support an individual, one who has been up to this time deaf to all good advice, will make such concessions to his chiefs as will insure their future loyalty. No advantage would accrue from a change of rulers. Shere Dil Khan being demi-idiotic and an opium eater—under the excitement of which drug it is believed that he made the attempt on the Khan's life.

The above circumstances naturally caused at the time a certain amount of excitement on the border; and a great number of the inhabitants of Cutchee have sought protection within its boundaries.

The mountain tribes are particularly quiet, and do not evince the slightest wish to disturb the British frontier; and the constant patrolling of the Sind Horse precludes all hope of success in the event of any attempt being made to disturb its present state of perfect tranquillity.—Our Paper (Kurrachee), April 24.

A correspondent of a Kurrachee paper says:—“On the 19th instant, Khelat fell into the hands of the insurgents, no resistance being made by the inhabitants to the entry therein of the rebels, who were considerate enough not to commit any violence on the Khelat inhabitants.

"On gaining possession of the mirt, or citadel, the rebels formally installed Shere Dil Khan on the throne, and handed over to him the contents of the treasury, which are reported to have amounted to nine lakhs of rupees.

"The Khan, who had started for Khelat, had reached Nurr, in the Moola Pass, when he found that his further advance was put a stop to, as, also, that his return to Cutohee was cut off. He will probably, therefore, proceed to Khozdar, that being the only route left open to him.

"Up to this time the rebellion has progressed steadily and rapidly; no blood has been shed, and the unanimous feeling of the people point to a change of 'rulers,' not to one of 'dynasty,' the household slaves of even the Khan having forsaken him!"

PRESENTATION OF MEDALS TO MEN OF H.M.'S 103RD REGT. OF FOOT ROYAL BOMBAY FUSILIERS.—A large crowd gathered on the 6th of May at Colaba parade ground to witness the ceremony of the presentation of medals for good conduct and long services to six men of the above corps. Pursuant to a garrison order, the native troops, comprising the garrison, attended for the purpose of witnessing the ceremony. The fusiliers, with the other two regiments, formed three sides of a square on which Brigadier Tapp, C.B., commanding the garrison, addressed the fusiliers as follows:—"Fusiliers,—I am deputed by his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge, to present you with medals for long and meritorious services, which I have much pleasure in doing so, and it is an honour conferred upon me to present them which I now hold in my hand." The Brigadier then alighted from his horse and pinned upon the breasts of the undermentioned men who were brought up in front. In doing this he said to them that it afforded him the greatest satisfaction to bestow upon them the honourable distinction which they had won during their long career in the profession of arms, and in which, he had no doubt but what many of the young soldiers of the 103rd Regt. now present would receive the same in future days. Hethen mounted his horse and directed the officers commanding the native regiments to interpret what he had said to their men, which was done. After this the Brigadier ordered that the men who received the medals should be presented with a salute, which was accordingly acceded to, and the bands played "Rule Britannia" at the same time. The Brigadier concluded with his hearty wish of luck and prosperity to those who had received the honours. The names of the men who received the medals from the brigadier are—Corporal James Copus, Lance-Corporal Francis Pratt, and Private John Hare; Serjeant William Murphy, Private Hugh Johnstone, and Private William Jordan being absent, the Brigadier deputed Major Trower to present them with the medals when an opportunity offered. After the conclusion of the ceremony, the regiments marched to their quarters.

RIOT IN MEYWAR.—There has been another disturbance in Meywar, in spite of the scattering of the Meenas, mentioned by us the other day. It seems that there is, in that part of India, a temple known as that of Chootoorbhooja-jee, which possesses great wealth as well as a long name. This wealth excited the cupidity of some dacoits, who attacked the temple. The Pindars of the temple, however, evinced the usual priestly objection to give up their money, defended themselves, and a fight took place, in which several lives were lost. We have not yet heard who had the better of it, but, judging from experience, we should say the priests. It is as difficult to take a bone from a snapping terrier as his "tithe and cummin" from a clerical gentleman, be he Papist, Protestant, or Pagan.—Englishman.

THE PRINCE OF WALES' FETE AT BOMBAY. Though nothing was left unaccomplished which skill and expense could have effected to enliven the occasion, the affair did not end without its harmony being sadly marred by the most dreadful accidents. Pure accidents they were, we are told, and the unfortunate victims themselves might have, to some extent, acted blameably; and yet, it forcibly strikes us that, had a little more caution been adopted while trifling with gunpowder in the midst of thousands, human beings would not have fallen unwilling sacrifices to the fete. A crowd, it is said, had gathered at a very unsafe distance from a cluster of rockets, when suddenly, a match striking upon them, they burst forth in the very midst of the crowd, doing sad havoc therein. One Parsee youth—a handsome young lad of about 18 or 19—we sincerely pity. A rocket, it is said, struck him just below the ribs, and made a clean way through him. He fell down on the spot, and was carried home cold and dead. Another Parsi, aged about 22, died in the same manner. But this was not all. Nearly twenty-two persons, old and young, have suffered horribly, not a few of them being dangerously mutilated. Another we saw with a wound nearly two inches deep, a little above the thigh. The wound was on the back, but no bone had been broken. The sufferers were almost all of them Parsis. Further information on the subject, we have had no time to collect. It was criminal negligence on the part of those concerned to allow thousands to stand literally at stone's throw from the fireworks. A Bombay crowd is seldom pugnacious, and had the police taken a little trouble to remove them from the dangerous place, this loss of life and limb would undoubtedly have been prevented. But yet, in justice to all, let us say that we do not know whether the police were under the direction of the Fete Committee or not. The fact is, that as yet we know nothing save that men have been killed and wounded through being allowed to stand too near the fireworks.—Rast Gofar, May 3.

MUTLAH LANDS.—The fortunate purchasers of lots on the Mutlah should not lose hold of their grants. The Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal has, we understand, promised to recommend a loan of £100,000 on the security of certain freehold lots, for the building the town, and Sir Charles Trevelyan offers the holders every facility. Mr. Schiller, and the most intelligent of Bengali mer-chants, Baboo Ramgopal Ghose, are likely soon to see their faith rewarded.

CEYLON.

CEYLON RAILWAY.—Our railway is quietly progressing; but already have we felt a first pull at our purse, sufficient to indicate what we must be prepared for; and more than requisite to scatter all ideas of a "surplus revenue," or funds, to the winds. The needful for Mr. Faviell must be duly forthcoming—and no one amongst us surely grudges it now; but still we suspect an economising spirit, in other matters, will become the order of the day—certainly very unpropitious for the offer of the mother country to ease us of the "surplus" so carefully hoarded by our Colonial Secretary. A large labour force is already engaged on the railway line, at different stations along the route; principally Tamils, of course, but still with a good sprinkling of Singhalese here and there, particularly where the line passes near their villages; and it is expected that no small amount of the earthwork will be performed through the instrumentality of the latter. As we mentioned before, the paddy fields and marshes on the first few miles from Colombo, prove one of the greatest obstacles to progress. Of many thousand cubic yards of earth thrown into these by the late company's officers, little or no trace remains at the present day, and experimental trials made by the contractor, in the same manner, have resulted, we believe, in little better success. However, we are glad to learn, that judging from the reports before him while in England, the latter had the foresight, in conjunction with the Government engineer, to order a large quantity of iron-screw piles so largely used for such purposes. These—some feet in diameter, and made in convenient lengths of nine feet each adapted for bolting together—will enable the "black spots" to be rapidly spanned. Of their adequacy to bear the necessary weight and strain, the most nervous amongst us need have no doubt, proved as they will be to bear five times more than any amount of burden they can possibly encounter here. Indeed, with girders fixed across and sleepers laid above, and a sufficient length of piling screwed into the soil (marshy as it may be), we are assured that no unsteadiness, not even a springiness, will be experienced, and it must be remembered that five hundred feet will be the utmost length of the rail laid on these, at any one spot. As may be imagined, such enormous masses of iron workmanship are very costly, much more so, indeed, than the cost of embankments generally; but the great time thus saved is an important item, which, we are glad to say, has been taken into consideration. No sooner will the part requiring such bridging near Colombo be finished—and we believe the piles are now ready (if not shipped) in England—than all will be smooth for laying on rails and locomotives, materially to further operations so far as carriage is concerned.—Colombo Observer.

ROYAL MARRIAGE.—No PEARL PRESENTS FROM CEYLON YET.—Some weeks ago we drew public attention here to the great desirableness of our joining the other subjects of the British Crown in presenting some memorial to the Princess of Wales, and though we have heard much approval of the suggestion then made to send her some present, manufactured of the pearls secured about the time of her wedding, we are sorry to say nothing has been done; and even the very cheap loyalty of an address, which our contemporary, the Examiner, proposed, is still, so far as we know, only a proposal. The want of interest in anything beyond our shores which rules among many here is painful, but we had hoped that the un-English apathy would have disappeared on this occasion. If any shared our hopes, let them share the consolation offered in the old saw:—"Blessed are they who expect not; for they shall not be disappointed." At the time we first broached the subject, a necklace of our pearls was the article thought of. We have since been assured by a correspondent, that rich and famed as our Ceylon pearl fishery may be, it is quite unable to produce any pearls large enough for this purpose. We are reminded that, consequently, a pair of pearl bracelets were the articles presented to the Princess Royal; and further that when the colonists wished to procure a necklace of pearls for Lady Horton, wife of our Governor of that name, on her departure from Ceylon, they were obliged to use pearls procured elsewhere, for the purpose. This is all very interesting to know; but it does not at all follow that we should not do our duty towards the Princess of Wales.

CHRISTIANITY IN THE EAST INDIES.—We have before us three publications—different, but kindred: one is the compilation of Statistical Tables of Indian Missions, by Dr. Mullens; the Ceylon Church Missionary Record for April is the second, and the third is the annual report of the Kandy Young Men's Christian Association. Dr. Mullens has let his tables tell their own story, and to those disposed to listen they tell it eloquently. From them we learn that now, in nearly 2,700 stations and outstations, 1,724 ministers and 1,776 catechists are occupied in endeavours to diffuse vital Christianity, and that nearly 50,000 communicants, comprising 1,542 churches, are surrounded by 213,812 nominal native Christians in India, Ceylon, and Burmah—who last year subscribed for religious purposes Rs. 2,18,000. There are over 2,000 schools where boys, and nearly 500 where girls, are educated; and 70,000 of the former, and 20,000 of the latter, are therein trained. During the last ten years the progress has been great. In every item there is an increase. The native churches (by which we are to understand not the places of worship, but the societies of Christian people) have increased five-fold; and the professing Christians in full church membership have multiplied threefold; and this progress is all the more satisfactory, and exhibits real head work, because the hangers-on—the halters between two opinions—have only just doubled. The expenditure last year was £294,300, of which £46,800 were subscribed on the spot. Of native contributors we are pleased to see that Ceylon Christians rank highest. Presuming the Church members to be the principal givers, the individual subscriptions of Bengal Christians averaged Rs. 1½ last year; of the Bombay, Rs. 2; of the Madras, Rs. 3½; of the North Western Provinces, Rs. 6; and of Ceylon, Rs. 10. From the C. M. S. Record we have some account of the progress here. Mr. Jones's report from Cotta is discouraging; but it is not so much so as a letter which we have received from "A Student" (and notice of which here must suffice), in which the continuance of cattle stealing and other misdemeanors in the neighbourhood of the mission station, is quoted as a proof of the failure of the mission! Mr. Jones had discovered some weak points in the Mission; had some unpleasant admissions to make, but as "pride comes before destruction, and a haughty spirit before a fall," we hope that the converse of that inspired saying will here prove true; and that brighter days are soon to dawn upon Cotta; and that the devoted members of the mission, with which it is connected, may feel their strength made perfect in the weakness which they confess to experience. We have much pleasure in again referring to the Kandy Young Men's Society, which we are glad to see from the report now before us is flourishing. Started with less noise and flourish than the Colombo Institution, it has outlived it, and we trust may long thrive. The reason of its success lies in the energy of its members who have kept themselves together, and not depended on European assistance.—Colombo Observer.

AN IMPORTANT CASE.—We published in our last issue a brief report of a very important case tried at Galle last Monday, in the District Court. It bears so directly on the trade and commerce of the Island—and affects the security of business transactions so completely, that we make no excuse for drawing further attention to it. Everybody who knows anything of the mercantile affairs of Ceylon, knows that promissory notes occupy a place of no small importance. When purchases are made by our native traders, payment is almost invariably made by one of these documents, payable after a term of from two to four months, and any course of action which brings these notes into disrepute must be looked upon as something very serious. One of our banking institutions brought an action against one Assena Lebbe Meera Lebbe, for the recovery of £350, the amount of a promissory note put into their hands for collection by one of their customers in Galle. Between the bank and this customer there was some dispute, so that when the bill matured he desired the maker of the note not to pay the bank the money. The bank, being the holder of the bill, insisted upon payment; upon, we suppose, the very natural plea that a payment made to anyone else did not remove the liability of the maker, and—as it came out in evidence—promised to put the amount to the credit of the disputed account, which appears to be the subject of another action; so that, at the very worst, the person to whom the note was payable would have merely incurred the disadvantage of not "fingering" the coin. An able defence appears to have been set up, which, however, did not touch the law by which a non-professional man would have supposed the case should have been tried; but judgment was given in favour of the defendant. Very short is this judgment. It occupies one line in our report; it is unaccompanied by any of the reasons which induced the Judge to give it; and it must rather have astonished those concerned. We trust that the institution against which the judgment was given will appeal, and that the law will triumph in the Supreme Court in Colombo, or else the makers of promissory notes will have an open door for rascality set before them; they will have the unfortunate holders of their notes at their mercy; and the negotiability of promissory notes—the greatest facility which our merchants have in their dealings with the natives—will be at an end. Our readers will see the importance of the case and the propriety of making allusion to it; and we trust that, if our idea of the case be correct, it may be our pleasing duty to record that the Supreme Court has reversed the decision of the District Judge at Galle.—Colombo Observer.

SALE OF CROWN LANDS IN THE BADULLA DISTRICT.—Badulla and Ouwah has now become a very important planting district; it comprises clusters of estates at distances of twenty to fifty miles apart. Coffee cultivation was first commenced in this place in 1840; and notwithstanding the difficulties the planters had to encounter, they have at length succeeded in making it a highly-favoured locality. Instead of being as formerly a despised and dreaded quarter, the recent sales of lands in Happutella and elsewhere will show that Badulla is now the centre of attraction—in fact "the observed of all observers." Its future prospects we think depend entirely on the Government; for without good roads this district, which has been sometimes called the "fairest in this fair isle" will soon become bleak and dreary. As will be observed from the communications elsewhere, the difficulties in the path of the planters here, are many, and we think none should more earnestly desire the completion of our railway than the Badulla coffee-planters, so that the attention of Government, but particularly that of bandy-owners—may be turned more exclusively to their wants. For the last six months about 5,600 acres were sold at Badulla, which yielded a revenue of £19,000, or at the average rate of £3.10s. an acre. The following is an abstract statement of crown lands sold recently in this district. It will be seen that some building allotments were sold as high as £20 the acre, and a tract of forest land for £6 an acre:—
